Preface

This volume cumulates and replaces the 1995 edition of Volume 20 of the Official Code of Georgia Annotated, as supplemented by the 2009 Cumulative Supplement. The 1995 Volume 20 and its 2009 Supplement may be recycled or, if so desired, retained for historical purposes. As official and traditional citations become available, substitutions for the LexisNexis® citations will be made.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Intent of evidence rules. — Restrictive rules of evidence are intended to prevent verdicts from being based on surmise, and not to exclude facts which, with others, tend to establish the charge. Allen v. State, 71 Ga. App. 517, 31 S.E.2d 107 (1944).

24-1-1. Definitions.

As used in this title, the term:

- (1) “Competent evidence” means evidence which is admissible.
- (2) “Cumulative evidence” means evidence which is additional to other evidence already obtained.
- (3) “Direct evidence” means evidence which immediately points to the question at issue.
- (4) “Indirect evidence” or “circumstantial evidence” means evidence which only tends to establish the issue by proof of various facts, sustaining by their consistency the hypothesis claimed.
- (5) “Preponderance of evidence” means that superior weight of evidence upon the issues involved, which, while not enough to free the mind wholly from a reasonable doubt, is yet sufficient to incline a reasonable and impartial mind to one side of the issue rather than to the other.
- (6) “Presumptive evidence” means evidence which consists of inferences drawn by human experience from the connection of cause and effect and from observations of human conduct.
- (7) “Sufficient evidence” means evidence which is satisfactory for the purpose. (Orig. Code 1863, § 3671; Code 1868, § 3695; Code 1873, § 3748; Code 1882, § 3748; Civil Code 1895, §§ 5143, 5145; Penal Code 1895, § 983; Civil Code 1910, §§ 5729, 5731; Penal Code 1910, § 1009; Code 1933, §§ 38-102, 38-106.)

General Consideration

Evidence is defined as the means by which any fact is put in issue, established, or disproved. Hotchkiss v. Newton, 10 Ga. 560 (1851).

Prima facie evidence is such evidence as in judgment of law is sufficient, and if not rebutted remains sufficient. Georgia R.R. & Banking Co. v. Smith, 83 Ga. 626, 10 S.E. 235 (1889).

When types of evidence must be defined in charge. — In the absence of any request that the judge do so, the judge did not err in failing to read to the jury the part of the statute defining direct, circumstantial, and presumptive evidence. Starnes v. State, 45 Ga. App. 238, 164 S.E. 89 (1932).

When there was both direct and circumstantial evidence in a rape case, it was proper for the court to define to the jury each class of evidence and to explain the difference between the evidence. Shivers v. State, 181 Ga. 557, 183 S.E. 489 (1935).

Substantial compliance. — When the charge given was substantially the statutory definition, there was no error in failing to give the precise language. Davis v. Wright, 194 Ga. 1, 21 S.E.2d 88 (1942); Strickland v. Padgett, 197 Ga. 589, 30 S.E.2d 167 (1944).

When the statute is charged substantially in the language of the Code, this is sufficient, providing no greater burden is put upon the movant than that provided by law. Andrews Taxi & U-Drive It Co. v. McEver, 101 Ga. App. 383, 114 S.E.2d 145 (1960).

Use of the word "testimony" instead of "evidence" in charge does not unduly restrict the jury to a consideration of the oral evidence only and exclude from the consideration of the jury a diagram and several photographs of the scene of the occurrence since the judge later gave an instruction on the use of this evidence. Southern Ry. v. Wilcox, 59 Ga. App. 785, 2 S.E.2d 225 (1939).

Primary evidence. — When the existence of a fact is the question at issue and not the contents of a writing, then oral and written evidence of the fact may both be primary evidence. Wells v. State, 151 Ga. App. 416, 260 S.E.2d 374 (1979), overruled on other grounds, Copeland v. State, 160 Ga. App. 786, 287 S.E.2d 120 (1982).

Cited in Graves v. State, 63 Ga. 740 (1879); Jenkins v. Jenkins, 83 Ga. 283, 9 S.E. 541, 20 Am. St. R. 316 (1889); Travelers Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 12 S.E. 18 (1890); Quiggle v. Vining, 125 Ga. 98, 54 S.E. 74 (1906); Hill v. Chattanooga Ry. & Light Co., 21 Ga. App. 104, 93 S.E. 1027 (1917); Roberts v. Allen, 31 Ga. App. 660, 122 S.E. 86 (1924); *Bonita Theater v. App. 309, 593 S.E.2d 673 (2004); Thompson v. State, 283 Ga. 581, 662 S.E.2d 124 (2008).

Competent Evidence

Evidence of doubtful competency or relevancy should be admitted and the weight of the evidence left to the jury. Crass v. State, 150 Ga. App. 374, 257 S.E.2d 909 (1979).

Cumulative Evidence

For a definition of cumulative evidence, see Dale v. State, 88 Ga. 552, 15 S.E. 287 (1892).

Evidence of same kind to same point. — Cumulative evidence is commonly defined as additional evidence of the same kind to

True test as to whether evidence is cumulative depends not only on whether the evidence tends to establish the same fact, but it may depend on whether the new evidence is of the same or different grade. Johnson v. State, 196 Ga. 806, 27 S.E.2d 749 (1943); Perry v. Hammock, 75 Ga. App. 171, 42 S.E.2d 651 (1947).

What constitutes noncumulative evidence. — Newly discovered evidence which either relates to a particular material issue concerning which no witness has previously testified, or which is of a higher and different grade from that previously had on the same material point, will ordinarily be taken outside the definition of cumulative evidence. Johnson v. State, 196 Ga. 806, 27 S.E.2d 749 (1943).

Evidence is not merely cumulative, though it may have some bearing upon the main issue in controversy, if it relates to new, distinct, and material facts about which no witness testified at the trial. Perry v. Hammock, 75 Ga. App. 171, 42 S.E.2d 651 (1947).

Redundant testimony. — In a condemnation proceeding, testimony that was redundant of actual ordinances, zoning regulations, and of a land use plan already testified to by another was properly excluded. Hall County v. Merritt, 233 Ga. App. 526, 504 S.E.2d 754 (1998).

Evidence of admitted prior conviction. — Evidence of a defendant's prior conviction for conspiracy to distribute cocaine is admissible as cumulative evidence in a subsequent prosecution for trafficking in cocaine when the defendant admits at the time of defendant's arrest defendant's previous conviction. Anthony v. State, 184 Ga. App. 876, 363 S.E.2d 171 (1987).

Failure to turn over evidence upheld when cumulative. — Failure of trial court to order original tape recordings of conversations in which defendant took part to be turned over to defendant's expert for analysis was upheld because the tapes were but one part of the state's evidence and thus were merely cumulative evidence. Carpenter v. State, 252 Ga. 79, 310 S.E.2d 912 (1984).

Direct Evidence

For a definition of direct evidence, see Moughon v. State, 57 Ga. 102 (1876); Graves v. State, 63 Ga. 740 (1879); Stubbs v. State, 265 Ga. 883, 463 S.E.2d 686 (1995).

Instructions to jury. — Court did not err in charging the jury that "direct evidence is that which immediately points to the question at issue," although the case depended entirely upon circumstantial evidence since the charge given is part of the statute and was given in connection with the definition of circumstantial evidence. Faulkner v. State, 43 Ga. App. 763, 160 S.E. 117 (1931).

Identification. — Testimony of six witnesses who were present at the scene of the robbery and who positively identified defendant as the perpetrator of the crime was direct, being a distinct "perception of the senses" and not a "mere inference or conclusion of the mind." Salisbury v. State, 223 Ga. 414, 156 S.E.2d 48 (1967).

Testimony of the victim as to the fact of the armed robbery and kidnapping and the identification of the defendant as one of the two persons who committed such crimes was direct evidence. Ward v. State, 233 Ga. 251, 210 S.E.2d 772 (1974).

Evidence based on a witness's prior knowledge with regard to identification of defendant and based on the perception of the witness's senses falls within the broad scope of direct evidence. Cowans v. State, 145 Ga. App. 693, 244 S.E.2d 624 (1978).

Causation. — Trial court erred in granting summary judgment for the Georgia Department of Transportation (DOT) in a wrongful death action as there was a question of fact as to causation because, although the parents' evidence that there was a gouge in the shoulder the day after the collision was not direct evidence to contradict the DOT's evidence that there was not a gouge on the day of the collision, the parents' experts agreed that the severe drop-off the driver encountered when the driver left the east-side roadway caused the driver to lose control of the car. Karwacki v. Ga. DOT, 276 Ga. App. 628, 624 S.E.2d 171 (2005).

Witness's state of mind. — Supreme Court recognizes the rule that direct and positive testimony, as distinguished from testimony circumstantial, opinionative, or actually negative in character, which is given by an unimpeached witness as to the existence of a fact apparently within one's own knowledge, which is not in itself incredible, impossible, or inherently improbable, and which is not contradicted directly or by proof of facts or circumstances that could be taken as incompatible with such testimony, cannot be arbitrarily rejected by a jury or other trier of facts upon the mere surmise that it perhaps might not be in accord with the truth. Although the issue as to contractual capacity is to be determined by the condition of the grantor's mind at the time the deed was executed, the Supreme Court also fully recognizes the rule that, in determining such an issue, it is permissible to receive and consider evidence as to the state of the grantor's mind for a reasonable period both before and after the transaction under investigation; nor should it be said that witnesses might not testify to such a previous state of mind as would authorize a finding against contractual capacity at the time the deed was executed, despite evidence of witnesses who were present at the time and testified that the grantor did have such capacity. The two rules as stated are entirely consistent, and neither of them should be overlooked; the former referring to the ultimate fact, the latter to facts that are evidentiary only. Thomas v. Lockwood, 198 Ga. 437, 31 S.E.2d 791 (1944); Pantone v. Pantone, 206 Ga. 305, 57 S.E.2d 77 (1950).

An admission of participation in a shooting which resulted in the death of another person is to be taken as direct evidence. Bowen v. State, 181 Ga. 427, 182 S.E. 510 (1935).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for malice murder since multiple witnesses testified about defendant's admissions of defendant's participation in the fatal shooting of the victim, which was direct evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-1-1(3), and the credibility of the witnesses was a jury matter. Wilson v. State, 277 Ga. 114, 587 S.E.2d 9 (2003).

Testimony describing admissions of guilt following a crime is direct evidence of guilt. Brown v. State, 251 Ga. 598, 308 S.E.2d 182 (1983).

Direct evidence was sufficient. — Because the eyewitness testimony showed that the defendant pushed, pulled, and then carried the victim out of a restaurant as the victim yelled for a coworker to call the police, and which was direct, not circumstantial, evidence that the victim did not go with the defendant willingly, sufficient evidence supported the defendant's kidnapping conviction. Holden v. State, 287 Ga. App. 472, 651 S.E.2d 552 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 153 (Ga. 2008).

Indirect or Circumstantial Evidence

1. Indirect Evidence

For definitions of indirect evidence, see Moughon v. State, 57 Ga. 102 (1876); Graves v. State, 63 Ga. 740 (1879).

2. Circumstantial Evidence

For definitions of circumstantial evidence, see Warren v. State, 153 Ga. 354, 112 S.E. 283 (1922); Greer v. State, 159 Ga. 85, 125 S.E. 52 (1924); Stubbs v. State, 265 Ga. 883, 463 S.E.2d 686 (1995).

Yields to contrary direct evidence. — When a party relies solely on circumstantial evidence to establish the party's cause, such circumstantial evidence must yield as a matter of law to direct, positive, and unimpeached testimony to the contrary. Whitley Constr. Co. v. O'Dell, 94 Ga. App. 426, 94 S.E.2d 784 (1956).

Testimony held both as direct and circumstantial evidence on related issues. — Dental technician's testimony that a partial dental impression was encased in an alginate material, as opposed to another type of material, when the technician received the impression from a dental office was direct evidence of the fact that alginate was placed on a patient's partial; however, it was circumstantial evidence of the type of impression material that the patient swallowed in the dental office when the patient was alone with a dental technician. Ricketts v. Advanced Dental Care, LLC, 285 Ga. App. 480, 646 S.E.2d 705 (2007).

Before circumstantial evidence can have any probative value to rebut or contradict direct and positive testimony of an unimpeached witness of the alleged facts in question, such evidence must point at least more strongly to a conclusion opposite to the direct testimony; it is not sufficient that such circumstantial evidence points equally one way or the other. Griffin v. Blackshear Bank, 66 Ga. App. 821, 19 S.E.2d 325 (1942);

McCarty v. National Life & Accident Ins. Co., 107 Ga. App. 178, 129 S.E.2d 408 (1962).

Must support conclusion and render other conclusions less probable. — In a civil action when the party upon whom the burden of an issue rests seeks to carry it, not by direct proof, but by inferences, the party has not, in this reasonable sense, submitted any evidence for a jury's decision, until the circumstances the party places in proof tend in some proximate degree to establish the conclusion the party claims; and for this, the facts shown must not only reasonably support that conclusion, but also render less probable all inconsistent conclusions. Bentley v. Southern Ry., 52 Ga. App. 188, 182 S.E. 815 (1935); Multivision N.W., Inc. v. Jerrold Elecs. Corp., 356 F. Supp. 207 (N.D. Ga. 1972).

In a civil action based upon circumstantial evidence it is required that the circumstances relied upon not only be consistent with the conclusion sought to be established, but also inconsistent with every other reasonable hypothesis. In civil cases this consistency with the one and inconsistency with the other is required to be established only by a mere preponderance. Multivision N.W., Inc. v. Jerrold Elecs. Corp., 356 F. Supp. 207 (N.D. Ga. 1972).

Directed verdict properly denied. — In a medical malpractice action, the issue of reliance by a patient on a hospital to provide needed services and personnel was subject to proof by circumstantial evidence; thus, denial of a directed verdict in favor of the hospital was not error. Doctors Hosp. v. Bonner, 195 Ga. App. 152, 392 S.E.2d 897 (1990).

Circumstantial evidence which may be inconsistent with direct, positive testimony is sufficient to get the case to jury. Allen Kane's Major Dodge, Inc. v. Barnes, 243 Ga. 776, 257 S.E.2d 186, aff'd, 151 Ga. App. 835, 262 S.E.2d 643 (1979).

Circumstantial evidence conflicting with direct evidence. — Fact cannot be established by circumstantial evidence which is perfectly consistent with direct, uncontradicted, reasonable, and unimpeached testimony that a fact does not exist. Slaton v. Atlanta Gas Light Co., 62 Ga. App. 42, 7 S.E.2d 769 (1940); Carmichael v. Silvers, 90 Ga. App. 804, 84 S.E.2d 668 (1954).

Inconclusive inferences. — In cases of circumstantial evidence, a mere inconclusive inference is not to be regarded as any evidence so as to require the submission of its sufficiency to the jury. Allen Kane's Major Dodge, Inc. v. Barnes, 243 Ga. 776, 257 S.E.2d 186, aff'd, 151 Ga. App. 835, 262 S.E.2d 643 (1979).

Use in showing state of mind. — State of mind of either a perpetrator or a victim, including whether a victim has been placed under reasonable apprehension of injury or fear from an event, when in issue may be proved by indirect or circumstantial evidence. Williams v. State, 208 Ga. App. 12, 430 S.E.2d 157 (1993).

Use in proving intent. — Intent with which an act is committed is not often capable of direct proof; it has always been held to be a question for the jury to be drawn from the circumstances of the transaction under investigation. Davis v. State, 53 Ga. App. 325, 185 S.E. 400 (1936).

Use in showing lack of due diligence. — Lack of due diligence is susceptible to proof by circumstantial evidence. Young v. Kitchens, 228 Ga. App. 870, 492 S.E.2d 898 (1997).

Presence of cocaine metabolites in body fluid is direct evidence only of the fact that cocaine was introduced into the body producing the fluid, and is not direct evidence that the person possessed the cocaine. Rather, the presence of cocaine metabolites in body fluid is only circumstantial or indirect evidence of possession. Green v. State, 260 Ga. 625, 398 S.E.2d 360 (1990), cert. denied, 500 U.S. 935, 111 S. Ct. 2059, 114 L. Ed. 2d 464 (1991).

Driver need not be seen driving to support DUI conviction. — It is not necessary for a conviction of driving under the influence, much less for probable cause, that the driver actually be seen behind the wheel driving the car while under the influence. Such facts may be shown by circumstantial evidence. Hall v. State, 200 Ga. App. 585, 409 S.E.2d 221, cert. denied, 200 Ga. App. 896, 409 S.E.2d 221 (1991).

"On call" status as circumstantial evidence in collision case. — Mere fact that an employee is “on call” does not automatically give rise to employer liability in a vehicular collision case. Rather, an employee’s “on call” status gives rise to a question of fact as to whether the employee was acting within the scope of employment at the time of the accident. Therefore, “on call” status, at best, is circumstantial evidence that an employee was acting in the scope of the employee’s employment. In a suit based on a vehicular collision involving an “on call” employee, summary judgment was proper under the burden shifting framework of Allen Kane’s Major Dodge, 243 Ga. 776 (1979) because the plaintiff did not provide any direct evidence, as defined in O.C.G.A. § 24-1-1(3), showing that the employee had been called into work and was acting pursuant to the employee’s employment duties at the time of the accident. Hicks v. Heard, 692 S.E.2d 360, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 284 (2010).

Probative value. — Expert testimony that salmonella could develop in the home due to improper handling and storage by the consumer, rather than improper cooking or storage by the consumer, could have been the cause of the salmonella, was admissible. The testimony was clearly probative, tending to establish by circumstantial evidence that defendants (rather than the consumer) were responsible for the salmonella in the turkey. Carsten v. Wilkes Supermarket of Gwinnett County, Inc., 181 Ga. App. 834, 353 S.E.2d 922 (1987).

Basis for new trial. — When new evidence, though the evidence be of the same or even inferior grade, tends not merely to strengthen the correctness of the contention of the particular material issue previously sought to be established, but such new proved fact or circumstance, if believed, would in and of itself establish or disprove the controlling point in controversy, or would establish or disprove it by supplying a link or gap missing in the previous testimony, it will afford a basis for the new trial. Johnson v. State, 196 Ga. 806, 27 S.E.2d 749 (1943).

When circumstantial evidence must be included in instructions. — It was no error to fail to define circumstantial evidence when the evidence was not wholly circumstantial. Strickland v. State, 167 Ga. 452, 145 S.E. 879 (1928). See also Phillips v. State, 39 Ga. App. 812, 148 S.E. 631 (1929).

It is only when a case is wholly dependent on the law of circumstantial evidence that the trial judge is required to give in charge to the jury the law of circumstantial evidence. Wiggins v. State, 74 Ga. App. 231, 39 S.E.2d 450 (1946).

When circumstantial evidence alone is not relied upon, it is not error to fail to charge, without request, the principles of circumstantial evidence. King v. State, 86 Ga. App. 786, 72 S.E.2d 502 (1952); Jones v. State, 88 Ga. App. 330, 76 S.E.2d 810 (1953).

When charge required. — In a prosecution for driving under the influence of alcohol, defendant was entitled to defendant’s requested instruction on circumstantial evidence based on a reasonable hypothesis from defendant’s use of Benadryl that defendant was not guilty of the crime charged. Cato v. State, 212 Ga. App. 417, 441 S.E.2d 900 (1994).

Instructions against speculation. — When the facts necessary to make out the plaintiff’s case are dependent on circumstantial evidence, it is not error to charge the jury that the jury is not permitted to speculate or guess as to the cause of the injury. Bentley v. Southern Ry., 52 Ga. App. 188, 182 S.E. 815 (1935).

Instructions held sufficient. — When the court in the charge of the jury defined direct and circumstantial evidence in the terms of the statute, and then charged when circumstantial evidence was sufficient to convict when a conviction is sought on circumstantial evidence, an omission to recharge the law of circumstantial evidence in immediate connection with the law of reasonable doubt did not amount to an expression of opinion that direct evidence had been introduced, and did not exclude from the consideration of the jury the law that requires the evidence to be sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused before a conviction would be authorized in a case depending upon circumstantial evidence only. Lucas v. State, 48 Ga. App. 42, 171 S.E. 850 (1933).

Court having correctly defined circumstantial evidence and instructed the jury on the degree of proof necessary to sustain a conviction on circumstantial evidence, it was not error to omit further instructions elaborating upon circumstantial evidence or attempting an explanation of its meaning.

Indirect or Circumstantial Evidence (Cont'd)

Flynn v. State, 77 Ga. App. 791, 50 S.E.2d 91 (1948).

Charge to the jury that, "insofar as the state relies in this case for a conviction on circumstantial evidence alone, the proven facts must not only be consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but must be inconsistent with the theory of innocence," is substantially correct, and sufficient to withstand a motion for a new trial, although it would be the better practice to charge the law with reference to circumstantial evidence in the terms of the statute. Bagley v. State, 212 Ga. 206, 91 S.E.2d 506 (1956).

How preponderance determined. — Preponderance is to be determined from all evidence regardless of by which party the evidence is introduced. Anderson v. Savannah Press Publishing Co., 100 Ga. 454, 28 S.E. 216 (1897).

Standard in civil cases. — Establishment of facts in civil cases to a moral and reasonable certainty is not required, but their establishment by a preponderance of the evidence is sufficient. Masonic Relief Ass'n v. Hicks, 47 Ga. App. 499, 171 S.E. 215 (1933).

Standard in criminal cases. — Relevant question in a criminal prosecution is whether, after viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the prosecution, any rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. Rachel v. State, 247 Ga. 130, 274 S.E.2d 475 (1981).

Preponderance required on each issue. — It is correct in a jury instruction to define what is meant by preponderance of evidence in the language of the statute and to add, "and where there is more than one issue in the case, this rule or definition of preponderance of the evidence relates to each and all of the issues of fact to be determined by you," since, regardless of when the burden of proof lies, it is correct to instruct the jury that the jury shall find according to the preponderance of evidence upon any issue submitted. Patillo v. Thompson, 106 Ga. App. 808, 128 S.E.2d 656 (1962).

"Preponderance" when defendant offers no evidence. — When the defendant offers no evidence at all, an instruction that a preponderance of evidence is evidence "stronger than the evidence of the defendant" almost guarantees that any evidence offered by the plaintiff, as against zero evidence, must be considered a preponderance. Such charge is error. Superior Paving, Inc. v. Citadel Cement Corp., 145 Ga. App. 6, 243 S.E.2d 287 (1978).

"Preponderance" does not mean "strong predominance." — Charge that a preponderance of the evidence could be determined by asking "which way does it strongly predominate," was erroneous as the degree of proof required by such instructions was greater than that provided by the statute. Garrison Motor Co. v. Parrish, 52 Ga. App. 766, 184 S.E. 766 (1936).

"Preponderance" does not mean "stronger evidence." — Trial court erred in characterizing preponderant evidence as "stronger." Danforth v. Danforth, 156 Ga. App. 236, 274 S.E.2d 628 (1980).

Preponderance of circumstantial evidence. — If circumstantial evidence tends to reasonably establish plaintiff's theory of the case, and preponderates to that theory rather than to any other reasonable hypothesis, it is error to enter a nonsuit. Callaway v. Hall, 58 Ga. App. 819, 199 S.E. 899 (1938); Getzinger v. Lariscy, 77 Ga. App. 768, 49 S.E.2d 907 (1948).

Conflicting circumstantial evidence. — When circumstantial evidence as seen by the court is "equal," or when it is "in conflict," the court cannot decide where the preponderance lies or exclude hypotheses that seem to it to be the less reasonable; and it is error to direct a verdict. McCarty v. National Life & Accident Ins. Co., 107 Ga. App. 178, 129 S.E.2d 408 (1962).

Reasonable and impartial mind. — In instruction to jury by judge, the use of the words "your minds," omitting any references to "a reasonable and impartial mind," did not lead the jury to believe that they might determine the preponderance of the evidence solely on the basis of what the jury might think of the evidence and not on what "a reasonable and impartial mind" might think of it. This charge affords no ground for a new trial in the absence of a proper, timely written request for a more specific instruction on the subject. Southern Ry. v. Wilcox, 59 Ga. App. 785, 2 S.E.2d 225 (1939).

Deposition testimony and affidavit of an expert were sufficient to state that a doctor's professional negligence was the cause of a patient's injury and death within a "reasonable medical probability or reasonable medical certainty," although the expert only gave the patient a 50-50 chance of leaving the hospital in good condition. The doctor's motion for summary judgment was properly denied. Naik v. Booker, No. A09A2269, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 349 (Mar. 30, 2010).

Charge sufficiently defined preponderance. Scott v. Brown, 127 Ga. 88, 56 S.E. 130 (1906); Studstill v. Bergsteiner, 25 Ga. App. 405, 103 S.E. 691 (1920).

Instructions on equally balanced evidence. — Instruction that "where, in the opinion of the jury, the evidence is equally balanced on each side, where the jury believes the witnesses of each side equally credible, where the jury believes the evidence is as strong on one side as it is on the other, then a preponderance of the testimony would not be carried, and in such case, it is the duty of the jury to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in this case," was not tantamount, under the facts, to the direction of a verdict for the plaintiff, and constituted insufficient grounds for a new trial. Jones v. Knightstown Body Co., 52 Ga. App. 667, 184 S.E. 427 (1936).

No need to include § 24-4-1 in charge. — In the absence of a written request to do so, it was not error for the court, after charging former Code 1933, §§ 38-102 and 38-106 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-1-1), to fail to give in charge former Code 1933, § 38-107 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4), which stated how the preponderance of the evidence may be determined, and what facts the jury may consider in deciding where the preponderance of the evidence lies. Rome Ry. & Light Co. v. King, 33 Ga. App. 383, 126 S.E. 294 (1925); Clark v. State, 167 Ga. 341, 145 S.E. 647 (1928); Sims v. Sims, 167 Ga. 537, 146 S.E. 170 (1928).

Presumptive Evidence

Free determination by jury of fact questions. — Jury should be left free to determine under proper instructions as to the law, all questions and presumptions of fact.

Templeton v. Kennesaw Life & Accident Ins. Co., 216 Ga. 770, 119 S.E.2d 549 (1961).

Jury as the trier of facts could have drawn inferences from human experience in connection with cause and effect and applied jury's own opinion from the fact evidence submitted. Garner v. Driver, 155 Ga. App. 322, 270 S.E.2d 863 (1980).

Presumptive evidence is for jury determination for a jury is required to consider that evidence presumptive in the light of their experience in the affairs of life. Mattison v. Travelers Indem. Co., 157 Ga. App. 372, 277 S.E.2d 746 (1981).

Jury is entitled to consider as proven certain matters, even without any testimony being introduced. Feldschneider v. State, 127 Ga. App. 745, 195 S.E.2d 184 (1972).

Permissive inference almost identical to presumption of fact. — No reversible error occurred when a trial court charged the jury in language of permissive inference rather than presumption of fact. A thin line exists at best between a permissible inference of fact and a rebuttable presumption of fact. Pouncey v. Adams, 206 Ga. App. 126, 424 S.E.2d 376 (1992).

Jurors are entitled to use jurors own common sense as intelligent human beings on many questions. Feldschneider v. State, 127 Ga. App. 745, 195 S.E.2d 184 (1972).

Nature of property. — Jury may consider the nature of the property involved in an insurance claim and any other facts and circumstances within their knowledge in arriving at a verdict providing there is evidence of sufficient facts from which the jury may draw from the jury's own experience in reaching a conclusion. Sentry Ins. v. Henderson, 138 Ga. App. 495, 226 S.E.2d 759 (1976).

Value of property. — Value of merchandise is generally matter of opinion, but the jury may consider such opinion testimony, make reasonable deductions, and exercise their own knowledge and ideas. Jones v. State, 139 Ga. App. 366, 228 S.E.2d 387 (1976).

Value is peculiarly for determination of the jury, but there must be evidence upon which the jury may legitimately exercise the jury's own knowledge and ideas. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank v. Williams, 147 Ga. App. 205, 249 S.E.2d 289 (1978).

Question of value is peculiarly for the determination of the factfinder when there is any data in the evidence from which the factfinder may legitimately exercise the factfinder's own knowledge and ideas. Such is presumptive evidence, which consists of inferences drawn by human experience from the connection of cause and effect and observations of human conduct. Adamson Co. v. Owens-Illinois Dev. Corp., 168 Ga. App. 654, 309 S.E.2d 913 (1983).

Use of term "threaten." — In suit by a wife against her husband for divorce for alleged cruel treatment, including physical violence, the testimony of the wife that "he would threaten and choke me," was not, in view of other testimony given by her in the same connection, subject to objection upon the ground that the word "threaten" was a conclusion of the witness. West v. West, 199 Ga. 378, 34 S.E.2d 545 (1945).

Sufficient Evidence

What constitutes sufficient evidence. — Sufficient evidence is such as is satisfactory to the purpose — satisfaction in its legal sense — such as satisfies the law as to the existence of a given fact. Mallery v. Young, 94 Ga. 804, 22 S.E. 142 (1894).

If the evidence adduced is not more than a "scintilla," if it is dependent entirely on guess or speculation, the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict, and it is not error so to charge. Bentley v. Southern Ry., 52 Ga. App. 188, 182 S.E. 815 (1935).

Despite the defendant's contention on appeal that the state's evidence was insufficient, specifically, regarding the presence of a gun, given that the state presented sufficient evidence to support the jury's finding of a reasonable apprehension on the part of the victim that an offensive weapon was being used in an armed robbery when coupled with the direct evidence of the defendant's admission to possessing a gun at the time of the robbery, the defendant's armed robbery conviction was upheld; thus, the defendant was not entitled to a directed verdict of acquittal. Fluellen v. State, 284 Ga. App. 584, 644 S.E.2d 486 (2007).

Comparative weight of circumstantial and direct evidence on any given issue is a question for the jury. Rowe v. State, 68 Ga. App. 161, 22 S.E.2d 210 (1942).

24-1-2. Object of rules of evidence.

The object of all legal investigation is the discovery of truth. The rules of evidence are framed with a view to this prominent end, seeking always for pure sources and the highest evidence. (Orig. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

O.C.G.A. § 24-1-2 capsulizes the raison d’être for the rules which govern trials. It is not limited by its terms to civil trials. Holcomb v. State, 198 Ga. App. 547, 402 S.E.2d 520, cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 898, 402 S.E.2d 520 (1991).

Balancing of competing rights. — Trial court must weigh in balance the right of the state as society’s representative to obtain the truth in the purest and simplest form against the right of a defendant to a trial as free as possible from improper influences. Montgomery v. State, 156 Ga. App. 448, 275 S.E.2d 72 (1980).

Basic axiom of justice set forth in this statute obtains in all cases except where “it would be more unjust and productive of more evil to hear the truth than to forbear the investigation.” Hollins v. State, 133 Ga. App. 183, 210 S.E.2d 354 (1974).

Courts allowed broad discretion. — Pursuant to the liberal rule granting the trial courts very broad discretion in permitting parties to offer additional evidence at any stage of the trial, and because leniency in this area was very unlikely to constitute an abuse of the court’s discretion, the defendant failed to show that the trial court abused the court’s discretion in permitting the state to reopen the evidence after the state had presented the state’s case-in-chief and rested. Taylor v. State, 282 Ga. 502, 651 S.E.2d 715 (2007).

Public trial tends to ensure the truth by forcing those who testify to relate their memories without embellishment for fear that there may be those in attendance who could call the testimony into question if not truthful. As one party to the trial, the state is entitled to require common witnesses, both those charged and observers of the charged acts, to present their version of the occurrences in the presence of each other, thereby minimizing witness bias or the possibility of each defendant singly shifting blame to other absent defendants without opportunity of searching inquiry into the truth. Montgomery v. State, 156 Ga. App. 448, 275 S.E.2d 72 (1980).

Narrow construction of the attorney-client privilege, inasmuch as the exercise of the privilege results in the exclusion of evidence, comports with the view that the ascertainment of as many facts as possible leads to the truth, the discovery of which is “the object of all legal investigation.” Tenet Healthcare Corp. v. Louisiana Forum Corp., 273 Ga. 206, 538 S.E.2d 441 (2000).

Impeachment evidence. — Trial court’s refusal to permit the introduction of a complaint in another proceeding to impeach a party was at odds with the principle in O.C.G.A. § 24-1-2 that the object of all legal investigation is the discovery of the truth, since it authorized the exclusion of relevant impeaching evidence and allowed the credibility of a crucial witness to go unchallenged; clearly, the subordination of the discovery of the truth to a mere procedural device was erroneous. Ballard v. Meyers, 275 Ga. 819, 572 S.E.2d 572 (2002).

Reopening case to admit impeachment evidence. — A trial court did not abuse its discretion in reopening the evidence in a defendant’s marijuana possession trial to allow the prosecutor to present impeachment witnesses who disproved a defense witness's claim that the witness did not know the defendant by showing that the witness was the defendant's girlfriend and the mother of the defendant's child. Sirmans v. State, 301 Ga. App. 756, 688 S.E.2d 669 (2009).

Admission of doubtful evidence. — State policy is to admit evidence, even if the admissibility of the evidence is doubtful, because it is more dangerous to suppress the truth than to allow a loophole for falsehood. Gibbons v. Maryland Cas. Co., 114 Ga. App. 788, 152 S.E.2d 815 (1966).

When the admissibility of evidence is in doubt, the Georgia rule favors admission and submission to the jury with any needed instructions. Georgia Farm Bureau Mut. Ins. Co. v. Latimore, 151 Ga. App. 786, 261 S.E.2d 735 (1979).

Summary judgment determines only whether material fact exists. — On summary judgment, a trial court determines only whether a material issue of fact exists, and such determination does not include “the discovery of the truth of such fact” or permit frustration of a plaintiff’s constitutional right to a trial by jury “by inferring with the existence of other facts” from predicate evidence. Bruno’s Food Stores, Inc. v. Taylor, 228 Ga. App. 439, 491 S.E.2d 881 (1997).

Reception of perjured evidence is never justice, no matter how salutary the end in view. Hollins v. State, 133 Ga. App. 183, 210 S.E.2d 354 (1974).

Experiments made in and out of court sometimes make a practical demonstration of the question in issue, and are often the best evidence in elucidating the truth; there should be substantial and reasonable similarity in the facts proved in the case and the facts upon which the experiment is based, but the facts need not be exactly or in every particular similar; if the experiments are sufficiently similar to accomplish the purpose of assisting the jury to intelligently consider the issue of fact presented in regard to the special point in controversy, the evidence is admissible. Miller v. State, 53 Ga. App. 275, 185 S.E. 372 (1936).

On cross-examination opposing party is entitled to a thorough and sifting examination of the witness and, when the defendant’s alibi witnesses were under cross-examination, the trial court correctly refused to grant a mistrial with reference to an effort to impeach the witnesses as to whether or not the testimony was fabricated before trial, since the object of all legal investigation is the discovery of truth. Mitchell v. State, 157 Ga. App. 683, 278 S.E.2d 192 (1981).

Refusal to allow a witness to testify is a matter within the discretion of the trial court. Georgia Bldg. Servs., Inc. v. Perry, 193 Ga. App. 288, 387 S.E.2d 898 (1989).

Failure of the trial court to allow a witness to testify in a slip and fall premises liability suit constituted an abuse of discretion requiring reversal and a new trial since the exercise of discretion was based upon a misapprehension of the facts of the case, namely, the trial court’s belief that the witnesses’ existence had not been revealed to the opposing party. Georgia Bldg. Servs., Inc. v. Perry, 193 Ga. App. 288, 387 S.E.2d 898 (1989).

Blood test admitted in rebuttal. — Ruling of the trial court to allow blood test to be admitted in rebuttal was entirely consistent with the statutorily recognized object of the rules of evidence. Gregg v. State, 216 Ga. App. 135, 453 S.E.2d 499 (1995).

Compliance with a subpoena implicit in a confidential settlement agreement. — Provision that a party to a confidential settlement agreement may nevertheless testify or otherwise comply with a subpoena, court order, or applicable law is an implicit term in such a confidential settlement agreement. Barger v. Garden Way, Inc., 231 Ga. App. 723, 499 S.E.2d 737 (1998).

Trial court erred in concluding that a confidential settlement agreement, even if incorporated as another court’s final order, can operate to preclude discovery by Georgia litigants of the parties to that confidential settlement agreement. Barger v. Garden Way, Inc., 231 Ga. App. 723, 499 S.E.2d 737 (1998).

ANALYSIS

JUDICIAL NOTICE PROPER

JUDICIAL NOTICE IMPROPER

General Consideration

Notice of intention to take judicial notice.

— If a trial court intends to take judicial notice of any fact, the court must first announce the court's intention to do so on the record and afford the parties an opportunity to be heard regarding whether judicial notice should be taken. Graves v. State, 269 Ga. 772, 504 S.E.2d 679 (1998), overruled on other grounds, Jones v. State, 272 Ga. 900, 537 S.E.2d 80 (2000), reversing Graves v. State, 227 Ga. App. 628, 490 S.E.2d 111 (1997).

Presumption that law in force. — When it appears in the manner indicated by statute that a particular law has been of force in another state, until the contrary is shown it is presumed that such law is still of force. Seaboard Air-Line Ry. v. Phillips, 117 Ga. 98, 43 S.E. 494 (1903).

Attention of court called to change in law.

— While the common law is presumed to be of force in most of the American states, if either party claims that the statute or common law obtaining in such state is different from the law laid down in the Code, the party must, by pleading, evidence, or a request to charge, call the attention of the court to such difference. Wells v. Gress, 118 Ga. 566, 45 S.E. 418 (1903).

Three methods of proof of foreign laws have been recognized. One is by proof of witnesses, testifying as to their familiarity with the law in reference to a certain subject. A second method is by certified copy of the statute in question. Finally, the third method of proof is clearly authorized by this statute; which is judicial recognition. Missouri State Life Ins. Co. v. Lovelace, 1 Ga. App. 446, 58 S.E. 93 (1907). See also Simms v. Southern Express Co., 38 Ga. 129 (1868) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-1-4).

Notice of foreign law from nature of litigation. — No issue of foreign law pertaining to sufficiency of long arm process service will arise during the course of litigation, unless the defendant timely raises such issue as prescribed by law. Thus, defendant will always have actual knowledge when an issue of foreign law, pertaining to the adequacy of service of long arm process, will be litigated and will therefore have a reasonable opportunity to prepare for such litigation. Askari v. Dolat, 240 Ga. App. 633, 524 S.E.2d 310 (1999).

Responsibility on party wishing to raise foreign law issue. — Notice of intent is required to raise an issue of foreign law, to establish such law by compliance with statutory means (O.C.G.A. §§ 9-11-43(c), 24-1-4, and 24-7-24), or cause a duty to be imposed on a court to judicially recognize any relevant, existing foreign law. Samay v. Som, 213 Ga. App. 812, 446 S.E.2d 230 (1994); P.G.L. & C.C. Employees Credit Union v. Kimball, 221 Ga. App. 108, 470 S.E.2d 501 (1996); Askari v. Dolat, 240 Ga. App. 633, 524 S.E.2d 310 (1999).

Laws published by authority. — Judicial cognizance of the laws of another state will be taken only when presented in some form that shows the law was “published by authority.” Carter v. Graves, 206 Ga. 234, 56 S.E.2d 917 (1949), later appeal, 207 Ga. 308, 61 S.E.2d 282 (1950).

Under O.C.G.A. § 24-1-4, a trial court has a duty to take judicial notice of foreign law if “published by authority,” without introduction of any proof of that law. Meeker v. Eufaula Bank & Trust, 208 Ga. App. 702, 431 S.E.2d 475 (1993).

Proof of authority. — Volume of state laws, purporting on the title page to have been printed by order of the Governor, sufficiently shows publication by authority for purpose of judicial recognition of foreign state laws without proof. Hamilton v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 71 Ga. App. 584, 32 S.E.2d 540 (1944).

Law must be pleaded. — Statute does not dispense with the necessity of pleading a foreign law. On the contrary, this provision merely means that when the public laws of a foreign state are published by that state’s authority, the authenticity of its publications need not be shown by the introduction of proof of their genuineness, but will be judicially recognized by the courts without proof, and given the same effect as though its public laws were proved by the introduction in evidence of a duly certified copy thereof, properly authenticated under the great seal of that state. Savannah, Fla. & W. Ry. v. Evans, 121 Ga. 391, 49 S.E. 308 (1904). But see Lane v. Harris, 16 Ga. 217 (1854).

Customs. — To be judicially recognized, custom must be one about which there is and can be no dispute and which is known to all men. Wood v. Frank Graham Co., 91 Ga. App. 621, 86 S.E.2d 691 (1955).

Uncertified copies of pleadings and orders from other Georgia courts were not competent evidence to show that landlord, a Tennessee corporation, was an ousted mortgagor, out of possession and not in control of premises at the time of the incident. Commerce Properties, Inc. v. Linthicum, 209 Ga. App. 853, 434 S.E.2d 769 (1993).

Matters of public knowledge. — Court will take judicial cognizance of matters of common and public knowledge. McGraw v. State, 85 Ga. App. 857, 70 S.E.2d 141 (1952).

Test of public knowledge is whether the fact is one of common, everyday knowledge that all persons of average intelligence are presumed to know, and whether it is certain and indisputable. Cole v. Cates, 110 Ga. App. 820, 140 S.E.2d 36 (1964).

Municipal ordinances. — In a trial before a municipal court, the recorder may take judicial notice of the ordinances of the city, defining offenses against the city, but neither the Supreme Court, nor any other court than the municipal court, can take judicial cognizance of a municipal ordinance. Slaughter v. City of La Grange, 60 Ga. App. 555, 4 S.E.2d 410 (1939).

Superior and appellate courts do not take judicial notice of a municipal ordinance. Police Benevolent Ass’n v. Brown, 268 Ga. 26, 486 S.E.2d 28 (1997).

Plaintiffs’ argument that a city’s procedures for allocating funds violated the city code could not be considered on appeal because the relevant ordinances were not properly made a part of the record, and courts could not take judicial notice of municipal ordinances. Bailey v. City of Atlanta, 296 Ga. App. 679, 675 S.E.2d 564 (2009).

County ordinances. — Court could not review the merits of a developer’s arguments as to a county ordinance when there was no evidence in the record demonstrating that the ordinance was properly proven below. County ordinances constituted foreign law, and a court could not take judicial notice of those ordinances under O.C.G.A. § 24-1-4. Prime Home Props., LLC v. Rockdale County Bd. of Health, 290 Ga. App. 698, 660 S.E.2d 44 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 685 (Ga. 2008).

Judicial notice must be requested. — Judicial notice being a dispensation of one party from producing evidence, it would seem that the party must, in point of form, make a request for it. Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Peavy, 98 Ga. App. 268, 105 S.E.2d 465 (1958).

Judicial Notice Proper

Statutory provisions need not be set out in full. — Courts are bound to take judicial cognizance of an Act of the General Assembly, and it is not essential that a pleader should set out an entire Act in the pleadings in order to insist upon some paragraph or provision of the Act. Heard v. Pittard, 210 Ga. 549, 81 S.E.2d 799 (1954).

Tennessee “slip opinions” were not “published by authority” and were, therefore, not binding on the trial court, with or without introduction of proof. Swafford v. Globe Am. Cas. Co., 187 Ga. App. 730, 371 S.E.2d 180, cert. denied, 187 Ga. App. 909, 371 S.E.2d 180 (1988).

Judicial notice of federal summary judgment order. — In a legal malpractice case based on attorneys’ representation in a 42 U.S.C. § 1983 action brought in federal court, the trial court properly took judicial notice of the federal district court’s summary judgment order. The federal order was published in a case reporter and thus was “published by authority” under O.C.G.A. § 24-1-4, and the very nature of the present action meant that all parties and the trial court necessarily had notice that the federal court’s opinion would be relied upon. Kramer v. Yokely, 291 Ga. App. 375, 662 S.E.2d 208 (2008), cert. denied, U.S. , 129 S. Ct. 1671, 173 L. Ed. 2d 1037 (2009).

Judicial notice was held proper in the following cases. — See Davis v. Bank of Fulton, 31 Ga. 69 (1860) (bank charter); Ragland v. Barringer, 41 Ga. 114 (1870) (Governor’s proclamation); Stafford v. Hightower, 68 Ga. 394 (1882) (federal court districts); Wells v. Gress, 118 Ga. 566, 45 S.E. 418 (1903) (foreign state statutes); Jossey v. Brown, 119 Ga. 758, 47 S.E. 350 (1904)

Judicial Notice Improper

Judicial notice was taken. — Judicial notice was taken of the deaths of the trial judge and the court reporter handling the case below, which, alone, satisfied O.C.G.A. § 50-2-21(b)(5). Triguero v. ABN AMRO Bank N.V., 273 Ga. App. 92, 614 S.E.2d 209 (2005).

In pleading the statute of a foreign state, it is not necessary that it should be set forth in haec verba, but the substance of those portions that are relied on should be stated with sufficient distinctness to enable the court to judge of the meaning and effect of the law. Rodale v. Grimes, 211 Ga. 50, 84 S.E.2d 68 (1954).

Pleadings in a related action. — Trial court erred in failing to grant a client's request for a hearing on a former attorney's motion to dismiss claims for legal malpractice and intentional infliction of emotional distress, because the trial court considered matters outside the pleadings. The trial court could not properly make factual findings based on the pleadings in the divorce action under O.C.G.A. § 24-1-4 because such issues are a matter of proof that could not be judicially noticed. Fitzpatrick v. Harrison, 300 Ga. App. 672, 686 S.E.2d 322 (2009).

Courts cannot judicially know whether or not a defendant has actually been convicted, unless that fact is verified by the answer of the magistrate. Rutland v. City of Dublin, 50 Ga. App. 242, 177 S.E. 819 (1934).

Notice of intent to seek attorney's fees. — Judicial notice could be taken that the exhibit purported to be a notice of intent to seek attorney's fees under O.C.G.A. § 13-1-11; however, judicial notice cannot be taken that the attached notice was, in fact, what it purported to be, because such issues are a matter of proof that cannot be judicially noticed. NationsBank v. Tucker, 231 Ga. App. 622, 500 S.E.2d 378 (1998).

Judicial notice was held improper in the following cases. — See Clifton v. State, 53 Ga. 241 (1874) (previous proceedings before court); Crouch v. Fisher, 43 Ga. App. 484, 159 S.E. 746 (1931) (adoption of agency rules pursuant to statute); Causey v. Swift & Co., 57 Ga. App. 604, 196 S.E. 228 (1938) (location of city streets and distances between streets); Livingston v. Brady, 202 Ga. 500, 43 S.E.2d 703 (1947) (inclusion of a certain high school in the state school system); Carter v. Graves, 206 Ga. 234, 56 S.E.2d 917 (1949), later appeal, 207 Ga. 308, 61 S.E.2d 282 (1950) (foreign state statutes; foreign state cases reported in an unofficial publication); *Harmon v. App. 85, 166 S.E.2d 411 (1969) (state agency, municipal, or private agency rules or regulations affecting start of school year); Lackey v. DeKalb County, 156 Ga. App. 309, 274 S.E.2d 705 (1980) (local practice rules); In re G.G., 177 Ga. App. 639, 341 S.E.2d 13 (1986) (county of location of incorporated city); Dayoub v. Yates-Astro Termite Pest Control Co., 239 Ga. App. 578, 521 S.E.2d 600 (1999) (standards of the National Pest Control Association).

Unfiled depositions. — Trial court is authorized by law to take judicial notice only of certain narrowly prescribed categories of information, none of which includes deposition testimony. Therefore, the trial court committed reversible error when the court based the court's conclusions on depositions never filed with the court during the proceedings. Buchanan v. City of Clayton, 180 Ga. App. 740, 350 S.E.2d 320 (1986).

Building Code violation. — In a negligence action, plaintiffs based their contention regarding the construction of a stairwell on a claimed violation of the Georgia State Building Code, in that there was no landing on the stairway as required by the Code for exit stairways. Since the only reference to the Code in the record, however, was its quotation in the brief submitted by the plaintiffs in opposition to a motion for summary judgment, such a quotation was not evidence, nor was such a rule or regulation a matter of which a court could take judicial notice. Joel Properties, Inc. v. Reed, 203 Ga. App. 257, 416 S.E.2d 570 (1992).

City ordinance. — In an appeal from the denial of a subdivision application, the trial court could not take judicial notice of city ordinances; city ordinances have to be alleged and proven. City of St. Marys v. Fulford, 286 Ga. App. 506, 649 S.E.2d 807 (2007).

Venue. — Prerequisites for judicial notice of venue were not satisfied by reference to ambiguous Uniform Traffic Citations. Graves v. State, 269 Ga. 772, 504 S.E.2d 679 (1998), overruled on other grounds, Jones v. State, 272 Ga. 900, 537 S.E.2d 80 (2000), reversing Graves v. State, 227 Ga. App. 628, 490 S.E.2d 111 (1997).

GENERAL CONSIDERATION

RELEVANCY DEFINED

CRITERIA OF ADMISSIBILITY

CIVIL CASES

CRIMINAL CASES

1. RELEVANT EVIDENCE

2. IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE

It is error to admit irrelevant evidence. Mercer v. Woodard, 166 Ga. App. 119, 303 S.E.2d 475 (1983).

But error waived unless objected to at trial. — Defendants are not entitled to appellate review of the issue of relevancy when the defendants fail to raise the issue at trial. Fain v. State, 165 Ga. App. 188, 300 S.E.2d 197 (1983).

Admission of irrelevant evidence is not a ground for reversal unless it can be shown the evidence was prejudicial. Hill v. State, 177 Ga. App. 850, 341 S.E.2d 322 (1986).

Observations of teacher’s conduct in student’s class were relevant and material to the issue of the teacher’s alleged mistreatment of the student. Houston v. Kinder-Care Learning Ctrs., Inc., 208 Ga. App. 235, 430 S.E.2d 24 (1993).

Objecting party failed to carry burden of proving that admission of evidence unduly prejudicial to that party’s rights. DOT v. 2,734 Acres of Land, 168 Ga. App. 541, 309 S.E.2d 816 (1983).

Where testimony is part material and in part irrelevant, a general objection to the whole is not well taken; if however, the objecting party points out the irrelevant portion of the testimony offered, it is not error for the court to reject the evidence in toto, when the party offering the evidence fails to segregate the relevant portions from those which are irrelevant; and when it is shown that designated portions of the evidence are irrelevant, but the court over such objection admits the testimony as a whole, a new trial will be granted provided such irrelevant testimony could have been harmful to the complaining party. Taintor v. Rogers, 197 Ga. 872, 30 S.E.2d 892 (1944).

Relevancy Defined

Any evidence is relevant which logically tends to prove or disprove a material fact which is at issue in the case, and every act or circumstance serving to elucidate or to throw light upon a material issue or issues is relevant. Sample v. Lipscomb, 18 Ga. 554 (1855); Walker v. Roberts, 20 Ga. 15 (1856); Alexander v. State, 7 Ga. App. 88, 66 S.E. 274 (1909); Carter v. Marble Prods., Inc., 179 Ga. 122, 175 S.E. 480 (1934); Rogers v. State, 80 Ga. App. 585, 56 S.E.2d 633 (1949); MacNerland v. Johnson, 137 Ga. App. 541, 224 S.E.2d 431 (1976); Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank v. Hodnett, 139 Ga. App. 839, 229 S.E.2d 792 (1976); Johnson v. State, 148 Ga. App. 702, 252 S.E.2d 205 (1979); Bunge v. State, 149 Ga. App. 712, 256 S.E.2d 23 (1979); Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979); Kelly v. Floor Bazaar, Inc., 153 Ga. App. 163, 264 S.E.2d 697 (1980); Williams v. State, 153 Ga. App. 890, 267 S.E.2d 305 (1980); Chambers v. State, 154 Ga. App. 620, 269 S.E.2d 42 (1980); Guest v. State, 155 Ga. App. 374, 270 S.E.2d 904 (1980); DOT v. Delta Mach. Prods. Co., 157 Ga. App. 423, 278 S.E.2d 73 (1981).

Every fact or circumstance serving to elucidate or throw light upon the issue being tried constitutes proper evidence in the case. A.A.A. Hwy. Express, Inc. v. Hagler, 72 Ga. App. 519, 34 S.E.2d 462 (1945); Miller Serv., Inc. v. Miller, 76 Ga. App. 143, 45 S.E.2d 466 (1947), later appeal, 77 Ga. App. 413, 48

S.E.2d 761 (1948); Hodnett v. Hodnett, 99 Ga. App. 285, 109 S.E.2d 285 (1959); DOT v. Delta Mach. Prods. Co., 157 Ga. App. 423, 278 S.E.2d 73 (1981).

Evidence is relevant if the evidence renders the desired inference more probable than it would be without the evidence. Baker v. State, 246 Ga. 317, 271 S.E.2d 360 (1980).

Evidence which does not in any reasonable degree tend to establish the probability of the issues of fact in controversy is irrelevant and inadmissible. Horne v. State, 125 Ga. App. 40, 186 S.E.2d 542 (1971).

Any evidence is relevant which logically tends to prove or to disprove a material fact which is at issue in the case, and every act or circumstance serving to elucidate or to throw light upon a material issue or issues is relevant. Owens v. State, 248 Ga. 629, 284 S.E.2d 408 (1981).

Any fact is relevant which, when taken alone or in connection with another or others, would warrant the drawing by the jury of a logical inference with reference to the issue on trial. Pope v. Triangle Chem. Co., 157 Ga. App. 386, 277 S.E.2d 758 (1981).

Irrelevant evidence is inadmissible. — Most acceptable test for relevancy is whether the evidence offered renders the desired inference more probable than it would be without the evidence. Southern Ry. v. Lawson, 256 Ga. 798, 353 S.E.2d 491 (1987).

Evidence of witness's feelings towards parties. — O.C.G.A. §§ 24-2-1 and 24-9-68 should be considered in pari materia; thus, even if testimony sought to be admitted relates to the feelings a witness has toward a party, if that particular feeling would have no relevance to the questions being tried by the jury, then such evidence may be excluded in the sound discretion of the trial court. Lockett v. State, 217 Ga. App. 328, 457 S.E.2d 579 (1995).

Criteria of Admissibility

Questions as to the relevancy and admissibility of the testimony are properly for the court, and the question must be determined in each case according to the facts of that particular case and in accordance with the teachings of reason and judicial experience. Dumas v. State, 131 Ga. App. 79, 205 S.E.2d 119 (1974); MacNerland v. Johnson, 137 Ga. App. 541, 224 S.E.2d 431 (1976); Downs v.

State, 145 Ga. App. 588, 244 S.E.2d 113 (1978); Church's Fried Chicken, Inc. v. Lewis, 150 Ga. App. 154, 256 S.E.2d 916 (1979); Henderson v. State, 153 Ga. App. 801, 266 S.E.2d 522 (1980); Williams v. State, 153 Ga. App. 890, 267 S.E.2d 305 (1980); Chambers v. State, 154 Ga. App. 620, 269 S.E.2d 42 (1980); Brand v. State, 154 Ga. App. 781, 270 S.E.2d 206 (1980); Guest v. State, 155 Ga. App. 374, 270 S.E.2d 904 (1980); Baker v. State, 246 Ga. 317, 271 S.E.2d 360 (1980).

Admissibility of evidence is a matter which rests largely within the sound discretion of the trial court, and if an item of evidence has a tendency to help establish a fact in issue, that is sufficient to make the evidence relevant and admissible. Lewis v. State, 158 Ga. App. 586, 281 S.E.2d 331 (1981).

Question for the jury. — When facts are such that the jury, if permitted to hear the facts, may or may not make an inference pertinent to the issue, according to the view which the jury may take of the facts, in connection with the other facts in evidence, the facts are such that the jury ought to be permitted to hear the facts. Williams v. State, 153 Ga. App. 890, 267 S.E.2d 305 (1980); Chambers v. State, 154 Ga. App. 620, 269 S.E.2d 42 (1980); Brand v. State, 154 Ga. App. 781, 270 S.E.2d 206 (1980); Paxton v. State, 160 Ga. App. 19, 285 S.E.2d 741 (1981).

Relevant evidence cannot be kept from the jury by admission of the fact or waiver of the requirement of proof. Franklin v. State, 245 Ga. 141, 263 S.E.2d 666, cert. denied, 447 U.S. 930, 100 S. Ct. 3029, 65 L. Ed. 2d 1124 (1980); Dick v. State, 246 Ga. 697, 273 S.E.2d 124 (1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 976, 101 S. Ct. 2059, 68 L. Ed. 2d 357 (1981).

If the evidence offered by a party is of doubtful relevancy, the evidence should nevertheless be admitted and the weight of the evidence left to the jury. Continental Trust Co. v. Bank of Harrison, 36 Ga. App. 149, 136 S.E. 319 (1926); Brown v. Wilson, 55 Ga. App. 262, 189 S.E. 860 (1937); A.A.A. Hwy. Express, Inc. v. Hagler, 72 Ga. App. 519, 34 S.E.2d 462 (1945); Smith v. Davis, 76 Ga. App. 154, 45 S.E.2d 237 (1947); Miller Serv., Inc. v. Miller, 76 Ga. App. 143, 45 S.E.2d 466 (1947), later appeal, 77 Ga. App. 413, 48

S.E.2d 761 (1948); Manners v. State, 77 Ga. App. 843, 50 S.E.2d 158 (1948); Burton v. Campbell Coal Co., 95 Ga. App. 338, 97 S.E.2d 924 (1957); Carroll v. Hayes, 98 Ga. App. 450, 105 S.E.2d 755 (1958); Smith v. Morning News, Inc., 99 Ga. App. 547, 109 S.E.2d 639 (1959); Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank v. Hodnett, 139 Ga. App. 839, 229 S.E.2d 792 (1976); Johnson v. State, 148 Ga. App. 702, 252 S.E.2d 205 (1979); Calhoun v. Branan, 149 Ga. App. 160, 253 S.E.2d 838 (1979); Williams v. State, 153 Ga. App. 890, 267 S.E.2d 305 (1980); DOT v. Delta Mach. Prods. Co., 157 Ga. App. 423, 278 S.E.2d 73 (1981); Lewis v. State, 158 Ga. App. 586, 281 S.E.2d 331 (1981); Owens v. State, 248 Ga. 629, 284 S.E.2d 408 (1981).

Question as to admissibility of evidence is not to be determined by the evidence's weight; if the evidence has any probative value, however small, and is otherwise competent, the evidence should be admitted. Fuller v. State, 196 Ga. 237, 26 S.E.2d 281 (1943).

Res gestae. — In a murder trial, the trial court did not err in admitting the defendant's own evidence that the defendant had been free-basing cocaine the night before the killing and again on the day of the killing; this evidence, as part and parcel of the crime and as res gestae, was admissible even though the killing did not appear to have directly involved drug usage and even though the evidence incidentally put the defendant's character in issue. Latham v. State, 195 Ga. App. 355, 393 S.E.2d 498 (1990).

Mere circumstance that certain evidence may fall short of proving a fact is not a sufficient reason for excluding that evidence; unless otherwise objectionable, the evidence should be admitted, even though the evidence may only tend to prove the matter in issue. Livingston v. Barnett, 193 Ga. 640, 19 S.E.2d 385 (1942); Miller Serv., Inc. v. Miller, 76 Ga. App. 143, 45 S.E.2d 466 (1947), later appeal, 77 Ga. App. 413, 48 S.E.2d 761 (1948); Rogers v. State, 80 Ga. App. 585, 56 S.E.2d 633 (1949); Chambers v. State, 154 Ga. App. 620, 269 S.E.2d 42 (1980).

When the admissibility of evidence is doubtful, the burden is on the objecting party to show wherein it is inadmissible. Smith v. Morning News, Inc., 99 Ga. App.

Even when irrelevant evidence is admitted over timely objection, it affords no cause for a new trial, unless the nature of the evidence is such as reasonably to prejudice the rights of the objecting party. Continental Trust Co. v. Bank of Harrison, 36 Ga. App. 149, 136 S.E. 319 (1926).

When evidence is admitted for one purpose, it is not error for the court to fail to instruct the jury to limit the jury's consideration to the one purpose for which the evidence is admissible, in the absence of a request to so instruct the jury. Tankersley v. State, 155 Ga. App. 917, 273 S.E.2d 862 (1980).

Relevant evidence is not subject to an objection that the evidence might inflame the minds of the jury or prejudice the jury and this is true even when the offered evidence is only cumulative; this rule favors the admission of any relevant evidence, no matter how slight the probative value. Sprouse v. State, 242 Ga. 831, 252 S.E.2d 173 (1979).

Evidence indirectly relevant. — Evidence which is only indirectly relevant to the issue on trial, but which tends somewhat to illustrate the issue, and to aid the jury in arriving at the truth of the matter, should be admitted. Brown v. Wilson, 55 Ga. App. 262, 189 S.E. 860 (1937); A.A.A. Hwy. Express, Inc. v. Hagler, 72 Ga. App. 519, 34 S.E.2d 462 (1945); Smith v. Davis, 76 Ga. App. 154, 45 S.E.2d 237 (1947); Kalish v. King Cabinet Co., 140 Ga. App. 345, 232 S.E.2d 86 (1976); Bituminous Cas. Corp. v. Mowery, 145 Ga. App. 45, 244 S.E.2d 573 (1978).

Evidence of similar occurrences is admitted when it appears that all the essential physical conditions on two occasions are identical; for under such circumstances the observed uniformity of nature raises an inference that like causes will produce like results, even though there may be some dissimilarity of conditions in respect to matters which cannot reasonably be expected to have affected the result. McCrea v. Georgia Power Co., 46 Ga. App. 276, 167 S.E. 540 (1933).

Evidence excludable. — It is not error to refuse to receive evidence not pertinent to the proceeding. Stalvey v. Varn Motors & Fin. Co., 56 Ga. App. 696, 193 S.E. 627 (1937); Gaskill v. Brown, 103 Ga. App. 33, 118 S.E.2d 113 (1961); Roberts v. Farmer, 127 Ga. App. 237, 193 S.E.2d 216 (1972).

County was properly precluded from introducing evidence of a school district's condemnation of a landowner's property to indirectly show that the value of the property the county was condemning was less than that proposed by the landowner's expert. The admission of such evidence would have been improper because: (1) the landowner's compulsory sale of the property to the school district a year after the county initiated the county's condemnation action would not have affected the value of the land at the time of the county's taking a year earlier; and (2) the school district's inability to use the property as rezoned did not change the fact that the property was already in the process of being rezoned in a manner that affected the property's value for purposes of just and adequate compensation to the landowner at the time of the county's taking. Gwinnett County v. Howington, 280 Ga. App. 347, 634 S.E.2d 157 (2006).

In a medical malpractice action, even if evidence of the doctor's professional liability policy, which a decedent's executrix sought as impeachment evidence, consisted of a prior inconsistent statement by the doctor, the trial court properly excluded evidence of the policy, as well as its inclusion in the court's instruction to the jury, as it involved a collateral matter and was more prejudicial than probative. King v. Zakaria, 280 Ga. App. 570, 634 S.E.2d 444 (2006).

It is not reversible error to admit evidence that is merely irrelevant and immaterial. Mickle v. Moore, 188 Ga. 444, 4 S.E.2d 217 (1939); Henderson v. State, 153 Ga. App. 801, 266 S.E.2d 522 (1980).

Evidence immaterial. — If evidence is offered to prove a fact not in issue, the evidence is then properly said to be immaterial. MacNerland v. Johnson, 137 Ga. App. 541, 224 S.E.2d 431 (1976).

Immateriality need not require reversal. — Mere fact that evidence is "immaterial" does not necessarily mean that its admission into evidence constitutes reversible error. Evidence which is immaterial will not always require reversal, since prejudice also must appear. Clarke v. State, 159 Ga. App. 843, 285 S.E.2d 270 (1981).

Grounds for new trial. — While generally the admission of irrelevant testimony or illegal evidence, which is wholly immaterial, will not be cause for the grant of a new trial, it will be such ground if it appears of sufficient consequence to injuriously affect the complaining party. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Thornton, 119 Ga. 455, 46 S.E. 678 (1904); McGriff v. McGriff, 154 Ga. 560, 115 S.E. 21 (1922); McDaniel v. State, 197 Ga. 757, 30 S.E.2d 612 (1944); Dismuke v. State, 142 Ga. App. 381, 236 S.E.2d 12 (1977); Drew v. Collins, 153 Ga. App. 794, 266 S.E.2d 570 (1980); Murdock v. Godwin, 154 Ga. App. 824, 269 S.E.2d 905 (1980).

In a negligent misrepresentation action filed by a business against the business's accountants, the business was entitled to a new trial as the trial court twice erred by admitting irrelevant and prejudicial evidence that: (1) the business was sold for $65.5 million in 2005, in order to establish the business's 1993 value, as the sale was too remote, the business had undergone physical changes since the sale, and the market conditions had also changed; and (2) the loans from a shareholder to purchase and operate the business were later reclassified as a shareholder investment of capital, and that the debt owed to the shareholder was forgiven in exchange for the issuance of additional stock in the business as such was irrelevant to the determination of whether the business was entitled to direct damages. Atlando Holdings, LLC v. BDO Seidman, LLP, 290 Ga. App. 665, 660 S.E.2d 463 (2008).

Evidence which is relevant may be excluded because the probative worth or value of the evidence is outweighed by the tendency of the evidence confuse the issues, or the jury. MacNerland v. Johnson, 137 Ga. App. 541, 224 S.E.2d 431 (1976).

Trial court properly excluded the patients' request to admit photographs of their stillborn fetus in their medical malpractice action as there was no dispute that the fetus suffered from skin peeling, and while the issue was slightly probative in the case, it was substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. Steele v. Atlanta Maternal-Fetal Med., P.C., 271 Ga. App. 622, 610 S.E.2d 546 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Smith v. Finch, 285 Ga. 709, 681 S.E.2d 147 (2009).

Specific objection showing harmful error must be offered at the time irrelevant and immaterial evidence is presented, and it is too late to set forth for the first time in a ground of a motion for new trial, even though valid. McDaniel v. State, 197 Ga. 757, 30 S.E.2d 612 (1944).

In order to raise on appeal contentions concerning admissibility of evidence, the specific ground of objection must be made at the time the evidence is offered, and a failure to do so will be considered as a waiver; all evidence is admitted as a matter of course unless a valid ground of objection is interposed. Sutphin v. McDaniel, 157 Ga. App. 732, 278 S.E.2d 490 (1981).

Objection to evidence on grounds of prejudice and irrelevance does not constitute a proper objection and does not therefore present the Court of Appeals with an issue for review. Bynum v. Standard (Chevron) Oil Co., 157 Ga. App. 819, 278 S.E.2d 669, cert. dismissed, 248 Ga. 429, 285 S.E.2d 186 (1981).

Erroneous admission of evidence not grounds for reversal. — Judgment will not be reversed because of the erroneous admission of evidence since at a subsequent stage of the trial, the evidence became relevant and admissible upon an issue later injected into the case. Fuller v. State, 197 Ga. 714, 30 S.E.2d 608 (1944).

Conjectural testimony not competent evidence. — Testimony as to what one thinks would have been the result of an occurrence had the occurrence happened in a particular way is not competent evidence, being merely conjectural and without probative value. Queen v. Patent Scaffolding Co., 46 Ga. App. 364, 167 S.E. 789 (1933).

Foundation for introduction of evidence must be laid. — There is no legal ground to complain of the failure to admit certain evidence or testimony when it is not shown what the evidence or testimony would have been. Lakeview Estates Homeowners Corp. v. Hilltop Enters. of Ga., Inc., 153 Ga. App. 323, 265 S.E.2d 120 (1980).

App. 45, 244 S.E.2d 573 (1978) (medical treatment for accidental injury); Harley-Davidson Motor Co. v. Daniel, 244 Ga. 284, 260 S.E.2d 20 (1979) (manufacturer's recall letter); Gwinnett Com. Ponder, 251 Ga. 323, 304 S.E.2d 61 (1983); Spencer v. Kyle Realty Co., 225 Ga. App. 203, 483 S.E.2d 639 (1997) (income tax returns).

Evidence of the abusive and violent relationship between a murder victim and a defendant was relevant under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-1 to show defendant's motive, intent, and bent of mind, and the remoteness of events relating to such relationship affected the weight of the evidence but not the admissibility of the evidence. Mote v. State, 277 Ga. 429, 588 S.E.2d 748 (2003), cert. denied, 541 U.S. 1066, 124 S. Ct. 2395, 158 L. Ed. 2d 968 (2004).

Evidence that a college had removed credit hours from a student's transcript was relevant to the student's claim for breach of contract damages as the student could recover the cost of tuition for classes the student was forced to repeat due to the college's actions. Morehouse College, Inc. v. McGaha, 277 Ga. App. 529, 627 S.E.2d 39 (2005).

In a dispute over two subdivision lots, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence that was cumulative to evidence showing a legal property owner's record title. The evidence was not hearsay, as alleged by a claimant who sought title to that property by prescription; further, the evidence was relevant to the issue of whether a claimant's adverse possession ripened into title by prescription. Smith v. Stacey, 281 Ga. 601, 642 S.E.2d 28 (2007).

In a divorce case after the wife was awarded child support, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in overruling the husband's objection to the wife's questions regarding checks that had been paid to him but that he had not deposited into his bank account. The wife was entitled to inquire whether the deposited and undeposited checks matched the amount of income reported by the husband. Leggette v. Leggette, 284 Ga. 432, 668 S.E.2d 251 (2008).

Homeowner countersued a contractor for fraud. Testimony by a subcontractor that the contractor's project supervisor told the subcontractor to increase the bid because the homeowner was "loaded" was not hearsay because the testimony was not admitted to show the truth of the matters asserted, and the testimony was a circumstance relevant to the fraud claim. Lumpkin v. Deventer N. Am., Inc., 295 Ga. App. 312, 672 S.E.2d 405 (2008).

A trial court did not err in admitting evidence that a nursing home was short staffed, lacked various supplies, that residents, including the deceased patient, were observed soiled with urine and waste, and that residents, including the patient, were not turned as often as required, as relevant under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-1. The witnesses were certified nursing assistants who were directly involved in patient care while the patient was a resident, and the evidence showed both negligence and that the nursing home was aware of these conditions and did nothing to correct them. Tucker Nursing Ctr., Inc. v. Mosby, No. A09A1756, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 277 (Mar. 24, 2010).

Evidence in legal malpractice cases. — Rules of the State Bar of Georgia, while not determinative of the standard of care applicable in a legal malpractice case, may be considered along with other facts and circumstances to determine whether an attorney treated a client with the requisite degree of skill and care. Watkins & Watkins, P.C. v. Williams, 238 Ga. App. 646, 518 S.E.2d 704 (1999).

In a legal malpractice action arising from attorney's alleged filing of a voluntary dismissal based upon the erroneous and negligent assumption that the underlying medical malpractice case could be re-filed, the trial court abused its discretion in granting defendant attorneys' motion in limine effectively prohibiting plaintiffs from introducing expert testimony related to the issue of whether, but for the attorneys' negligence, the plaintiffs would have prevailed in the underlying action. It was an abuse of discretion to conclude that plaintiffs were categorically restricted to the evidence already in the record at the time the attorneys represented them. Blackwell v. Potts, 266 Ga. App. 702, 598 S.E.2d 1 (2004).

Evidence in medical malpractice cases. — In a medical malpractice action, given that the admission of expert testimony that the doctor breached the standard of care in performing two 1998 surgeries on the patient would have arguably forced that doctor to defend against time-barred malpractice claims, the trial court was authorized to conclude that the substantially prejudicial impact of that evidence far outweighed any probative value. Miller v. Cole, 289 Ga. App. 471, 657 S.E.2d 585 (2008).

Evidence in condemnation case. — Trial court erred in denying a housing authority's motion in limine in a condemnation case seeking to exclude evidence of the commercial value of the land at issue; since the property was restricted by a federal court order for use as a public playground, there was no basis for the admission of evidence regarding any potential commercial value that the property could have had under other, non-existent circumstances. Housing Auth. of Macon v. Younis, 279 Ga. App. 599, 631 S.E.2d 802 (2006).

Trial court properly granted the Georgia Department of Transportation's (DOT) motion in limine to preclude a property owner from questioning an expert witness about the fact that the expert had been originally hired by the DOT in the DOT's condemnation proceeding as that information was not relevant to the just and adequate compensation determination. H.D. McCondichie Props. v. Ga. DOT, 280 Ga. App. 197, 633 S.E.2d 558 (2006).

Evidence in negligent construction cases. — Builder sued homeowners to recover for services rendered in constructing a house under a theory of quantum meruit; the homeowners alleged negligent construction. The trial court properly admitted evidence of the homeowners' listing price for the home as the court instructed the jury that this evidence could be considered only to show the homeowners' opinion of the home's value, in regard to the quantum meruit and negligent construction claims, not to show the home's fair market value. Biederbeck v. Marbut, 294 Ga. App. 799, 670 S.E.2d 483 (2008).

Similar transaction evidence on failure to pay. — In an action alleging an automobile company's negligent design and placement of the fuel system in a car model, evidence relating to crash tests on vehicles from which the car model involved in the automobile collision evolved, a composite video tape of crash tests and related exhibits and internal documents were relevant to the issue of the automobile manufacturer's continuing negligence in regard to its knowledge of the safety hazard, its failure to warn the public of the danger and its continued marketing of the dangerous product, as well as to the issue of callous disregard upon which basis punitive damages were sought. Ford Motor Co. v. Stubblefield, 171 Ga. App. 331, 319 S.E.2d 470 (1984).

In an action to recover expert fees, admitting evidence of defendant's failure to pay another expert was not error because of the similarity of the transactions involved and the issues of bad faith and fraud. Kent v. White, 238 Ga. App. 792, 520 S.E.2d 481 (1999).

Evidence of FTC order as to medical procedures may be admissible when the probative value of the evidence is not substantially outweighed by the fact that the admission of the evidence will create undue prejudice, confuse the issues, or mislead the jury. Pound v. Medney, 176 Ga. App. 756, 337 S.E.2d 772 (1985).

Contract damages. — In an action alleging that defendant company breached a sales representative agreement by removing areas from the representative's territory and by repeatedly reducing the commission rate below that provided in the agreement, evidence of actual commissions earned in the representative's territory was relevant to prove the representative's claim for damages. Douglas & Lomason Co. v. Hall, 212 Ga. App. 475, 441 S.E.2d 870 (1994).

Summary judgment affidavit was not relevant to material issue. — Partial summary judgment pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 9-11-56 was properly granted to a labor supplier in a construction company's counterclaim alleging tortious interference with the company's contractual relations, based on an allegedly illegal lien filed by the supplier against a property, when no factual basis was found for the counterclaim and, accordingly, it was dismissed; it was noted that the affidavit of the administrative manager of the company contained irrelevant matter which was properly excluded under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-1, as it related to the supplier's failure to sign a lien waiver and it had no logical bearing to the material fact in issue and, further, it was found to be inadmissible hearsay under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(a). Langley v. Nat'l Labor Group, Inc., 262 Ga. App. 749, 586 S.E.2d 418 (2003).

Prior lease violations. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by admitting evidence of previous lease violations in eviction proceedings instituted primarily for a tenant's child's criminal activity, but secondarily based on serious and repeated violations of the material terms of the tenant's lease with a public housing authority; the prior violations were relevant to the secondary reason for terminating the tenant's lease. Martinez v. Hous. Auth., 264 Ga. App. 282, 590 S.E.2d 245 (2003).

Autopsy photographs. — In a wrongful death action, it was not error for the trial court to refuse to allow publication to the jury of autopsy pictures of the decedent's bowel. Cornelius v. Macon-Bibb County Hosp. Auth., 243 Ga. App. 480, 533 S.E.2d 420 (2000).

Testimony by officer regarding merger. — Testimony by an officer and agent of the successor legal entity regarding the merger was relevant and material to explain the course of conduct and corporate intent of the successor corporation after the merger and how the official came to have custody of the records. NationsBank v. Tucker, 231 Ga. App. 622, 500 S.E.2d 378 (1998).

related to case); Lane v. Morrison, 124 Ga. App. 316, 183 S.E.2d 533 (1971) (documentary evidence); City Council v. Lee, 153 Ga. App. 94, 264 S.E.2d 683 (1980); Ideal Pool Corp. v. Champion, 157 Ga. App. 380, 277 S.E.2d 753 (1981) (insurance); Auto Rental & Leasing, Inc. v. Blizzard, 159 Ga. App. 533, 284 S.E.2d 47 (1981) (net worth); Wyatt v. State, 179 Ga. App. 327, 346 S.E.2d 387 (1986) (nonsuspension of driver's license in DUI case); Craig v. State, 205 Ga. App. 691, 423 S.E.2d 417 (1992) (defendant's previous encounters with arresting officers).

When defendant was allowed to call as witnesses those grandchildren that the victims testified were molested by defendant, and have them deny that they were molested, because the victims never alleged that defendant had molested the other grandchildren, the testimony of those other grandchildren were simply not relevant to either the victims' credibility or any other issue in the case; accordingly, their testimony was properly excluded. Pope v. State, 266 Ga. App. 602, 597 S.E.2d 632 (2004).

Trial court properly refused to admit photos of a subdivision, tendered by a utility to rebut testimony by the condemnees' appraiser that property around power lines was usually the last piece of residential property to be developed, and was usually relegated to low income housing because the utility: (1) failed to authenticate the pictures by showing the identity or address of the subdivision; (2) failed to present any evidence as to the value of the property in the pictures; and (3) failed to demonstrate whether the subdivision was built before or after the power lines were installed. Ga. Power Co. v. Jones, 277 Ga. App. 332, 626 S.E.2d 554 (2006).

Trial court did not err in preventing an invitee from providing the jury with background information regarding the effects of the injuries on the parties as: (1) the invitee cited no authorities to support this proposition; (2) lost wages were not an element of damages in a loss of consortium claim; (3) witness after witness testified about the effects of the invitee's injury on the invitee and the family; and (4) the issue was moot because a loss of consortium claim was derivative of the invitee's claim, and the jury declined to award the invitee any damages. Magill v. Edd Kirby Chevrolet, Inc., 277 Ga. App. 619, 627 S.E.2d 207 (2006).

In a breach of contract suit brought by a contractor who was engaged to advertise a computer program, the trial court properly excluded as irrelevant evidence regarding the purported illegality of the sale of the program as the reason why the defendants stopped selling the program was irrelevant to the issue of whether the contractor was owed commissions from past sales; even if it was relevant, the trial court was authorized to conclude that the substantially prejudicial impact of the evidence far outweighed any probative value. Smith v. Saulsbury, 286 Ga. App. 322, 649 S.E.2d 344 (2007).

Because the trial court properly found that testimony tending to show that the defendant's daughter possessed the methamphetamine the defendant was charged with possessing was hearsay, and testimony from the defendant's grandson was irrelevant, the defendant's conviction for possession was affirmed on appeal. Corbin v. State, 287 Ga. App. 194, 651 S.E.2d 101 (2007).

With regard to debtor's claim against creditor for intentional infliction of emotional distress, trial court properly excluded as irrelevant the testimony of debtor's co-worker that creditor had been calling co-worker at work because it mistook coworker for debtor; this conduct did not affect debtor, who was not aware of it until after debtor had a confrontation with creditor and its employees, and thus the conduct was irrelevant to issue of whether creditor's and employees' conduct was extreme or outrageous. Cook v. Covington Credit of Ga., Inc., 290 Ga. App. 825, 660 S.E.2d 855 (2008).

Witness failure to appear for lack of timely subpoena service. — In a personal injury action, because a driver waited until the eve of trial to serve the doctor with a subpoena, the trial court: (1) did not abuse the court's discretion in determining that such service was not reasonable under O.C.G.A. § 24-10-25(a); and (2) did not err in refusing to grant the driver a continuance or citing the physician in contempt for failing to appear in court; moreover, since the subpoena was unenforceable, evidence surrounding the doctor's failure to appear became irrelevant under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-1. Buster v. Poole, 279 Ga. App. 828, 632 S.E.2d 680 (2006).

Document which is not relevant to any issue in a civil action is properly excluded. Farris v. Pazol, 166 Ga. App. 760, 305 S.E.2d 472 (1983); City of Dalton v. Smith, 210 Ga. App. 858, 437 S.E.2d 827 (1993).

Evidence of settlements with other tortfeasors. — In an action against a vascular surgeon for medical negligence in ordering an arteriogram to be performed on a patient and in not being available to direct complications resulting therefrom, it was error to admit evidence of plaintiff's settlements with other alleged tortfeasors since the relevant issues were whether the defendant doctor was negligent and, if so, the damages for which the plaintiff should be compensated. Allison v. Patel, 211 Ga. App. 376, 438 S.E.2d 920 (1993).

Fact and amount of a settlement with other parties is not relevant to the amount of damages to be awarded and were properly excluded from the jury's consideration. Bryant v. Haynie, 216 Ga. App. 430, 454 S.E.2d 533 (1995).

Prejudicial effect of evidence of insurance coverage. — Pedestrian and the pedestrian's spouse sued a driver over an auto accident. The trial court properly refused to allow plaintiffs to ask whether the driver had entered into an agreement with their uninsured motorist (UM) carrier in exchange for testifying as the trial court could have reasonably concluded that the prejudice resulting from revealing the UM policy outweighed any probative value of evidence of the carrier's waiver of subrogation claims against the driver. McClellan v. Evans, 294 Ga. App. 595, 669 S.E.2d 554 (2008).

Ethnic identity of unknown driver not irrelevant. — In a wrongful death case where the jury determined that an unknown third driver was 90 percent at fault in causing an accident, it was not error to allow a witness to characterize the third driver as Hispanic. The evidence was relevant to show that the witness was paying sufficient attention and was close enough to the vehicle to identify the driver, and the court would not assume that characterizing someone as Hispanic was prejudicial or that the jurors acted out of prejudice. State Farm v. Nelson, 296 Ga. App. 47, 673 S.E.2d 588 (2009).

Testimony on date rape drug admitted. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying an auto driver's motion in limine and in permitting a man, with whom the driver had been prior to an auto accident, to testify that the driver of the car, who collided the driver's car with another vehicle, had been at the man's residence to provide sex for money as the evidence was relevant to the driver's defense that the man had secretly slipped the driver a date rape drug, causing the driver to flee from the man. Further, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in granting the motion to the extent that the man could only testify as to the woman being a prostitute as impeachment evidence. Jackson v. Heard, 264 Ga. App. 620, 591 S.E.2d 487 (2003).

Character. — General character of the defendant and the defendant's conduct in other transactions is irrelevant unless the defendant chooses to put the defendant's character in issue. Bacon v. State, 209 Ga. 261, 71 S.E.2d 615 (1952); Brown v. State, 118 Ga. App. 617, 165 S.E.2d 185 (1968); Dawson v. State, 120 Ga. App. 242, 170 S.E.2d 45 (1969); Wooten v. State, 125 Ga. App. 635, 188 S.E.2d 409 (1972); Nooner v. State, 131 Ga. App. 563, 206 S.E.2d 660 (1974); Mikle v. State, 236 Ga. 748, 225 S.E.2d 275 (1976); Brown v. State, 237 Ga. 467, 228 S.E.2d 853 (1976).

For cases concerning evidence of state of mind, plan, intent, or motive. — See Thomas v. State, 244 Ga. 608, 261 S.E.2d 389 (1979); Smith v. State, 151 Ga. App. 697, 261 S.E.2d 439 (1979); Walker v. State, 156 Ga. App. 842, 275 S.E.2d 755 (1980).

As defendant, a sheriff, was not empowered to use the sheriff's department as defendant's personal domain, evidence of corruption in the sheriff's office was relevant and admissible, and the prosecution was well within bounds when the prosecution theorized that defendant killed the victim, a political opponent, to prevent the victim from uncovering evidence of defendant's corruption. Dorsey v. State, 279 Ga. 534, 615 S.E.2d 512 (2005).

Halloween mask was properly admitted in a trial for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and aggravated sexual battery because the mask was relevant to the victim's state of mind as the victim testified that the defendant wore a Halloween mask on the night of the incident. Ward v. State, 274 Ga. App. 511, 618 S.E.2d 154 (2005).

Prior crimes committed by defendant, including the murder of a store owner and an armed robbery, were properly admitted, not as similar transactions, but as evidence to show the motive, course of conduct, and bent of mind; moreover, evidence of the robbery was sufficiently similar to the current armed robbery charges. Grimes v. State, 280 Ga. 363, 628 S.E.2d 580 (2006).

In a prosecution for the murder of a woman, the state was properly permitted to adduce evidence of defendant's attempted rape of one woman and the kidnapping and sexual molestation of another; as both incidents showed a pattern of tricking women into vulnerable situations, then restraining the women for the purpose of sexual assault; thus, the incidents were admissible to show defendant's plan, scheme, motive, intent, and frame of mind, including lustful disposition. Hinton v. State, 280 Ga. 811, 631 S.E.2d 365 (2006).

Defendant's demeanor at the time of arrest. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by allowing a detective who arrested defendant after defendant took a woman's purse to testify that, when defendant was arrested, defendant was uncooperative, verbally combative, and smelled of alcohol. Moore v. State, 265 Ga. App. 511, 594 S.E.2d 734 (2004).

Circumstances of defendant's arrest. — Gun was properly admitted into evidence at a trial on sex offenses because the gun was relevant to the issue of a witness's alleged bias and was also admissible as evidence of the circumstances of the defendant's arrest; on the night of the defendant's arrest, the witness told the police that the defendant had just raped the witness's niece and was carrying a 9mm gun. Ward v. State, 274 Ga. App. 511, 618 S.E.2d 154 (2005).

Trial court did not err in admitting evidence that police were at the defendant's residence to serve defendant with an arrest warrant because that evidence did not improperly place the issue of character into evidence, but was necessary to explain why police were able to detain, handcuff, and search the defendant. Moreover, a limiting instruction was also issued advising the jurors that they were not to consider the warrant for any purpose other than to explain the officers' presence at the defendant's home. Thrasher v. State, 289 Ga. App. 399, 657 S.E.2d 316 (2008).

Defendant's statement of prior altercation with victim. — Introduction of evidence of a prior altercation between defendant and the victim contained in defendant's exculpatory statement was proper as the evidence was relevant to defendant's motive, intent, and bent of mind; the fact that the evidence placed defendant's character at issue did not require exclusion of the evidence. Reed v. State, 279 Ga. 81, 610 S.E.2d 35 (2005).

Commission of independent offenses. — Evidence which in any manner shows or tends to show that the accused has committed another crime separate and distinct from that for which the accused is on trial is generally irrelevant and inadmissible, unless there be shown some logical connection between the two from which it can be said that proof of the one tends to establish the other. Patterson v. State, 121 Ga. App. 159, 172 S.E.2d 873 (1970); Wooten v. State, 125 Ga. App. 635, 188 S.E.2d 409 (1972); Banks v. State, 169 Ga. App. 645, 314 S.E.2d 480 (1984).

Evidence which shows or tends to show that the defendant has committed another crime independent of the offenses for which defendant is on trial is irrelevant and inadmissible. Laney v. State, 159 Ga. App. 609, 284 S.E.2d 114 (1981).

Evidence showing res gestae. — Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for mistrial after one of the child victims testified that defendant battered the child's grandmother shortly after the grandmother stumbled upon defendant molesting that child as the evidence supported a finding that this battering was part of the res gestae of the child molestation crime. Prather v. State, 279 Ga. App. 552, 631 S.E.2d 758 (2006).

Because the evidence presented against both the defendants showed numerous connections between the crimes such that proof of the former tended to prove the latter, and a vehicle theft committed by both the defendants earlier in the day could be considered a continuation of a crime spree and therefore admissible as part of the res gestae, the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence as similar crimes evidence. Richard v. State, 287 Ga. App. 399, 651 S.E.2d 514 (2007).

Evidence that the defendant was a drug dealer and gave the police a false name when questioned after the alleged crime was committed was admissible as relevant and part of the res gestae as the former was incidental to and followed directly from the defendant's participation in the sale of marijuana to the victim, and the latter was part of what transpired shortly after the commission of the victim's murder; moreover, this was true even if the defendant's character was incidentally placed in issue. Roberts v. State, 282 Ga. 548, 651 S.E.2d 689 (2007).

Evidence that the defendant hid under a bed when police came to execute an arrest warrant was properly admitted as the evidence was part of the res gestae of the arrest. Gilford v. State, 295 Ga. App. 651, 673 S.E.2d 40 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0827, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 258 (Ga. 2009).

When evidence of other crime admissible. — When evidence is relevant for purpose of showing circumstances of arrest, it will not be excluded because the evidence incidentally shows commission of another crime. Ray v. State, 157 Ga. App. 519, 277 S.E.2d 804 (1981).

Two competing principles must be considered in deciding whether to admit testimony relating to an offense other than the one charged: on the one hand, there is the rule that evidence of the commission of a crime other than the one charged is generally not admissible; on the other hand, there is the rule that testimony as to the circumstances connected with the arrest is admissible. Bryan v. State, 157 Ga. App. 635, 278 S.E.2d 177 (1981).

Evidence of other crimes may be admitted if there is sufficient similarity or connection between the other crimes and the crime charged that proof of the former tends to prove the latter. Ballweg v. State, 158 Ga. App. 576, 281 S.E.2d 319 (1981).

While no gun was used in committing the crimes for which the defendant was being tried, evidence of the gun used in a prior aggravated assault and armed robbery of a separate victim was relevant to the charges being tried because the evidence connected the defendant to the identification documents presented to police in close proximity to the instant victim's body by the person who had custody of the victim's car on the day the victim was killed. Brooks v. State, 281 Ga. 514, 640 S.E.2d 280 (2007).

Because evidence of the defendant's prior drug use, and history of crimes committed against family members fueled by that drug use, were properly admitted as relevant to the crime's charged, despite incidentally placing the defendant's character in issue, convictions for both aggravated assault and simple assault were upheld on appeal. Jones v. State, 283 Ga. App. 812, 642 S.E.2d 887 (2007).

Prior conviction of person not testifying inadmissible. — Defendant's attempt to introduce a prior conviction of a person who did not testify or appear at the trial was correctly rejected by the trial court as irrelevant to the issues on trial. Holder v. State, 194 Ga. App. 790, 391 S.E.2d 808 (1990).

Criminal convictions of a person not called as a witness were not admissible for purposes of impeachment, and since the person's criminal history was not otherwise relevant, its exclusion under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-1 was proper. Gadson v. State, 252 Ga. App. 347, 556 S.E.2d 449 (2001).

Testimony that defendant was suspected of the theft of a gun used in committing offenses was probative of whether defendant was in possession of a particular gun, the purpose for which the testimony was offered. Baker v. State, 225 Ga. App. 848, 485 S.E.2d 548 (1997).

Prior difficulties evidence. — When the defendant was charged with aggravated assault, evidence of a previous incident when the defendant had punched the victim in the face while the victim was sleeping was admissible as prior difficulties evidence because the evidence was relevant to show the defendant's motive, intent, and bent of mind. McCullors v. State, 291 Ga. App. 393, 662 S.E.2d 197 (2008).

Prior conduct by victim. — In a murder prosecution in which the defendant admitted that the defendant killed the victim, but claimed that the defendant was justified in doing so because of his daughter's molestation by the victim, evidence of the alleged molestation was not relevant since the law will not justify a killing for deliberate revenge no matter how grievous the past wrong may have been. Brown v. State, 270 Ga. 601, 512 S.E.2d 260 (1999).

Testimony that defendant was suspected of the theft of a gun used in committing offenses was probative of whether defendant was in possession of a particular gun, the purpose for which the testimony was offered. Baker v. State, 225 Ga. App. 848, 485 S.E.2d 548 (1997).

In a prosecution for rape, the trial court properly barred defendant's cross-examination of a police officer about whether the victim's stepfather told the officer that someone had told the stepfather that the victim was pregnant. Lee v. State, 241 Ga. App. 182, 525 S.E.2d 426 (1999).

Trial court's error in not permitting the defendant to show that the wife's minor daughter, whom the defendant was charged with molesting, made an allegation of molestation with respect to another individual that the daughter later denied, was harmless given the overwhelming evidence against defendant, including the facts that there was photographic evidence that the daughter was molested in the defendant's bedroom, that the wife and the daughter's uncle both identified the daughter in the photographs, that a Polaroid camera like that used to take the photographs was found in defendant's home, that the wife had testified that she had not left the daughter alone in the house with any man other than defendant, and that the photographs were found in a house owned by defendant in a file containing personal items. Holloway v. State, 278 Ga. App. 709, 629 S.E.2d 447 (2006).

In a felony murder and aggravated assault prosecution, the trial court did not err in excluding evidence of the victim's prior violent acts, given that at the time of the confrontation with the defendant, the victim was no longer the aggressor, any prior confrontation between the two had already ended, and when the defendant confronted the victim with a loaded gun, the defendant became the aggressor, precipitating the deadly confrontation that ensued; hence, the defendant failed to make a prima facie showing of justification. Milner v. State, 281 Ga. 612, 641 S.E.2d 517 (2007).

mitted against him was properly admitted in order to show the defendant's bent of mind and lustful disposition towards the defendant's own children. McCoy v. State, 278 Ga. App. 492, 629 S.E.2d 493 (2006).

Evidence of victim's relationship. — In a murder prosecution in which the victim's body was never found, evidence of the victim's relationships at the time of the victim's disappearance was relevant because it rendered the inference that the victim did not run away but was killed more probable than it would be without the evidence. Hinton v. State, 280 Ga. 811, 631 S.E.2d 365 (2006).

In a murder trial, testimony from the victim's girlfriend regarding their relationship was not irrelevant; the girlfriend called police to report that the victim was missing, and she explained that she did so because of their relationship. Simmons v. State, 282 Ga. 183, 646 S.E.2d 55 (2007).

Because the victim's understanding of what the state had to prove to obtain a conviction was irrelevant, the defendant was properly curtailed from questioning the victim on this matter. Mayhew v. State, 299 Ga. App. 313, 682 S.E.2d 594 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C2059, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 786 (Ga. 2009).

Items found at the scene of the defendant's arrest are relevant and are admissible at trial. Thompson v. State, 168 Ga. App. 734, 310 S.E.2d 725 (1983).

Evidence of defendant's 28 years of physical and psychological abuse by defendant's two former spouses was properly excluded at defendant's trial for murder since the defendant was permitted to adequately testify as to the facts in the defendant's relationship with the victim which allegedly caused the defendant's fear of the victim. Clenney v. State, 256 Ga. 116, 344 S.E.2d 216 (1986).

Flight, even an escape from jail after the offense, is a circumstance which may be weighed by the jury in connection with other circumstances to determine the guilt of the accused. The fact that an escape from the courthouse during trial was involved does not remove such conduct from O.C.G.A. § 24-2-1. Smith v. State, 184 Ga. App. 739, 362 S.E.2d 384, cert. denied, 184 Ga. App. 910, 362 S.E.2d 384 (1987).

Chain of custody and tampering. — In proving chain of custody, the state is not required to show that a substance is guarded each minute the substance is in one's custody, and in the absence of a showing to the contrary, the chain is not thereby broken. Williams v. State, 153 Ga. App. 421, 265 S.E.2d 341 (1980).

When there is only a bare speculation of tampering, it is proper to admit the evidence and let what doubt remains go to the weight of the evidence. Williams v. State, 153 Ga. App. 421, 265 S.E.2d 341 (1980); Mayfield v. State, 153 Ga. App. 459, 265 S.E.2d 366 (1980); Thompson v. State, 154 Ga. App. 704, 269 S.E.2d 474 (1980).

Because defendant produced no affirmative evidence of tampering, substitution, or mishandling of the methamphetamine at the crime lab, there was no error in treating the crime lab as a single link in the chain of custody for admissibility purposes. Eaton v. State, 294 Ga. App. 124, 668 S.E.2d 770 (2008).

Exclusion of battered person's syndrome evidence. — If the defendant suffered from a psychological condition that caused the defendant to believe the defendant had to hurt the defendant's child to help the child, the only way the jury could know about such a condition was through expert testimony, and thus, it was error to exclude the defendant's proffered expert testimony of battered person syndrome; however, such error was harmless given the overwhelming weight of evidence which established that the defendant's conduct was knowing, if not intentional. Pickle v. State, 280 Ga. App. 821, 635 S.E.2d 197 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 110, 111 (Ga. 2007).

Refusal to allow defendant to stipulate to intercourse in rape trial. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion when the court refused to allow a defendant to stipulate to having sex with a rape victim in an effort to keep evidence of the victim's rape related pregnancy, her subsequent abortion, and DNA evidence that showed that there was a 99.9969% probability that the defendant had fathered the aborted fetus from being presented to the jury; the evidence was relevant to the state's case against the defendant, particularly because the defendant had denied any sexual contact with the victim, and the defendant could not selectively choose which incriminating evidence the defendant would admit to. Mims v. State,

For cases concerning photographic and diagrammatic evidence. — See Smith v. State, 202 Ga. 851, 45 S.E.2d 267 (1947) (general admissibility); Crittenden v. State, 98 Ga. App. 329, 105 S.E.2d 778 (1958) (skid marks); Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979) (photograph of rape victim's injuries); Gates v. State, 262 Ga. 888, 427 S.E.2d 490 (1993) (photograph of deceased); Gaylor v. State, 247 Ga. 759, 279 S.E.2d 207 (1981) (photograph of deceased); Williams v. State, 255 Ga. 97, 335 S.E.2d 553 (1985) (photograph of child in hospital bed surrounded by medical equipment); Gosdin v. State, 176 Ga. App. 381, 336 S.E.2d 261 (1985) (photograph of defendant printed from negative taken from camera allegedly stolen by defendant); Pittman v. State, 178 Ga. App. 693, 344 S.E.2d 511 (1986) (anatomically correct diagram of child molestation victim's body).

Exhibits properly admitted. — There was no prejudice to the defendant in the admission of exhibits which merely showed the lead fragments, displayed against a neutral background, that were removed from the victim's head; admission of evidence of "prior difficulties" between the two groups was proper to explain how two people became the innocent victims of the two groups' hostilities. Perry v. State, 276 Ga. 836, 585 S.E.2d 614, rev'd, 276 Ga. 839, 584 S.E.2d 253 (2003).

Photographs of the victim of a crime are admissible when the photographs are relevant on the issues in the case, although the photographs may be inflammatory and prejudicial to the accused. Whitaker v. State, 246 Ga. 163, 269 S.E.2d 436 (1980).

When defendants contended defendants were not responsible for the injuries and poor physical condition of deceased child, 12 photos of the body and one of clothing were relevant to the issues in the case to show the unlikelihood that these injuries would have been self-inflicted or accidental, as were autopsy photographs of a fractured rib. Lackey v. State, 246 Ga. 331, 271 S.E.2d 478 (1980).

Photographs of body of victim showing the body's location when found and various aspects of the wounds causing death were relevant and material to show that the victim was bludgeoned and shot twice in the head. Knowles v. State, 246 Ga. 378, 271 S.E.2d 615 (1980); Dick v. State, 246 Ga. 697, 273 S.E.2d 124 (1980); Strickland v. State, 247 Ga. 219, 275 S.E.2d 29, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 882, 102 S. Ct. 365, 70 L. Ed. 2d 192 (1981) (photographs of victims of crime, wounds, location).

In a prosecution for a violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2), as the indictment alleged that the aggravated assault was committed with objects likely to cause serious bodily injury (a broom handle and the defendant's feet and hands), photos depicting the condition of the victim, one of which depicted the defendant's foot print on the victim's face, were relevant to establish the nature and extent of the injury. Massey v. State, 278 Ga. App. 303, 628 S.E.2d 706 (2006).

Trial court did not err by admitting three photographs of a victim's bullet wound to the head and two photographs of defendant's handgun as the photographs were not repetitive or cumulative, and the photographs presented the evidence from different distances and vantage points in order to accurately depict the nature and location of the victim's wound and the location of the weapon when the weapon was found; moreover, the victim's injuries and the weapon used to inflict those injuries were obviously relevant to the charges against defendant. Smith v. State, 279 Ga. App. 211, 630 S.E.2d 833 (2006).

Trial court properly admitted one of three photographs of the victim's body which showed an exterior mark of strangulation as such was not overly gruesome and inflammatory; moreover, pre-incision photos of a victim which depicted the location and nature of the victim's wounds were admissible as both relevant and material. McWilliams v. State, 280 Ga. 724, 632 S.E.2d 127 (2006).

Defendant's motion for a mistrial based on the admission of a photograph of the victim's head was not an abuse of discretion as: (1) if pre-autopsy photographs were relevant and material to any issue in the case, those photographs were admissible even if those photographs were duplicative and might inflame the jury; (2) photographs showing the extent and nature of the victim's wounds were material and relevant, even if the cause of death was not in dispute; (3) the state had the burden to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant caused the death of the victim with malice aforethought; and (4) the photograph was relevant to the state's claim that the defendant had done so by shooting a single shot into the victim's head. Bradley v. State, 281 Ga. 173, 637 S.E.2d 19 (2006).

Photographs of a victim's body, after the body had been taken to the crime lab, were material, relevant, and admissible as the photographs showed the location, nature, and extent of the victim's multiple gunshot wounds. Thomason v. State, 281 Ga. 429, 637 S.E.2d 639 (2006).

Photograph showing the victim's vagina and bloody underwear was relevant to show that the victim had been raped and to refute the defendant's assertion that her injuries resulted from a kick to the groin. Smith v. State, 291 Ga. App. 545, 662 S.E.2d 323 (2008).

Skeletal remains. — Trial court did not err in admitting the victim's skeletal remains in a murder trial since the remains were used to illustrate portions of the testimony of an expert forensic anthropologist. Quedens v. State, 280 Ga. 355, 629 S.E.2d 197 (2006).

Tape of prior telephone conversation with witness admissible for impeachment. — In a trial for theft by deception, the trial court erred in ruling inadmissible the tape recording of a telephone conversation between a witness and defendant's father after a determination was made, through questions posed to the witness and defendant's father, that it was authentic, accurate and complete and since it was offered for impeachment by showing discrepancies between the witness's representations about certain facts made during the telephone conversation and the witness's trial testimony regarding those same facts pertaining to the issues of whether defendant intended to deceive clients. Riceman v. State, 166 Ga. App. 825, 305 S.E.2d 595 (1983).

Trial court properly disallowed forensic pathologist (as defense witness) to testify: (1) why neurologists and neurosurgeons consulted with the pathologist; and (2) that many cases of suspected child abuse in which the pathologist had been consulted had been determined to be accidental; as neither response would have tended to show the guilt or innocence of the defendant of the offense of aggravated battery for which defendant was being tried. Cohn v. State, 186 Ga. App. 816, 368 S.E.2d 572 (1988).

Police dogs. — Even when it is shown that a dog is of pure blood and of a stock characterized by acuteness of scent and power of discrimination, it must also be established that the dog is possessed of these qualities, and has been trained or tested in their exercise in the tracking of human beings, and that these facts must appear from the testimony of some person who has personal knowledge thereof. O'Quinn v. State, 153 Ga. App. 467, 265 S.E.2d 824 (1980).

Prior verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity irrelevant in subsequent prosecution. — Defendant's mental state at defendant's previous trial for burglary and assault to commit rape at which defendant was found not guilty by reason of insanity was irrelevant to any issue in defendant's subsequent trial for another rape and thus was properly excluded. Crapse v. State, 180 Ga. App. 321, 349 S.E.2d 190 (1986).

Prior acquittals irrelevant in perjury trial. — Prior acquittals in two trials for child molestation had no probative value in a trial for perjury committed at those trials because evidence of the acquittals was neither relevant nor material to any issue in the perjury case. West v. State, 228 Ga. App. 713, 492 S.E.2d 576 (1997).

Pretrial identifications. — Victim's pretrial identifications of defendant and codefendant, as being the persons riding together in the automobile in which they ultimately were arrested and in which a .25 caliber pistol was found, were relevant within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-2-1. If evidence is relevant, no matter how slightly, the evidence generally should be admitted and the weight of the evidence left to the jury. Buckner v. State, 209 Ga. App. 107, 433 S.E.2d 94 (1993).

Trial court did not err in denying a motion in limine to exclude the testimony of a state witness that allegedly placed the defendant's character in issue because the testimony was relevant to establish the defendant's identity and appearance on that date of the charged crime, and was not rendered inadmissible merely because the testimony incidentally placed the defendant's character in issue. Moreover, the defendant's trial counsel conceded that the witness's testimony regarding the description was admissible. Buice v. State, 289 Ga. App. 415, 657 S.E.2d 326 (2008).

Movie about body disposal. — In a joint trial of two defendants, the trial court did not err in showing the jury portions of a movie which depicted a method of disposing of a murdered victim's body as: (1) such was relevant to show a bent of mind, despite the fact that it could have placed the first defendant's character in issue; and (2) the jury could have made the permissible inference that the first defendant was encouraged by the movie to order the manner of disposing of the victim's body; moreover, because the second defendant failed to request a cautionary instruction to adequately protect from this inference, the second defendant could not complain of the inference on appeal. Oree v. State, 280 Ga. 588, 630 S.E.2d 390 (2006).

Expert testimony on Chinese culture which defendant claimed would have cast light on the defendant's motivations, state of mind, and actions was properly excluded since such evidence would not have aided the jury in the jury's search for the truth.

243 Ga. App. 282, 531 S.E.2d 175 (2000) (fingerprints).

Testimony of medical examiner relevant.

— Trial court did not err in permitting a medical examiner to testify that inasmuch as the victim's body was discovered in a wooded area approximately 20 miles from the victim's house, the victim's death was "most likely" a homicide; defendant did not object to the testimony and the testimony was not improper under the circumstances of the case. Watson v. State, 278 Ga. 763, 604 S.E.2d 804 (2004).

Hypnotic session was relevant evidence.

— Witness was properly permitted to testify even though the recording of the witness's hypnotic session was unavailable and the witness's pre-hypnotic oral statement was not reduced contemporaneously to a writing as the trial court went to great lengths to ensure that the witness's testimony was not tainted or corrupted by hypnotic suggestion and all of the testimony was cumulative of other evidence admitted. Watson v. State, 278 Ga. 763, 604 S.E.2d 804 (2004).

Officer's testimony relevant. — Trial court properly admitted a police officer's testimony that the officer learned from independent sources that the officer was searching for a suspect named "Little B" as several witnesses referred to defendant by the defendant's nickname and it was necessary to establish that "Little B" and defendant were the same person. Lewis v. State, 279 Ga. 69, 608 S.E.2d 602, cert. denied, 546 U.S. 987, 126 S. Ct. 571, 163 L. Ed. 2d 478 (2005).

Although the state prematurely bolstered a child victim's testimony, the parties knew that the victim's credibility would be immediately undermined; evidence that defendant told the victim that a relative had been imprisoned for improper "touching" and that defendant masturbated with the victim's underwear were admissible as relevant. Robinson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 537, 621 S.E.2d 770 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel for the failure of counsel to object to a passing reference to defendant's incarceration as the reason for defendant not being arrested sooner and to the initial arrest as being part of a "roundup"; all of the circumstances connected with a defendant's arrest were admissible, even those that established the commission of another criminal offense, if they were relevant and the testimony was relevant to counter any accusation that defendant's arrest was delayed due to lack of identification. Butler v. State, 277 Ga. App. 57, 625 S.E.2d 458 (2005).

Testimony of nurse treating child relevant.

— In a defendant's trial for cruelty to a child, a nurse's testimony as to the nurse's decision to report an incident to explain the hospital's course of conduct regarding a child services agency was relevant to the child's care and future well-being; the trial court had wide discretion in determining relevancy and materiality and, where relevancy was doubtful, the evidence was properly admitted and the weight of the evidence left for the jury's determination. Revells v. State, 283 Ga. App. 59, 640 S.E.2d 587 (2006).

Written note relevant. — Because a note found in the defendant's truck contained information that could have linked the note's author to the armed robbery charged, such was properly admitted as relevant; any issue as to whether the note was written by the defendant or by someone else was an issue affecting the weight of the evidence, not the admissibility of the evidence, and therefore was for the jury to decide. Clark v. State, 283 Ga. App. 884, 642 S.E.2d 900 (2007).

Possession of a handgun was relevant. — Evidence that the defendant was in possession of a handgun "around the time of the shooting" was relevant and material to a charge of possession of a weapon by a convicted felon. Jones v. State, 282 Ga. 306, 647 S.E.2d 576 (2007).

In an assault trial, after the defendant claimed that the victim had raped the defendant's sibling, evidence that one of the defendant's parents was indicted for extortion and other offenses in connection with the rape charge and that the parent pled guilty to some charges was properly admitted; the indictment and plea, as well as the fact that the indictment led to the dismissal of the rape charges, were relevant to the issue of the victim's credibility. Gonzales v. State, 286 Ga. App. 821, 650 S.E.2d 401 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 70 (Ga. 2008).

Because the trial court erroneously excluded evidence relevant to the defendant's claim that there was provocation sufficient to excuse the use of the fighting words the defendant uttered and made the basis of a disorderly conduct charge, the defendant's conviction was reversed; moreover, in determining whether or not there was sufficient provocation for the defendant's use of the fighting words uttered, the jury was entitled to consider all the facts and circumstances tending to prove provocation, not just facts and circumstances contemporaneous with the use of the fighting words. Talmadge v. State, 287 Ga. App. 332, 651 S.E.2d 469 (2007).

Testimony about drugs was relevant. — In a child molestation case, the victim's testimony that the defendant gave the victim drugs and that this always led up to sexual intercourse was relevant, as the testimony had some bearing on the issues being tried. Boynton v. State, 287 Ga. App. 778, 653 S.E.2d 110 (2007).

Evidence that a drug defendant went to a hotel room to have sex was relevant and admissible to support the state's theory that the defendant was at the hotel room to exchange sex for drugs. Gassett v. State, 289 Ga. App. 792, 658 S.E.2d 366 (2008).

Testimony about blood test relevant. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in allowing an arresting officer to testify that the defendant had requested and received an independent blood test in accordance with the defendant's rights under implied consent laws as the defendant contested the results of the state's blood test, arguing that the results were skewed and unreliable due to the unknown storage conditions of the defendant's blood sample while in route to a lab. Consequently, the fact that the defendant requested and received an independent test which the defendant failed to produce at trial was relevant to a material issue in the case. Schlanger v. State, 290 Ga. App. 407, 659 S.E.2d 823 (2008).

Admission of weapon relevant. — There was no merit to the defendant's claim that it was error to admit a knife into evidence. The fact that a knife was found on the defendant's person at the time of the defendant's arrest was clearly relevant to the issue of whether the defendant, who was convicted of aggravated assault, had assaulted the victim with a deadly weapon. Brown v. State, 293 Ga. App. 224, 666 S.E.2d 600 (2008).

Because the crimes committed by defendant following the shooting of the victim were relevant to show defendant's attempt to obtain money and vehicles to flee following the shooting, the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence in question. Hardnett v. State, 285 Ga. 470, 678 S.E.2d 323 (2009).

Discovery of relevant evidence properly allowed. — In a prosecution for DUI, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to suppress the blood test evidence, as the trial court properly allowed the discovery of notes, memoranda, graphs, or computer printouts pertaining to the blood sample taken, as well as all chain of custody documentation, because they were the only items deemed relevant to the prosecution; suppression of the blood test results was not required as the defendant waived error on appeal as to the absence of one of the two lab testers. Cottrell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 89, 651 S.E.2d 444 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 816 (Ga. 2007).

Evidence not relevant. — See Walker v. State, 86 Ga. App. 875, 72 S.E.2d 774 (1952); Davis v. State, 115 Ga. App. 338, 154 S.E.2d 462 (1967); Brown v. State, 118 Ga. App. 617, 165 S.E.2d 185 (1968); Dawson v. State, 120 Ga. App. 242, 170 S.E.2d 45 (1969); Mikle v. State, 236 Ga. 748, 225 S.E.2d 275 (1976) (prior criminal record); Strickland v. State, 247 Ga. 219, 275 S.E.2d 29, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 882, 102 S. Ct. 365, 70 L. Ed. 2d 192 (1981) (mental capability of accused to stand trial at a future date).

Results of drug test irrelevant. — Trial court did not err in disallowing defendant's testimony as to results of a test for use of illegal drugs. Whether defendant tested negative for drug use at any time is not relevant to, and did not tend to prove or disprove, whether defendant trafficked in or possessed cocaine as charged in the indictment. Montgomery v. State, 204 Ga. App. 534, 420 S.E.2d 67 (1992).

Name of bookie irrelevant. — Even though inquiry concerning a victim's gambling activities in general may have been relevant, the name of the bookie's bookie had no direct or indirect relevancy to defendant's guilt or innocence. Sorrells v. State, 236 Ga. 571, 476 S.E.2d 571 (1996).

Expert's testimony on Intoxilyzer 5000 irrelevant. — Trial court did not err when it excluded an expert witness's testimony about the Intoxilyzer 5000 and the proper procedures pertaining to refusals of the breath test because the state was simply required to show that the defendant was a less safe driver as a result of alcohol that the defendant had consumed and the expert's testimony about the breath test was irrelevant. Stone v. State, 248 Ga. App. 190, 546 S.E.2d 787 (2000).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in excluding expert evidence defendant sought to introduce that allegedly would have attacked the results of defendant's breath test in defendant's driving while under the influence of alcohol case as the expert evidence was too remote and uncertain to be relevant to the issue for which defendant sought to introduce the evidence, that of whether the breath test machine malfunctioned. Viau v. State, 260 Ga. App. 96, 579 S.E.2d 52 (2003).

Videotape evidence irrelevant and excluded. — In action alleging obstruction of an officer, the trial court did not err in excluding a videotape of the party from evidence as not relevant because the videotape could not have been used to impeach the deputy's testimony; the videotape did not depict the encounter between the deputy and defendant but only depicted events prior to the deputy's arrival at defendant's home. Schroeder v. State, 261 Ga. App. 879, 583 S.E.2d 922 (2003).

Trial court did not err in excluding a videotape of a statement defendant gave to a detective at the time of the defendant's arrest as the statement was not offered to rebut a charge of recent fabrication, improper influence, or improper motive and was pure hearsay. Watson v. State, 278 Ga. 763, 604 S.E.2d 804 (2004).

Threadbare evidence based on bare suspicion of a third party held inadmissible and excluded. — Defendant's proffered evidence that a third party told the proffered witness that the third party had killed people before and buried the people in the woods and that the third party then asked the witness if the witness remembered a policeman, who did not work for the city anymore, was properly excluded as it was too threadbare to be admissible and did nothing more than toss a bare suspicion in the direction of a third party. Watson v. State, 278 Ga. 763, 604 S.E.2d 804 (2004).

Questions about drug involvement irrelevant. — Trial court properly limited defendant's cross-examination of a drug dealer who defendant claimed was the actual shooter who killed the victim by excluding all questions about the drug dealer's involvement in selling drugs as those questions were irrelevant to the murder trial. Lewis v. State, 279 Ga. 69, 608 S.E.2d 602, cert. denied, 546 U.S. 987, 126 S. Ct. 571, 163 L. Ed. 2d 478 (2005).

While a defendant was entitled to introduce relevant and admissible testimony tending to show that another person committed the crime for which the defendant was tried, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in excluding evidence that an individual the defendant went to go visit on the night of the arrest was a known drug dealer and had been arrested on drug charges, as there was no evidence tending to connect that person to the marijuana found in the defendant's vehicle; hence, the evidence failed to raise a reasonable inference of the defendant's innocence, and did not directly connect the other person with the corpus delicti, or show that the other person recently committed a crime of the same or similar nature. Gerlock v. State, 283 Ga. App. 229, 641 S.E.2d 240 (2007).

Questions about relationship with nondefendant irrelevant. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in disallowing a defendant's cross-examination of a victim's mother, about her marriage to the defendant's son as to whether the mother was "debating" with her husband "over someone giving the other person venereal disease," on relevancy grounds as the line of questioning involved the mother's relationship with her husband, rather than with the defendant. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 884, 635 S.E.2d 240 (2006).

Expert on alco-sensor test properly excluded. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in refusing to admit the testimony of a defendant's expert because the mistake charged to an arresting officer in administering an alco-sensor test too soon after the officer first stopped the defendant would not have affected the test result to which the arresting officer testified since the defendant admitted that defendant had been drinking, and the trial court admitted only the officer's testimony that the alco-sensor produced a positive result. Oliver v. State, 294 Ga. App. 299, 669 S.E.2d 162 (2008).

Admission of challenged evidence deemed harmless error. — In a prosecution against the defendant for child molestation, enticing a child for indecent purposes, and exhibiting pornography to a minor, even if the appeals court assumed that the word "catheter" should have been redacted from what the defendant apparently conceded was an otherwise relevant list of items found in a search, the trial court's failure to do so was harmless error, because it was highly improbable that such failure contributed to the verdict given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt. Goldey v. State, 289 Ga. App. 198, 656 S.E.2d 549 (2008).

Evidence of abuse of victim's sibling irrelevant. — In a child molestation case involving the defendant's child, the trial court properly excluded as irrelevant evidence that the child's stepparent had sexually molested the child's sibling. There was no evidence that the child had been molested by the stepparent or by anyone else besides the defendant, and the defendant did not show how the child might have been affected or improperly influenced by the sibling's allegations. French v. State, 288 Ga. App. 775, 655 S.E.2d 224 (2007).

Character defined. — Character in legal parlance has the same meaning as reputation; that is, what one’s fellows say about one. Simpkins v. State, 149 Ga. App. 763, 256 S.E.2d 63 (1979).

Character evidence restricted to general reputation. — Admissibility of character evidence depends upon the general reputation of the person in the community, not what the witness knows personally about the subject. Smith v. State, 153 Ga. App. 519, 265 S.E.2d 852 (1980).

Use of character evidence. — Evidence as to character is irrelevant and inadmissible unless the evidence is used to show the character of the witness for veracity, or intended specifically to be used in the impeachment of witnesses for bad character, or equally to rebut an attempt at impeachment by a showing of good character. Edwards v. Simpson, 123 Ga. App. 44, 179 S.E.2d 266 (1970).

Evidence regarding the character of a defendant is generally inadmissible unless the defendant puts defendant’s character in issue, and evidence of independent offenses committed by a defendant is generally inadmissible due to the inherently prejudicial nature and minimal probative value of the evidence. Henderson v. State, 204 Ga. App. 884, 420 S.E.2d 813 (1992).

General character of parties and especially their conduct in other transactions are irrelevant matters unless the nature of the action involves such character and renders necessary or proper the investigation of such conduct. Vaughn v. Metro. Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co., 260 Ga. App. 573, 580 S.E.2d 323 (2003).

When character is relevant, it must be the general character and not one specific act. Stanley v. Hudson, 78 Ga. App. 834, 52 S.E.2d 567 (1949); Taylor v. Marsh, 107 Ga. App. 575, 130 S.E.2d 770 (1963).

Introduction of character by defendant. — Defendant may offer proof of defendant’s good character as a relevant fact tending to make defendant’s guilt doubtful. Rentfrow v. State, 123 Ga. 539, 51 S.E. 596 (1905); Ware v. State, 18 Ga. App. 107, 89 S.E. 155 (1916).

Introduction of character by prosecution. — State cannot put the general character of the defendant in a criminal case in issue. Moulder v. State, 9 Ga. App. 438, 71 S.E. 682 (1911).

When defendant puts the defendant’s character in issue, it is the right of the state to show that the character is bad. Strickland v. State, 12 Ga. App. 640, 77 S.E. 1070 (1913).

Trial court properly allowed a prosecutor to question defendant about any prior positive drug screens as the purpose was to impeach defendant’s unsolicited assertion that the drug screen that was the basis of defendant’s prosecution was defendant’s only positive drug screen; accordingly, although character and conduct in other transactions is generally irrelevant unless defendant first puts defendant’s character in issue, pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 24-2-2 and 24-9-20(b), evidence may be used for impeachment purposes in order to disprove facts testified to by defendant pursuant to

O.C.G.A. § 24-9-82. Lockaby v. State, 265 Ga. App. 527, 594 S.E.2d 729 (2004).

Questioning of witness about potential offer by defendant to pay for testimony. — Trial court properly denied a motion for mistrial based on the prosecution's question to a witness as to whether a defendant offered money to the witness to testify on the defendant's behalf because evidence that the defendant attempted to influence the witness's testimony could be offered to show consciousness of guilt, and in any event, any harm was mitigated by the fact that the witness answered in the negative. Branton v. State, 292 Ga. App. 104, 663 S.E.2d 414 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 873 (Ga. 2008).

Admitting evidence of independent offenses. — Evidence of independent offenses may be admitted if the state introduces the evidence for a proper purpose, if there is sufficient evidence to establish that the defendant actually committed the independent offenses, and if there is sufficient similarity between the charged offense and the independent offenses. Henderson v. State, 204 Ga. App. 884, 420 S.E.2d 813 (1992).

Transactions of a similar nature or like character to those charged in the petition in which the defendant had engaged previously to the one in question are admissible in evidence. Deckner-Willingham Lumber Co. v. Turner, 171 Ga. 240, 155 S.E. 1 (1930).

Similar acts are admissible in evidence, if committed or proposed at or about the same time, and when the same motive reasonably may be supposed to exist, with a view to establish the intent of the defendant in respect to the matters charged against the defendant in the petition; this is so in transactions of similar nature or like character in which the defendant had engaged previously to the one in question. Tapley v. Youmans, 95 Ga. App. 161, 97 S.E.2d 365 (1957).

Similar acts or omissions on other and different occasions are not generally admissible to prove like acts or omissions at a different time and place. Genins v. Geiger, 144 Ga. App. 244, 240 S.E.2d 745 (1977), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 991, 100 S. Ct. 521, 62 L. Ed. 2d 420 (1979).

Trial court erred in admitting defendant's statement to an investigating officer that defendant had not been alone with the eight-year-old molestation victim in the room where the victim alleged the molestation occurred since defendant had learned defendant's lesson when the defendant lost the defendant's spouse after the defendant ran off with a 15-year-old girl from defendant's church and got her pregnant since the statement was an improper reference to defendant's character; however, admission of the statement was not reversible error since it was highly-probable that defendant would have been convicted even absent the statement being admitted given the direct and circumstantial evidence against the defendant. Lowther v. State, 263 Ga. App. 282, 587 S.E.2d 335 (2003).

Cross-examination as to specific acts or transactions. — When the good character of a defendant is put in issue, evidence as to general bad character with respect to the particular trait may be shown in rebuttal; but in so doing it is not permissible to prove specific acts, except on cross-examination for the purpose of testing the knowledge of the defendant's witnesses, and except for the purpose of impeaching knowingly false statements made by the defendant personally to the jury or by the defendant's witnesses on cross-examination. Mimbs v. State, 189 Ga. 189, 5 S.E.2d 770 (1939); Johnson v. State, 84 Ga. App. 745, 67 S.E.2d 246 (1951); Underwood v. Atlanta & W. Point R.R., 105 Ga. App. 340, 124 S.E.2d 758, aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 218 Ga. 193, 126 S.E.2d 785 (1962); Horton v. State, 228 Ga. 690, 187 S.E.2d 677 (1972); Cowan v. State, 130 Ga. App. 320, 203 S.E.2d 311 (1973); Compher v. Georgia Waste Sys., 155 Ga. App. 819, 273 S.E.2d 200 (1980); Curry v. State, 155 Ga. App. 829, 273 S.E.2d 411 (1980).

Transactions with third parties. — It was error for the court to permit the defendant, over objection, to be interrogated on cross-examination about a transaction between the defendant and a third party, which was entirely separate and distinct. Head v. John Deere Plow Co., 71 Ga. App. 276, 30 S.E.2d 662 (1944); Yale & Towne, Inc. v. Sharpe, 118 Ga. App. 480, 164 S.E.2d 318 (1968); Dennis v. Dennis, 227 Ga. 164, 179 S.E.2d 238 (1971).

"Mug shots" and other court appearances. — Admission in evidence of a "mug shot" of the defendant does not inject the defendant's character into evidence nor does the mere presence of the defendant on trial in some other court without more inject the defendant's character into evidence. Creamer v. State, 229 Ga. 704, 194 S.E.2d 73 (1972); Tankersley v. State, 155 Ga. App. 917, 273 S.E.2d 862 (1980); Jones v. State, 156 Ga. App. 56, 274 S.E.2d 99 (1980); Price v. State, 159 Ga. App. 662, 284 S.E.2d 676 (1981).

Bolstering of testimony. — It is permissible to strengthen a witness's testimony by evidence of matters showing its consistency and reasonableness, and tending to indicate that the facts probably were as stated by the witness. Yale & Towne, Inc. v. Sharpe, 118 Ga. App. 480, 164 S.E.2d 318 (1968).

Evidence of a compromise is inherently harmful in spite of anything a judge might say in instructing a jury as to the weight to be given such evidence, and to allow testimony concerning evidence of compromise deprives a defendant of a fair and impartial trial. Boyd v. State, 146 Ga. App. 359, 246 S.E.2d 396 (1978), overruled on other grounds, Sabel v. State, 250 Ga. 640, 300 S.E.2d 663 (1983).

Similar transaction hearing sufficient despite only summary of testimony. — Similar transaction hearing was sufficient even though, instead of calling a witness to testify, the state merely proffered a summary of a witness's testimony; the state introduced no hearsay evidence during trial, and the defendant had ample opportunity to cross-examine the similar transaction witness at trial. Ellis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 17, 637 S.E.2d 729 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 66 (2007).

Standard of review. — Absent an abuse of discretion, a trial court's ruling as to the admissibility of similar transaction evidence will not be disturbed. Hostetler v. State, 261 Ga. App. 237, 582 S.E.2d 197 (2003).

Appellate court will not disturb a trial court's determination that similar transaction evidence is admissible absent an abuse of discretion. Cain v. State, 268 Ga. App. 39, 601 S.E.2d 415 (2004).

Civil Cases

Question established credibility. — Testimony was not prejudicial to the plaintiff when defense counsel asked the defendants' expert witness whether the expert had participated in a particular religious program and to describe the program. This question served only to help introduce the witness to the jury and to contribute to establishment of the expert's credibility; it did not present a basis for reversing the jury's verdict. Brannen v. Prince, 204 Ga. App. 866, 421 S.E.2d 76 (1992), overruled on other grounds, Smith v. Finch, 285 Ga. 709, 681 S.E.2d 147 (2009).

Similar transaction evidence on failure to pay. — In a complaint alleging failure to pay pursuant to a contract for accounting services, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow testimony which stated that the charges of other accountants and attorneys who worked for the defendant on the same project were approximately twice as much as their original estimates and that the defendant had failed to pay when the plaintiffs claimed that their charges were also double the amount originally estimated due to delays caused by the defendant in light of the similarity of the transactions involved and the issue of bad faith. Candler v. Davis & Upchurch, 204 Ga. App. 167, 419 S.E.2d 69 (1992).

In an action involving an insurer's attempt to cancel a policy for nonpayment of a premium, evidence of the insured's history of tardy payment of bills was properly excluded. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Drury, 222 Ga. App. 196, 474 S.E.2d 64 (1996).

Evidence of defendant's character is admissible in fraud cases. German Am. Mut. Life Ass'n v. Farley, 102 Ga. 720, 29 S.E. 615 (1897); Mays v. Mays, 153 Ga. 835, 113 S.E. 154 (1922), aff'd on other grounds, 33 Ga. App. 335, 126 S.E. 299 (1924); Wimberly v. Toney, 175 Ga. 416, 165 S.E. 257 (1932); Lawler v. Life Ins. Co. of Ga., 90 Ga. App. 481, 83 S.E.2d 281, rev'd on other grounds, 211 Ga. 246, 85 S.E.2d 1 (1954); Kilgore v. United States, 467 F.2d 22 (5th Cir. 1972).

While evidence of the insured's general good character is relevant and admissible in a suit on the insured's policy of insurance, since the insurer defends on the ground that the insured perpetrated a fraud on the insurer in procuring the insured's policy; yet, in a case where such fraud is shown by witnesses who swear positively to facts sustaining the defense of fraud, the jury is not authorized to find from evidence of the insured's good character alone that the plaintiff has shown plaintiff's right to recover by a preponderance of evidence. Life Ins. Co. v. Lawler, 211 Ga. 246, 85 S.E.2d 1 (1954).

Other transactions showing fraud. — Evidence that parties charged with having been engaged in a fraudulent scheme to defraud laborers and materialmen in a building transaction had proposed, or had been engaged in, similar fraudulent schemes, is admissible to show fraudulent intent in the transaction in controversy, if it is shown that the other transactions were fraudulent and that the transactions were so connected in point of time and otherwise with the one in issue as to make it apparent that all were proposed or carried out in pursuance of a common fraudulent purpose. Deckner-Willingham Lumber Co. v. Turner, 171 Ga. 240, 155 S.E. 1 (1930).

Other transactions showing fraud are admissible to show intent. Tapley v. Youmans, 95 Ga. App. 161, 97 S.E.2d 365 (1957).

In an action for fraud involving a construction contract, evidence of unrelated contract disputes that defendant had purportedly evincing fraudulent intent was admissible. John W. Rooker & Assocs., Inc. v. Wilen Mfg. Co., 211 Ga. App. 519, 439 S.E.2d 740 (1993).

Character irrelevant in negligence cases. — In actions arising out of automobile collisions, the issue is the negligence or nonnegligence of the operator at the time and place of the event, and each such transaction is to be ascertained by its own circumstances and not by the reputation or character of the parties. Grannemann v. Salley, 95 Ga. App. 778, 99 S.E.2d 338 (1957).

Reputation of a defendant or defendant's employee for exercising care in the defendant's actions is not admissible to show that due care was exercised on the occasion in question. Georgia Ports Auth. v. Mitsubishi Int'l Corp., 156 Ga. App. 304, 274 S.E.2d 699 (1980).

In an action arising out of an auto accident, evidence of deceased's prior drug and alcohol use and prior conduct was irrelevant to the question of liability and the issue of damages. Taylor v. RaceTrac Petroleum, Inc., 238 Ga. App. 761, 519 S.E.2d 282 (1999).

Habit and customs. — Witness may testify as to the witness's fixed and uniform habit but not as to the habit and customs of another, when the actor is available to testify personally. Feinberg v. Durga, 189 Ga. App. 733, 377 S.E.2d 33 (1988).

Evidence of quality of work from other employees. — In a suit to recover commissions advanced to an agent prior to termination of the agent's employment, testimony from the agent's other employers that the service the agent had rendered the agent's customers was not valuable, was properly excluded; the agent's conduct in transactions involving other employers was not relevant, and would unduly prejudice the jury. Duggan Ins. Agency, Inc. v. Altschul, 195 Ga. App. 458, 394 S.E.2d 119 (1990).

Evidence physician failed board exam irrelevant. — In a medical malpractice case, the court's refusal to allow evidence that a physician did not pass the physician's board examination was not an abuse of discretion. Williams v. Memorial Medical Ctr., Inc., 218 Ga. App. 107, 460 S.E.2d 558 (1995).

Evidence on lack of CPA license. — Trial court did not err in precluding the corporation's purported impeachment evidence about why the investor had not obtained the investor's CPA license as the evidence was irrelevant to the issues being tried. Kothari v. Patel, 262 Ga. App. 168, 585 S.E.2d 97 (2003).

Evidence in legal malpractice cases. — Rules of the State Bar of Georgia, while not determinative of the standard of care applicable in a legal malpractice case, may be considered along with other facts and circumstances to determine whether an attorney treated a client with the requisite degree of skill and care. Watkins & Watkins, P.C. v. Williams, 238 Ga. App. 646, 518 S.E.2d 704 (1999).

Outdated financial affidavit was relevant to claim that a spouse hid or dissipated assets. — In a divorce proceeding, it was not an abuse of discretion to reject the relevancy objection of a spouse to the admission of a financial affidavit that the spouse prepared several months before the trial on the ground that the affidavit was prejudicial because the affidavit made it appear that the spouse had attempted to hide assets; the relevancy objection was properly rejected because it was the position of the other spouse that the spouse had hidden or dissipated assets during the pendency of the divorce proceedings. Moxley v. Moxley, 281 Ga. 326, 638 S.E.2d 284 (2006).

Evidence of similar acts in negligence cases. — Allegation that the defendant in a personal injury suit was aware that other persons had slipped and fallen under substantially the same circumstances was not subject to special demurrer as immaterial and irrelevant matter. Belk-Matthews Co. of Macon v. Thompson, 94 Ga. App. 331, 94 S.E.2d 516 (1956).

It is a general rule that in a suit for negligence, evidence of similar acts or omissions on other and different occasions is not admissible. Wright v. Dilbeck, 122 Ga. App. 214, 176 S.E.2d 715 (1970) (but see CSX Transp. v. Trism Specialized Carriers, 9 F. Supp. 2d 1374 (N.D. Ga. 1998)).

As a general rule in all negligence actions, evidence of similar acts or omissions is not admissible; however, if proof of a similar accident or similar method of acting tends to prove some fact of the case on trial, the testimony falls within an exception — such as to show knowledge of a defect or causation, or to rebut a contention that it was impossible for the accident to happen in the manner claimed, or to show the prior existence of a dangerous condition or hazardous situation. Gunthorpe v. Daniels, 150 Ga. App. 113, 257 S.E.2d 199 (1979).

Evidence of absence of similar acts in negligence cases. — If evidence of prior similar acts of negligence is not admissible, it follows that evidence of the absence of any such prior acts is equally inadmissible. Williams v. Naidu, 168 Ga. App. 539, 309 S.E.2d 686 (1983).

Evidence of injuries sustained by other parties on prior occasions may be admitted for the purpose of showing that the defendant had been given notice of a dangerous condition and was thus negligent in allowing the condition to continue. Norfolk S. Ry. v. Thompson, 208 Ga. App. 240, 430 S.E.2d 371 (1993).

Evidence of prior impairment from injuries admissible. — Trial court properly denied a nurse's motion in limine to exclude evidence of injuries that the nurse sustained in a prior car accident pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 in an action against a medical practice, arising from alleged injuries that the nurse sustained when an office door opened and hit the nurse in the face and head, as the injuries in the doorway accident were related to the prior injuries because the nurse claimed a permanent impairment to the nurse's ability to work in both situations; the nurse's claim that the permanent impairment claims from the injuries were not substantially similar went to the weight of the evidence and not to the admissibility. Kilday v. Kennestone Physicians Ctr., L.P., 296 Ga. App. 818, 676 S.E.2d 271 (2009).

Evidence of subsequent careless occurrence excluded. — Testimony of a police officer, regarding the subsequent occurrence of a dog breaking loose and running into a bite-victim's yard, should have been excluded since the only logical purpose of such testimony was to raise the inference that if the dog owners were careless in their management of the dog on one occasion, the owners were probably careless on the occasion in question. Torrance v. Brennan, 209 Ga. App. 65, 432 S.E.2d 658 (1993).

In product liability actions, evidence of other incidents involving the product is admissible and relevant to the issues of notice of a defect and punitive damages, provided there is a showing of substantial similarity; without a showing of substantial similarity, the evidence is irrelevant as a matter of law. Uniroyal Goodrich Tire Co. v. Ford, 218 Ga. App. 248, 461 S.E.2d 877 (1995), aff'd, 276 Ga. 226, 476 S.E.2d 565 (1996).

Evidence plaintiff filed prior lawsuit not irrelevant. — Testimony elicited from plaintiff in a negligence action during cross-examination which showed that plaintiff had been involved in a single lawsuit 22 years prior to trial was not irrelevant or prejudicial because it was not indicative of litigiousness. Wages v. Sibran, Inc., 171 Ga. App. 14, 318 S.E.2d 679 (1984).

Evidence of continuing process. — Preparation of 125 turkeys was a continuous process which took some time to complete. The jury could properly infer from the evidence showing and tending to show a lack of negligence in the handling of all of the turkeys during the continuance of the undertaking that the same lack of negligence attended the handling of the one turkey by which plaintiffs were injured. Carsten v. Wilkes Supermarket of Gwinnett County, Inc., 181 Ga. App. 834, 353 S.E.2d 922 (1987).

In a wrongful death action against a truck manufacturer based on product liability and negligence, evidence that no truck of the type and design involved had ever been recalled or had been the subject of a regulatory proceeding was relevant and admissible to show that defendant's design and manufacture was not negligent. Browning v. Paccar, Inc., 214 Ga. App. 496, 448 S.E.2d 260 (1994).

Insurer's mishandling of related claim. — Trial court, in an employee's action against an employer for failure to pay no-fault insurance benefits, properly excluded evidence of the insurer's mishandling of a related workers' compensation claim on the issue of punitive damages. Williams v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., 182 Ga. App. 684, 356 S.E.2d 690 (1987).

Witness's testimony that defendant had a reputation for hurting people was admissible to explain the witness's reason for lying even though it incidentally put the defendant's character in issue. Smith v. State, 165 Ga. App. 669, 302 S.E.2d 414 (1983).

Evidence of severance pay under similar circumstances. — In a suit to recover severance pay by employee remaining on job until sale of the company was consummated, the trial court did not err in allowing two former employees to testify that those employees had received severance pay upon their voluntary departure from the company after the sale of the corporation. Amax, Inc. v. Fletcher, 166 Ga. App. 789, 305 S.E.2d 601 (1983).

Conversation with a person since deceased which would otherwise be objectionable may be admitted for the purpose of explaining conduct. J.M. Beeson Co. v. Knowles, 149 Ga. App. 732, 256 S.E.2d 44 (1979).

Evidence of prior claims against defendant. — In an action alleging that defendant jewelry store substituted a flawed diamond in a ring plaintiff brought in to be re-set, the trial court did not err in excluding evidence of prior disputes between defendant and other customers. Ament v. Bennett's Fine Jewelry, 249 Ga. App. 683, 549 S.E.2d 501 (2001).

General partners' (GP's) motion for a new trial was properly denied as evidence of a GP's involvement in a prior suit was properly admitted. The prior suit was relevant to show a course of conduct because the prior suit also involved a breach of a partnership agreement, a breach of fiduciary duty, a nursing home, and accusations that the GP violated the plain language of the partnership agreement by failing to pay the limited partners their preferred returns. Kellett v. Kumar, 281 Ga. App. 120, 635 S.E.2d 310 (2006).

Character evidence was admissible in the following cases. — See McNabb v. Lockhart & Thomas, 18 Ga. 495 (1855) (reputation of one charged with loss of money); DuBose v. DuBose, 75 Ga. 753 (1885) (character of spouse charged with cruelty); McClure v. State Banking Co., 6 Ga. App. 303, 65 S.E. 33 (1909) (character of one accused of forgery); Georgia Southern & Florida Ry. v. Ransom, 5 Ga. App. 740, 63 S.E. 525 (1909), aff'd on other grounds, 10 Ga. App. 558, 73 S.E. 858 (1912) (character of employee against whom damages were sought for insulting conduct); Conley v. Conley, 152 Ga. 184, 108 S.E. 777 (1921) (character of spouse charged with adultery); Dalton v. Jackson, 66 Ga. App. 625, 18 S.E.2d 791 (1942) (character in civil action for rape); Reynolds v. Reynolds, 217 Ga. 234, 123 S.E.2d 115 (1961) (character of spouse charged with cruelty); Murray v. Clayton, 151 Ga. App. 720, 261 S.E.2d 455 (1979) (reputation of one for being married); Shivers v. Webster, 224 Ga. App. 254, 480 S.E.2d 304 (1997) (action to enforce oral promise).

Admission of character evidence in deprivation proceeding. — Evidence that a father had emotionally abused and neglected a child by repeatedly beating and threatening to kill the child's mother in the child's presence, along with evidence that the father also repeatedly beat the first wife, was relevant to whether the cause of the child's deprivation was likely to continue under O.C.G.A. § 15-11-94 and was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2. Davis v. Rathel, 273 Ga. App. 183, 614 S.E.2d 823 (2005).

Evidence that parent missed medical appointments for child. — Evidence of the mother's missed health care appointments for her child did not relate to her conduct in other transactions, as contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2, but was probative of causation, and thus, was admissible in the mother's medical malpractice action against the health care providers who reviewed the child's case before the child died. Fulton-DeKalb Hosp. Auth. v. Dawson, 270 Ga. 376, 509 S.E.2d 28 (1998).

Evidence of parent's alleged suicide attempt in custody modification case. — In ruling on a parent's petition to modify custody, as the trial court made no finding of the existence of family violence under O.C.G.A. § 19-9-3(a)(4), whether the other parent had sought the help of a mental health professional or had attempted to commit suicide many years earlier was not probative of any material issue in the case. Therefore, such evidence was properly excluded. Moore v. Moore-McKinney, 297 Ga. App. 703, 678 S.E.2d 152 (2009).

Character evidence was inadmissible in the following cases. — See Travelers Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 12 S.E. 18 (1890) (beneficiary's character in insurance case); Stanley v. Willingham, 93 Ga. App. 421, 91 S.E.2d 791 (1956); Dennis v. Dennis, 227 Ga. 164, 179 S.E.2d 238 (1971) (evidence from spouse's former divorce); Ginsberg v. Termotto, 175 Ga. App. 265, 333 S.E.2d 120 (1985) (evidence of past good act irrelevant to issue of liability for utility expenses).

Evidence of prior consensual adulterous relationship not admitted. — Evidence of a dentist's prior consensual adulterous relationship was properly excluded from the evidence as the evidence was irrelevant to a former employee's claim against the dentist for assault and battery and would only have served to impugn the general character of the dentist. Ferman v. Bailey, 292 Ga. App. 288, 664 S.E.2d 285 (2008).

Character evidence is admissible in termination of parental rights cases. — Evidence of a parent's character is admissible in a termination of parental rights proceeding as the proceeding inherently involves character issues, specifically the parent's ability to provide proper parental care and control; while most civil cases require the factfinder to determine the truth only with regard to the discrete transactions in issue, termination cases require the factfinder to predict a parent's future conduct and ability to parent. Davis v. Rathel, 273 Ga. App. 183, 614 S.E.2d 823 (2005).

Evidence admissible in negligent hiring and retention claim. — Evidence of a dentist's harassment of other employees and a patient was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 as to a former employee's claim of negligent hiring and retention because the evidence tended to show that the dental center that hired the dentist should have known that the dentist posed a risk of committing the same type of harassing behavior against the former employee. Ferman v. Bailey, 292 Ga. App. 288, 664 S.E.2d 285 (2008).

1. Character

Good character may of itself generate a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jury as to the defendant's guilt, and for this reason the defendant is allowed when the defendant sees fit to offer defendant's good character in issue. Clarke v. State, 52 Ga. App. 254, 183 S.E. 92 (1935).

In criminal trials, the state cannot introduce evidence of the character of the accused unless the accused has personally first put it in issue. Richardson v. State, 41 Ga. App. 226, 152 S.E. 599 (1930); Clarke v. State, 52 Ga. App. 254, 183 S.E. 92 (1935); Love v. State, 70 Ga. App. 529, 28 S.E.2d 781 (1944); Bacon v. State, 209 Ga. 261, 71 S.E.2d 615 (1952); Haire v. State, 209 Ga. 378, 72 S.E.2d 707 (1952); Borders v. State, 114 Ga. App. 90, 150 S.E.2d 306 (1966); Brown v. State, 118 Ga. App. 617, 165 S.E.2d 185 (1968); Dawson v. State, 120 Ga. App. 242, 170 S.E.2d 45 (1969); Bowen v. State, 123 Ga. App. 670, 182 S.E.2d 124 (1971); Dudley v. State, 228 Ga. 551, 186 S.E.2d 875 (1972); Wooten v. State, 125 Ga. App. 635, 188 S.E.2d 409 (1972); Askew v. State, 135 Ga. App. 56, 217 S.E.2d 385 (1975); Mikle v. State, 236 Ga. 748, 225 S.E.2d 275 (1976); Brown v. State, 237 Ga. 467, 228 S.E.2d 853 (1976); Posey v. State, 152 Ga. App. 216, 262 S.E.2d 541 (1979); Perry v. State, 154 Ga. App. 559, 269 S.E.2d 63 (1980), overruled on other grounds, 231 Ga. App. 61, 497 S.E.2d 642 (1998); Head v. State, 246 Ga. 360, 271 S.E.2d 452 (1980).

General character of defendant and defendant's conduct in other transactions is irrelevant unless the defendant chooses to put defendant's character in issue. Ailstock v. State, 159 Ga. App. 482, 283 S.E.2d 698 (1981).

Opportunity of state to disprove good character. — Whenever defendant puts defendant's good character in issue as fact state has privilege of disproving this fact, by cross-examination of the witness by whom the accused attempts to make the proof. Ailstock v. State, 159 Ga. App. 482, 283 S.E.2d 698 (1981).

When nature of the case does not involve defendant's character, and the case does not render necessary and proper the investigation thereof, it is error to allow, over objection of the defendant, prejudicial and irrelevant matter to go before the jury in a trial which tends to place defendant's character and conduct before the jury. Hartley v. State, 159 Ga. App. 157, 282 S.E.2d 684 (1981).

After testimony put defendant's character in issue, implying defendant's commission of the offense and such testimony was not necessary or relevant to the circumstances of defendant's arrest, that testimony should not be admitted. Bryan v. State, 157 Ga. App. 635, 278 S.E.2d 177 (1981).

A passing reference to a defendant's record does not place defendant's character in evidence. Johnson v. State, 256 Ga. 604, 351 S.E.2d 623 (1987).

In a trial for armed robbery, aggravated assault, kidnapping, and possession of a firearm during the commission of certain crimes, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a mistrial even though the state placed defendant's character in issue when a police officer testified that defendant was "picked up on charges" when police arrested defendant in Maryland pursuant to a fugitive warrant because the testimony was admissible and relevant to the circumstances surrounding defendant's arrest, even if it did incidentally show that defendant committed another crime. Blake v. State, 272 Ga. App. 181, 612 S.E.2d 33 (2005).

When an officer testified that the officer had known the defendant for a long time and "could have charged" the defendant in a couple of cases, this passing reference to prior conduct did not suffice to put the defendant's character in evidence so as to violate O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2; furthermore, a curative instruction remedied any prejudicial impact from the statement. Height v. State, 281 Ga. 727, 642 S.E.2d 812 (2007).

When an investigator, asked how the investigator knew defendant, replied, "I've made contact with [the defendant] in the streets before and I believe through past cases," this did not warrant a mistrial. A passing reference to a defendant's criminal record did not suffice to put the defendant's character in evidence so as to violate O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2. Thomas v. State, 291 Ga. App. 795, 662 S.E.2d 849 (2008).

Defendant's character not "put in issue."

— It is only when a defendant has "put his character in issue," as that term is defined in the context of O.C.G.A. §§ 24-2-2 and 24-9-20(b), that the court is required to give a charge on good character and when, in a trial for aggravated battery, the defendant's statement that defendant never shot anybody was not responsive to the direct question relating to defendant's defenses of accident and self-defense, which the court did fully charge, the volunteered additional statement, merely repeated on redirect, was not legally sufficient to put defendant's character in issue. Williams v. State, 187 Ga. App. 355, 370 S.E.2d 210 (1988).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion in limine to exclude evidence that police, in searching defendant's apartment, found not only the murder weapon defendant used to shoot and kill defendant's girlfriend, but also two other handguns; the evidence of the two other handguns was relevant to the accuracy of a statement defendant gave to police that upon searching defendant's apartment, the police would find the two guns hidden in a shoe box and the fact that defendant owned the guns was not, in and of itself, evidence of bad character. Brinson v. State, 276 Ga. 671, 581 S.E.2d 548 (2003).

State did not improperly place a defendant's character in evidence by informing the jury that defendant was charged with possession of a firearm by a convicted felon when defendant was charged with possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, not because defendant personally was a convicted felon, but because defendant aided and abetted defendant's cousin, a convicted felon, in receiving and possessing a firearm. Perry v. State, 276 Ga. 836, 585 S.E.2d 614, rev'd, 276 Ga. 839, 584 S.E.2d 253 (2003).

Testimony by police officers did not improperly place the defendant's character at issue; statements regarding the charges against the defendant at the time of previous arrests were merely passing references and described the circumstances of the arrests; a statement about the defendant having an open warrant fell short of placing the defendant's character at issue. Williams v. State, 285 Ga. App. 190, 645 S.E.2d 676 (2007).

Permitting an officer to testify that the officer had been looking for the defendant because the officer had a warrant for the defendant's arrest did not impermissibly put the defendant's character into issue; the testimony was admissible as relevant to the circumstances leading the police to the residence where the defendant was found. Smith v. State, 285 Ga. App. 399, 646 S.E.2d 499 (2007).

Because a mere mention that the defendant had been in jail did not place the defendant's character in issue, and despite this fact the defendant waived any claim of error regarding the placement of character in issue, it did not amount to reversible error; moreover, the challenged testimony, given by the defendant's mother, amounted to a non-responsive answer, which the state did not directly solicit and it did not appear from the record that the state anticipated the response. Jennings v. State, 285 Ga. App. 774, 648 S.E.2d 105 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 667 (Ga. 2007).

When a witness twice referred to a codefendant's incarceration, these nonresponsive answers did not improperly place the defendant's own character at issue. Moreover, any error was harmless because the evidence of the defendant's guilt was overwhelming. Walker v. State, 282 Ga. 703, 653 S.E.2d 468 (2007).

Trial court did not err in admitting evidence that police were at the defendant's residence to serve defendant with an arrest warrant, because that evidence did not improperly place the issue of character into evidence, but was necessary to explain why police were able to detain, handcuff, and search the defendant. Moreover, a limiting instruction was also issued advising the jurors that the jurors were not to consider the warrant for any purpose other than to explain the officers' presence at the defendant's home. Thrasher v. State, 289 Ga. App. 399, 657 S.E.2d 316 (2008).

Appellant alleged that the trial court erred by denying appellant's motion for a mistrial because a witness, while testifying about the abduction and murder of the victim, improperly injected the appellant's character in issue by saying, in front of the jury, "these guys are killers." While the state agreed that the reference to "killers" in this comment should not have been made, any error was harmless as the statement did not place the appellants' character in issue because the statement did not concern other transactions. Overton v. State, 295 Ga. App. 223, 671 S.E.2d 507 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0654, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 212 (Ga. 2009).

Testimony that an investigator ran a criminal history check on the defendant and prepared photographic lineups at two police stations did not put the defendant's character into issue under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2. The testimony did not indicate that the defendant had been convicted of any crime and did not otherwise specify the nature of the defendant's prior dealings with police; moreover, the other evidence against the defendant was substantial and damning, and the action taken by the trial court assured, without drawing attention to the improper evidence, that there would be no other references to the defendant's criminal history. Young v. State, 297 Ga. App. 248, 676 S.E.2d 854 (2009).

Character not put in issue in child molestation cases. — When the minor victim testified that she had not initially told her mother about the defendant's sexual offenses because she feared that the defendant, who had been arrested for battery of the mother and who had hit the mother, would harm the victim and her mother, evidence that the defendant had hit the mother and that he had been arrested for assault and battery of the mother did not improperly put the defendant's character into issue; it was properly admitted to explain the victim's delay in reporting the crime. Borders v. State, 285 Ga. App. 337, 646 S.E.2d 319 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 640 (Ga. 2007).

Despite the defendant's claim that the trial court erroneously admitted improper character evidence from the victims' parents when the parents both testified that the defendant agreed to obtain counseling in exchange for the parents' agreement not to report the incidents of molestation to law enforcement, the evidence was properly admitted as: (1) the defendant cited no case law supporting a finding that amounted to improper character evidence; and (2) the testimony was admissible to explain why the victims and their parents did not immediately report the matter to police. Head v. State, 285 Ga. App. 471, 646 S.E.2d 699 (2007).

Child molestation defendant did not put the defendant's good character into issue so as to require a jury charge; the defendant's testimony regarding the defendant's attempts to help the victim was more reasonably construed as an explanation for the inordinate amount of time the defendant spent with the victim than as evidence of good character, and the defendant's testimony regarding the defendant's two part-time jobs only inadvertently placed the defendant's good character into issue. Kurtz v. State, 287 Ga. App. 823, 652 S.E.2d 858 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 184 (Ga. 2008).

Character not placed in issue by prison uniform. — In a prosecution for felony murder, armed robbery, and burglary, the fact that the jury was shown a videotape of the defendant's statement to police depicting the defendant wearing a prison uniform did not place the defendant's character in evidence. Jackson v. State, 284 Ga. 484, 668 S.E.2d 700 (2008).

Evidence of relative's "touching" did not put defendant's character in issue. — Although the state prematurely bolstered a child victim's testimony, the parties knew that the victim's credibility would be immediately undermined; evidence that defendant told the victim that a relative had been imprisoned for improper "touching" and that defendant masturbated with the victim's underwear were admissible as relevant. Robinson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 537, 621 S.E.2d 770 (2005).

Use of booking photographs. — As the booking photograph in no way suggested that the defendant was guilty of any previous crimes, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting the photographs. Clark v. State, 285 Ga. App. 182, 645 S.E.2d 671 (2007).

graphic identification card issued by the Georgia Department of Corrections was admissible as relevant to issues of the identity of the perpetrator and the credibility of witnesses; the card did not refer to any charge or conviction nor indicate that defendant was a parolee. Biggins v. State, 229 Ga. App. 297, 494 S.E.2d 45 (1997).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to exclude evidence and admitting the correctional facility identification card found on defendant's person at the time of arrest for stealing a car as the card was not used to show defendant's criminal character, but, instead, was used to prove that defendant gave a police officer investigating the crime a false name, which was a different crime. McNeil v. State, 257 Ga. App. 147, 570 S.E.2d 433 (2002).

Trial court did not err in admitting investigating officer's testimony that the investigating officer obtained from police in another county a prior photograph of defendant for use in a photographic lineup the investigating officer was creating as the investigating officer's testimony, without more, did not indicate that defendant was guilty of any prior crimes, and, thus, did not improperly place defendant's character in issue. Browne v. State, 261 Ga. App. 648, 583 S.E.2d 496 (2003).

Defendant waived any error in the admission of a photograph of defendant with a gun as defendant did not argue at trial that the photo was improper character evidence; further, gun ownership did not impute bad character. Johnson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 641, 618 S.E.2d 716 (2005).

Admission of fingerprint card. — Admission into evidence of the defendant's fingerprint card taken in connection with a previous crime does not place the defendant's character into evidence when any incriminating evidence was removed from the face of the card. Williams v. State, 184 Ga. App. 124, 361 S.E.2d 15 (1987).

In a prosecution for possession of marijuana, it was reversible error to introduce a fingerprint card of defendant that showed the date of a prior arrest and listed charges against defendant. Jinks v. State, 229 Ga. App. 18, 493 S.E.2d 214 (1997).

Evidence of prison identification card. —

Defendant's claim that defendant's character was improperly placed into evidence when an officer testified that the officer found defendant's prison identification card in defendant's pocket was waived as defendant failed to make a further objection or renew defendant's motion for a mistrial after a curative instruction was given. McCullough v. State, 268 Ga. App. 445, 602 S.E.2d 181 (2004).

Admission of videotape. — Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion in limine that sought to bar introduction of defendant's videotaped statement to police, as well as defendant's later motion for mistrial after the videotape was played for the jury; although defendant claimed that the videotape was entirely exculpatory and was only introduced by the state to place defendant's character in evidence because defendant referenced in the videotape a murder, separate from the instant crimes, with which defendant had previously been charged, the videotape was not entirely exculpatory and defendant's references in the videotape were relevant to other issues besides defendant's character, such as motive, intent, and course of conduct, and, thus, was material and admissible. Cummings v. State, 261 Ga. App. 281, 582 S.E.2d 231 (2003), cert. denied, 543 U.S. 824, 125 S. Ct. 40, 160 L. Ed. 2d 35 (2004).

Evidence of motive. — Evidence that victim's taking of an arrest warrant would have immediately returned defendant to jail was relevant to prove that defendant had a motive to kill the victim and relevant evidence is not rendered inadmissible simply because it incidentally puts the defendant's character in issue. Terrell v. State, 271 Ga. 783, 523 S.E.2d 294 (1999).

Evidence that defendant's motive for shooting the victim was the victim's friendship with a person who had apparently bought drugs from defendant, but had refused to pay the amount of money defendant demanded, was admissible, even if it injected defendant's character into evidence. Sharif v. State, 272 Ga. App. 660, 613 S.E.2d 176 (2005).

Evidence that defendant was on probation at the time of the crimes was relevant to show defendant's motive for fleeing from the officer, even though the evidence might have reflected negatively on defendant's character. Mills v. State, 273 Ga. App. 699, 615 S.E.2d 824 (2005).

Substantial evidence showed that defendant was using crack cocaine before the crimes and that defendant planned to take the victim's wallet to purchase more; proof of motive was not inadmissible simply because it incidentally put defendant's character into evidence. Young v. State, 280 Ga. 65, 623 S.E.2d 491 (2005).

Defendant failed to establish that defendant received ineffective assistance of counsel because, even assuming that the transcript was accurate and that the involvement of drug money was placed before the jury, the question elicited testimony which constituted relevant evidence of defendant's motive, and thus defense counsel was not ineffective in failing to object, since any objection would have been fruitless. Jones v. State, 280 Ga. 205, 625 S.E.2d 1 (2005).

Evidence of drug use. — Because evidence of the defendant's prior drug use and history of crimes committed against family members fueled by that drug use were properly admitted as relevant to the crimes charged, despite incidentally placing the defendant's character in issue, convictions for both aggravated assault and simple assault were upheld on appeal. Jones v. State, 283 Ga. App. 812, 642 S.E.2d 887 (2007).

Evidence of defendant's Klu Klux Klan affiliation was admissible since the evidence explained defendant's motive for murder and defendant's bent of mind. Mize v. State, 269 Ga. 646, 501 S.E.2d 219 (1998), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 1078, 119 S. Ct. 817, 142 L. Ed. 2d 676 (1999).

Evidence incidentally reflecting on character not barred. — O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 does not bar evidence simply because the evidence might incidentally reflect on the defendant's character. Felker v. State, 252 Ga. 351, 314 S.E.2d 621, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 873, 105 S. Ct. 229, 83 L. Ed. 2d 158 (1984).

In allowing testimony relating to defendant's obtaining possession of a gun used in committing offenses, the trial court refused to allow characterization of defendant's conduct as criminal, denial of a motion to exclude the testimony was proper since the limitation injected defendant's character only minimally. Baker v. State, 225 Ga. App. 848, 485 S.E.2d 548 (1997).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial based on admission of a police officer's testimony that defendant, on the night prior to being arrested for theft by receiving stolen property, fled every time the officer turned into a particular parking lot and that the stolen property, a rental car, was parked nearby; even though the evidence might have incidentally put defendant's character in issue, the evidence was relevant and probative on the issue of defendant's consciousness of guilt. Richardson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 320, 620 S.E.2d 522 (2005).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in allowing evidence of the previous conflict between defendant and the condominium association because the testimony was relevant to whether defendant made telephone calls with the intent of harassing the victim in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-11-39.1(a) and only incidentally reflected on defendant's character. Bozzuto v. State, 276 Ga. App. 614, 624 S.E.2d 166 (2005).

In a prosecution for armed robbery, the victim's testimony that the defendant looked at the victim with a "mean, just horrible cold-hearted face" was relevant to show the defendant's demeanor during the commission of the crime, even if the testimony incidentally placed the defendant's character in issue. Fuller v. State, 295 Ga. App. 439, 672 S.E.2d 438 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0749, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 220 (Ga. 2009).

Evidence of defendant's prior "touching" of victim did not put defendant's character in issue. — Defendant's character was not erroneously put into issue by the admission of testimony of defendant's niece as to an incident during which defendant, while in the water at the beach and attempting to teach the witness how to float on her stomach, touched the witness in the area of her vagina because the evidence was admissible to show lustful disposition and to corroborate the testimony of the victim as to the acts charged. Evans v. State, 180 Ga. App. 1, 348 S.E.2d 561 (1986).

Evidence of good character may not serve to create such doubt, even in the face of apparently conclusive evidence, as to lead jurors to believe the other evidence false or witnesses mistaken. Edwards v. State, 255 Ga. 149, 335 S.E.2d 869 (1985).

Testimony as to defendant's residence. — Defendant's character not injected into evidence after a police officer testified that the officer knew where defendant resided. Chaney v. State, 169 Ga. App. 616, 314 S.E.2d 457 (1984).

State's mention of defendant's aliases. — State does not impermissibly place the defendant's character in issue by referring, in a limited manner, to the defendant's uncontestedly correct aliases and nickname. Veal v. State, 167 Ga. App. 175, 306 S.E.2d 667 (1983).

Good character is valid defense. — Courts of this state have consistently recognized the validity of a good character defense, and have held that good character should be considered by the court and jury. Riceman v. State, 166 Ga. App. 825, 305 S.E.2d 595 (1983).

Specific acts to prove character. — O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 limits proof of character to evidence of reputation. Proof of conduct in other transactions by evidence of specific instances of such conduct is not authorized but amounts to self-serving declarations of nonculpability to prove a trait of character. Baine v. State, 181 Ga. App. 856, 354 S.E.2d 177 (1987); Barrett v. State, 192 Ga. App. 705, 385 S.E.2d 785 (1989).

In a prosecution for child molestation, the court properly refused to allow the defendant to present witness evidence of defendant's experience in caring for young girls since character witnesses for a defendant are not permitted to testify about specific instances of conduct by the defendant during direct examination. Shelnutt v. State, 234 Ga. App. 655, 506 S.E.2d 643 (1998).

Character testimony need not be based exclusively on community relationships. — Appellate court could not conclude that the trial court erred in restricting the character testimony of one of the defendant's witnesses, which testimony was obtained through business relationships rather than through the community in which the defendant lived, and further, even if the trial court did commit error, the defendant showed no harm in the restriction as the trial court did not completely restrict the witness's testimony, and because of the cumulative testimony of the other character witnesses concerning the defendant's good character. Burchette v. State, 260 Ga. App. 739, 580 S.E.2d 609 (2003), aff'd, 278 Ga. 1, 596 S.E.2d 162 (2004).

Inadvertant reference did not warrant mistrial. — Given the trial court's prompt and pointed curative instruction after an inadvertent placement of the defendant's character into evidence, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying the defendant a mistrial. Hunter v. State, 281 Ga. 526, 640 S.E.2d 271 (2007).

When a stalking victim was asked if the defendant had ever pulled a gun on the victim, the victim's reply that the victim had seen the defendant pull a gun on someone else was stricken as nonresponsive, and the trial court advised the jury to disregard that response. Even assuming this testimony improperly injected evidence of the defendant's bad character, the defendant was not entitled to a mistrial, particularly in light of the defendant's testimony that admitted each act listed in the indictment. Seibert v. State, 294 Ga. App. 202, 670 S.E.2d 109 (2008).

When the nature of the presentence hearing involves the "general character" of the defendant, and when the state has notified the defendant that such evidence will be admitted, evidence of general bad character may be admitted. Cowan v. State, 130 Ga. App. 320, 203 S.E.2d 311 (1973); Cochran v. State, 144 Ga. App. 820, 242 S.E.2d 735 (1978).

Statements as to defendant's drinking habits. — Prosecution's characterization of defendant as an "experienced drinker" because defendant had testified that defendant was not rendered intoxicated by .21% blood alcohol did not place defendant's character in issue. Rielli v. State, 174 Ga. App. 220, 330 S.E.2d 104 (1985).

Voluntary intoxication charge was not "red flag" as to character. — Defendant's claim that the state used a voluntary intoxication charge as a "red flag" to the jury that defendant was drunk and therefore was "an unsavory character," that the victim's parents now might question their decision "to invite this intoxicated man into their home," and that defendant had "major psychological problems" was rejected; there was evidence from which an inference or deduction might be made that defendant was drunk on the afternoon in question. Byers v. State, 276 Ga. App. 295, 623 S.E.2d 157 (2005).

Bent of mind evidence. — In a joint trial of two defendants, the trial court did not err in showing the jury portions of a movie which depicted a method of disposing of a murdered victim's body as: (1) such was relevant to show a bent of mind, despite the fact that it could have placed the first defendant's character in issue; and (2) the jury could have made the permissible inference that the first defendant was encouraged by the movie to order the manner of disposing of the victim's body; moreover, because the second defendant failed to request a cautionary instruction to adequately protect from this inference, the second defendant could not complain of the inference on appeal. Oree v. State, 280 Ga. 588, 630 S.E.2d 390 (2006).

Character evidence admissible. — On the trial of a case arising under a municipal ordinance prohibiting street walking, evidence of the general character of the woman arrested was admissible. Braddy v. City of Milledgeville, 74 Ga. 516, 58 Am. R. 443 (1885).

On the trial of one for murder when the testimony tended to show that the homicide was committed in consequence of an effort to have some sort of sexual relation with the victim, and the defendant introduced a witness to establish the defendant's good character, it was competent, on cross-examination, to ask such witness if the witness had not heard of certain lascivious acts of the defendant with other females. Frank v. State, 141 Ga. 243, 80 S.E.1016, aff'd on other grounds, 142 Ga. 741, 83 S.E. 645 (1914); 237 U.S. 309, 35 S. Ct. 582, 59 L. Ed. 582 (1915).

When defendant put defendant's character in issue by attempting to explain defendant's actions as resulting from devotion to defendant's church, admission of evidence of prior convictions was proper. Language v. State, 169 Ga. App. 649, 314 S.E.2d 484 (1984).

Testimony about the characteristics of spousal abuse and a statement that defendant fit the profile of a spouse abuser was properly admitted in defendant's trial for felony murder and aggravated assault of defendant's spouse after defendant claimed the defense of an accident, thereby putting defendant's character into evidence; the court found such testimony was relevant to rebut defendant's claimed defense. Jones v. State, 276 Ga. 253, 577 S.E.2d 560 (2003).

Although the general character of a party and the party's conduct in other transactions were usually irrelevant, the trial court did not err in concluding that defendant's counsel rendered effective assistance and was not ineffective for not objecting to the codefendant's testimony that defendant was not employed and sold drugs for a living, as such testimony, although incidentally involving defendant's character, went to the very central issue in the case of whether defendant was dealing drugs, and, thus, defendant's counsel could not be faulted for not making an objection that would have been meritless because such testimony was admissible. Pitts v. State, 260 Ga. App. 553, 580 S.E.2d 618 (2003).

State's introduction of evidence of the defendant's two prior arrests was not improper since the only conceivable purpose of defense counsel's questions to a case agent was to elicit testimony concerning the defendant's character, defense counsel opened the door to the state's rebuttal character evidence on the same specific subject. Green v. State, 298 Ga. App. 17, 679 S.E.2d 348 (2009).

Evidence of victim's alcoholism not relevant. — Defendant's convictions of aggravated battery and simple battery were affirmed as the trial court properly refused to admit evidence of the victim's alcoholism prior to the victim's involvement with defendant since defendant failed to show any nexus between the victim's alcoholism and the conclusion that the victim had falsely accused defendant of battery. Harris v. State, 263 Ga. App. 329, 587 S.E.2d 819 (2003).

Admission of defendant's videotaped statement in which defendant implicated oneself in the commission of other crimes did not improperly place defendant's character in issue. Griffin v. State, 243 Ga. App. 282, 531 S.E.2d 175 (2000).

Evidence properly admitted as res gestae and did not amount to bad character evidence. — Introduction of evidence regarding crimes for which the defendant was not charged, specifically two checkbooks that were recovered from the defendant's residence at the time of the arrest, and testimony of the defendant's involvement in two uncharged robberies, did not amount to bad character evidence, but was part of the res gestae; moreover, premitting whether the trial court properly admitted the aforementioned evidence, any error arising from that admission was harmless. Cartledge v. State, 285 Ga. App. 145, 645 S.E.2d 633 (2007).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion when the court allowed a passenger in the defendant's car to testify that the defendant "always ran red lights," as such was not used for improper character evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2, but rather, as part of the res gestae of the moments described by the passenger, whereupon a police officer had to swerve away from the defendant's vehicle and the officer eventually died from injuries sustained in a subsequent crash; further, any error in the admission thereof was harmless due to the overwhelming amount of evidence of the defendant's guilt. Potts v. State, 296 Ga. App. 242, 674 S.E.2d 109 (2009).

Evidence properly admitted to establish defendant's identity and appearance, and did not amount to bad character evidence. — Trial court did not err in denying a motion in limine to exclude the testimony of a state witness that allegedly placed the defendant's character in issue because the testimony was relevant to establish the defendant's identity and appearance on that date of the charged crime, and was not rendered inadmissible merely because the testimony incidentally placed the defendant's character in issue. Moreover, the defendant's trial counsel conceded that the witness's testimony regarding the description was admissible. Buice v. State, 289 Ga. App. 415, 657 S.E.2d 326 (2008).

Limiting instruction proper. — Limiting instruction on similar transaction evidence was properly given as the instruction was substantially the same as an approved pattern and did not direct the jury that the jury could consider similar transaction evidence to show any element of the offense charged in the indictment. Miller v. State, 281 Ga. App. 354, 636 S.E.2d 60 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 106 (Ga. 2007).

Claim waived. — Appeals court rejected the defendant's contention that the trial court erroneously admitted character evidence consisting of the defendant's statement made to a special agent regarding past cocaine use and distribution, when at trial, counsel raised a delayed objection arguing that such was inculpatory, and the objection was not only untimely but also failed to state the specific grounds raised on appeal; moreover, because the defendant later admitted to making the statement, any error in admitting the special agent's testimony was harmless. Henley v. State, 281 Ga. App. 242, 635 S.E.2d 856 (2006).

Despite the defendant's claim that the trial court erred by denying a mistrial based on an improper character reference in violation of O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2, because counsel failed to do anything more than move for a mistrial following the challenged statement and specifically request a curative instruction, no error resulted from the denial of the motion. Johnson v. State, 285 Ga. App. 590, 646 S.E.2d 760 (2007).

Counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to statements that might have impugned defendant's character, and hence the defendant was properly denied a new trial on those grounds. Page v. State, 287 Ga. App. 182, 651 S.E.2d 131 (2007).

2. Other Conduct or Crimes

Proper admission of similar transaction evidence requires the state to make three affirmative showings: (1) that the evidence is sought for a proper purpose; (2) that sufficient evidence exists to establish that the accused committed the similar transaction; and (3) that sufficient connection exists between the similar transaction and the crime charged so that proof of the former tends to prove the latter. Rice v. State, 217 Ga. App. 456, 458 S.E.2d 368 (1995).

Test of admissibility of evidence of other criminal acts by the defendant is not the number of similarities between the two incidents, rather, such evidence may be admitted if the evidence is substantially relevant for some purpose other than to show a probability that the defendant committed the crime on trial because the defendant is a man of criminal character; similarity is an important factor in determining the admissibility of the extrinsic crime, however, it is not the only factor, nor is it necessarily the controlling factor. The ultimate issue for admissibility is whether the evidence of other crimes has relevance to the issues in the trial of the case at bar. Parnell v. State, 260 Ga. App. 213, 581 S.E.2d 263 (2003).

When, as part of trial strategy, the first defendant elected to introduce evidence of the first defendant's non-involvement in a prior drug sale and attempted to elicit testimony from a codefendant that the first defendant did not participate in the prior drug deal, but when the codefendant testified that the first defendant and the second defendant were the suppliers of the ounce of cocaine sold in that prior transaction, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of the prior drug deal as a similar transaction because the first defendant could not complain on appeal about the deleterious results stemming from that defendant's own trial strategy. Lopez v. State, 267 Ga. App. 532, 601 S.E.2d 116 (2004).

In a prosecution for aggravated assault, under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106(b)(1), evidence that defendant stabbed another in an incident eight years previously was admissible to show whether defendant intended to threaten or harm the victim when defendant brandished a knife, and the evidence was not more prejudicial than probative, given the prior incident's relevance to a necessary element of the current crimes. Ledford v. State, 275 Ga. App. 107, 620 S.E.2d 187 (2005).

Admission of similar transaction evidence proper. see Ryan v. State, 277 Ga. App. 490, 627 S.E.2d 128 (2006) (drugs).

In a prosecution for the crimes of kidnapping, aggravated sexual battery, sexual battery, and attempted rape, admission of similar transaction evidence was upheld as: (1) the defendant had sufficient notice of the state's intent to present that evidence; (2) the prior bad acts were sufficiently similar to the charged acts; (3) such was properly admitted for the purposes of showing identity, intent, bent of mind, and course of conduct; (4) both prior victims positively identified the defendant as their assailant; and (5) the evidence showed that the defendant had a modus operandi of luring young women who were strangers to him into his car, driving to isolated areas, making them expose their breasts and genital areas, masturbating, intimidating them with talk of even more violent sexual assault or death, and then returning them to the area of the first encounter. Watley v. State, 281 Ga. App. 244, 635 S.E.2d 857 (2006).

Because the state adequately showed the connection between the murder of one victim, and the murder charged in the instant proceeding, specifically embedded in the defendant's proffered motive that the killing of the victim in the instant proceeding was committed to prevent evidence from being introduced against the defendant in the first killing, the similar transaction evidence was properly allowed; hence, the similar transaction did not amount to improper character evidence. Young v. State, 281 Ga. 750, 642 S.E.2d 806 (2007).

In a trial for felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, the trial court properly allowed the state to introduce as similar transaction evidence an aggravated assault the defendant committed four years earlier; both the old assault charge and crimes for which the defendant was on trial involved violent assaults committed by the defendant with the help of young, unarmed accomplices, involved the defendant's use of a firearm and demand for valuables, and targeted business people within the same five-mile area during morning work hours. Edwards v. State, 282 Ga. 259, 646 S.E.2d 663 (2007).

In a prosecution involving a murder and robbery at a convenience store, the trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence of an attempted robbery of a fast-food restaurant. In each case, the defendant recruited another person from the same house for assistance, wore a mask, carried a .9mm pistol, and committed the crimes early in the morning. Judkins v. State, 282 Ga. 580, 652 S.E.2d 537 (2007).

When the defendant was charged with possessing methamphetamine, the trial court properly admitted as a similar transaction a prior conviction for possessing methamphetamine because both involved the defendant's possession of methamphetamine while involved in disorderly conduct. The defendant claimed that the scales on which the drug was found were in a car when the defendant bought it, and evidence of the similar transaction, when officers responding to a disorderly person call found methamphetamine in the defendant's pocket, was relevant to the defendant's intent and bent of mind to possess methamphetamine. Martin v. State, 291 Ga. App. 363, 662 S.E.2d 185 (2008).

In a forgery case, the trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence of a prior forgery conviction. The trial court admitted the similar transaction evidence to show the defendant's identity and course of conduct, which were proper purposes; furthermore, in both cases, the defendant cashed or tried to cash bogus checks issued to the defendant and endorsed by the defendant at a check-cashing location other than at the bank where the checks were purportedly drawn. Beck v. State, 291 Ga. App. 702, 662 S.E.2d 798 (2008).

In an armed robbery case, the trial court properly admitted evidence of a prior armed robbery. The similar transaction was offered to prove course of conduct, state of mind, and the defendant's intent; a certified copy of the defendant's conviction was offered; and the prior robbery took place the day before the robbery at issue and like the present robbery involved a victim being robbed of money at gunpoint while at work. Deloatch v. State, 296 Ga. App. 65, 673 S.E.2d 576 (2009).

Defendant was charged of robbing a store clerk at knife-point. Evidence presented at a Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.3(B) hearing that, on the day after this robbery, the defendant robbed a second clerk at knife-point, was properly admitted as similar transaction evidence; the fact that the trial on the second robbery was pending afforded no basis to exclude the evidence. Hill v. State, 298 Ga. App. 677, 680 S.E.2d 702 (2009).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting similar transaction evidence during the defendant's trial for possession of methamphetamine and possession of drug related objects because the subsequent incident involved possession of methamphetamine and possession of a glass pipe used to smoke methamphetamine. McGhee v. State, No. A10A0473, 2010 Ga.

App. LEXIS 346 (Mar. 31, 2010).

Degree of similarity that is required. —

When similar transaction evidence is being introduced to prove motive, intent, or bent of mind, it requires a lesser degree of similarity to meet the test of admissibility than when such evidence is being introduced to prove identity; all that is required is that the incidents are sufficiently similar such that proof of the earlier event helps prove an element of the later crime. Cain v. State, 268 Ga. App. 39, 601 S.E.2d 415 (2004).

Similar transaction notice was sufficient.

— Similar transaction evidence was properly admitted because: (1) defendant's claim that the similar transaction notice was insufficient because the notice did not include a copy of the prior indictment was waived; (2) while the notice did not state the county involved and did not include the indictment, the failure of the state to attach copies of the indictment and to fully comply with Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.3(B) did not require automatic reversal or exclusion of the similar transaction evidence, but was subject to testing for harm; and (3) the state served the indictment, verdict, and police report from the earlier attack on trial counsel more than a year before the trial took place. Moreover, any error in failing to attach the indictment to the notice was harmless because the indictment was otherwise provided in discovery long before trial. Ellis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 17, 637 S.E.2d 729 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 66 (2007).

Evidence of prior difficulties between victim and defendant ought to be received carefully, and if there is no probative connection between the two, or the prejudice arising from the evidence far outweighs what probative value the evidence may have, the evidence ought not be admitted; but if there is any relevance, or in cases of doubt, the jury ought to hear the evidence and determine for itself the weight and credibility the evidence will be given. Barnes v. State, 157 Ga. App. 582, 277 S.E.2d 916 (1981).

Trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of a long-time friend of the deceased wife about prior difficulties the deceased wife and defendant had, as evidence of defendant's prior acts toward the victim, the deceased wife, was admissible. Rowe v. State, 276 Ga. 800, 582 S.E.2d 119 (2003).

Unlike similar transactions, prior difficulties between the defendant and the victim are not independent acts or occurrences, but are connected acts or occurrences arising from the relationship between the same people involved in the prosecution and are related and connected by such nexus; hence, evidence of motive, even though not an essential element of a crime, had such great probative value that it outweighed the inherent prejudice of such evidence, even if it incidentally placed the defendant's character in issue. LeBlanc v. State, 283 Ga. App. 434, 641 S.E.2d 646 (2007).

Trial court did not err in permitting a witness to testify about the decedent victim's statement concerning defendant's prior acts of abuse as testimony about prior difficulties between the defendant and a victim was admissible at trial to show the nature of their relationship and to demonstrate motive, intent, or bent of mind of the defendant in committing the act. Banegas v. State, 283 Ga. App. 346, 641 S.E.2d 593 (2007).

State of feeling between defendant and victim. — On a trial of an indictment for arson, it is not error to admit evidence showing that feelings of anger or dislike existed on the part of the defendant toward the owner of the property. Wright v. State, 113 Ga. App. 436, 148 S.E.2d 333 (1966).

Trial court does not err in admitting evidence of a previous difficulty between a defendant and victim which illustrates the state of feeling between them. Wright v. State, 113 Ga. App. 436, 148 S.E.2d 333 (1966); Jones v. State, 246 Ga. 109, 269 S.E.2d 6 (1980).

Evidence of drug use. — Evidence that defendant's urine sample taken after killing had tested positive for marijuana was relevant and admissible as part of res gestae to show the influence of drugs on defendant's state of mind at the time of the killing. Giddens v. State, 206 Ga. App. 409, 425 S.E.2d 299 (1992).

Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence defendant's unredacted taped statement to police in a case in which defendant was ultimately convicted of malice murder; even though the statement contained evidence that defendant was under the influence of drugs at the time the crime was committed, such evidence was deemed part of the res gestae and was admissible as such even though the statement incidentally placed defendant's character in evidence. Cunningham v. State, 279 Ga. 694, 620 S.E.2d 374 (2005).

Evidence of alcohol use. — In a prosecution for driving under the influence, failure to stop at a stop sign, violating the open container law, and improper lane usage, evidence that defendant previously drove while under the influence of alcohol and with an open container in the car was admissible as circumstantial evidence of defendant's bent of mind and course of conduct on the night in question. McCullough v. State, 230 Ga. App. 98, 495 S.E.2d 338 (1998).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by admitting evidence of a prior accident involving an incident of driving under the influence to show bent of mind and course of conduct; probative value of the prior incident was not outweighed by the prejudicial effect of the evidence. Harris v. State, 272 Ga. App. 366, 612 S.E.2d 557 (2005).

Defendant's three prior driving under the influence (DUI) convictions were properly admitted in defendant's DUI trial as similar transaction evidence to show bent of mind and course of conduct as in each of the previous cases, defendant was arrested for DUI while driving late at night and consented to a breath test that showed that defendant was well over the legal limit; an almost 15-year lapse of time after one previous conviction went to the weight of the evidence. Moody v. State, 273 Ga. App. 670, 615 S.E.2d 803 (2005).

Prior use of a firearm. — Defendant's prior offense of the unprovoked use of a firearm to threaten a driver who disagreed with defendant's taking of a parking space was admissible because the offense showed defendant's propensity to settle disagreements with a gun, to act violently and impulsively to disappointment or misunderstanding, and to resort to the use of a gun with little provocation. Davis v. State, 244 Ga. App. 708, 536 S.E.2d 596 (2000).

Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of defendant's conviction several years earlier for voluntary manslaughter as evidence of the prior conviction was admissible as substantive evidence of defendant's guilt on the current charge against defendant of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon. Laster v. State, 276 Ga. 645, 581 S.E.2d 522 (2003).

Prior threat to kill another. — Witnesses testimony that defendant had recently come to the witnesses' residences in an intoxicated state and threatened the witnesses by pointing a loaded, cocked shotgun at the witnesses was admissible to show a common course of conduct and state of mind of the defendant in a time frame substantially close to the date on which the murder occurred. Hooks v. State, 253 Ga. 141, 317 S.E.2d 531 (1984).

Evidence of other crime not generally admissible. — Testimony as to a crime other than that for which the defendant is being tried is not ordinarily admissible. Loughridge v. State, 181 Ga. 261, 182 S.E. 12 (1935); Chambers v. State, 76 Ga. App. 269, 45 S.E.2d 724 (1947); Wiggins v. State, 80 Ga. App. 258, 55 S.E.2d 842 (1949); Mims v. State, 207 Ga. 118, 60 S.E.2d 373 (1950); Kelley v. State, 98 Ga. App. 324, 105 S.E.2d 798 (1958); Brown v. State, 118 Ga. App. 617, 165 S.E.2d 185 (1968); Dawson v. State, 120 Ga. App. 242, 170 S.E.2d 45 (1969); Nooner v. State, 131 Ga. App. 563, 206 S.E.2d 660 (1974); Perry v. State, 154 Ga. App. 559, 269 S.E.2d 63 (1980), overruled on other grounds, Joiner v. State, 231 Ga. App. 61, 497 S.E.2d 642 (1998); State v. Johnson, 246 Ga. 654, 272 S.E.2d 321 (1980).

Testimony that a defendant engaged in other criminal transactions is prejudicial to the defendant in the case for which the defendant is on trial, not because it has no probative value but because it has too much, as tending to indicate that defendant is of a criminal bent of mind and therefore more likely than the average citizen to have committed the act of which defendant is accused. Cardell v. State, 119 Ga. App. 848, 168 S.E.2d 889 (1969).

General rule is that in a criminal trial evidence which in any manner shows or tends to show that the accused has committed other criminal acts is irrelevant and inadmissible as that evidence tends to place the accused's character into evidence. Perry v. State, 158 Ga. App. 349, 280 S.E.2d 390 (1981); Bankston v. State, 159 Ga. App. 342, 283 S.E.2d 319 (1981), cert. denied, 454 U.S.

Proof of other crimes is never admissible (except in cases when the defendant has personally put the defendant's character in issue) where its chief or only probative value consists in showing that the defendant is, by reason of the defendant's bad character, more likely to have committed the crime than the defendant otherwise would have been. To admit such evidence, it must have relevancy and probative value from some other point of view. Jones v. State, 159 Ga. App. 634, 284 S.E.2d 651 (1981).

Similar transaction evidence was properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 to show that the defendant had committed a prior armed robbery of a retail establishment when the defendant was unable to support oneself and needed money. Johnson v. State, 277 Ga. App. 41, 625 S.E.2d 411 (2005).

Evidence of defendant's drug use. — Witnesses' brief testimony that the defendant would sell cocaine to the witnesses because of a prior relationship, was necessary to explain why the witnesses were approached to make the purchase, and why neither an undercover officer nor a confidential informant could accompany one of the witnesses to the defendant's residence, and the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting the testimony. Smith v. State, 278 Ga. App. 315, 628 S.E.2d 722 (2006).

In a drug case when cocaine, marijuana, and a scale were found in the car the defendant was driving, and the defendant gave police a false name, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of similar transactions; in all of the transactions, the defendant either possessed cocaine or was in direct proximity to cocaine, the defendant possessed scales in two of the other offenses, and in all but one of the offenses the defendant gave the police a false name. Jackson v. State, 284 Ga. App. 619, 644 S.E.2d 491 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 521 (Ga. 2007).

In a prosecution for two counts of possession of less than one ounce of marijuana, evidence of the defendant's three prior convictions for the same offense was properly admitted. Given that the defendant denied possessing marijuana in two of the prior cases and in the case at bar, the prior transactions were probative of the defendant's bent of mind and course of conduct. Neal v. State, 297 Ga. App. 223, 676 S.E.2d 864 (2009).

Admission of similar transaction evidence in a case charging the defendant with possession of cocaine with intent to distribute, O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30(b), and obstructing or hindering law enforcement officers, O.C.G.A. § 16-10-24, was proper because, in both the similar transaction and the incident leading to the charges being tried, the defendant was arrested in possession of cocaine and “sale-sized” baggies after seeking to avoid police; the trial court also gave an instruction that the similar transaction evidence was limited to the purpose of showing the defendant’s bent of mind in committing the charged offenses. Cotton v. State, 297 Ga. App. 664, 678 S.E.2d 128 (2009).

Trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence to show a defendant’s course of conduct and intent in the defendant’s trial for public indecency and sexual battery as in each of the similar transactions, defendant approached a woman previously unknown to the defendant in a public place, attempted to talk to the woman, and then engaged in sexually inappropriate behavior; in the sexual battery incidents and one similar transaction, the defendant either bit or licked the victims on their buttocks while the victims were shopping and in the public indecency incident and two of the similar transactions, the defendant exposed oneself. Harmon v. State, 281 Ga. App. 35, 635 S.E.2d 348 (2006), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 137 (Ga. 2007).

In a marijuana possession case involving a stop of a car in which the defendant was a passenger, the trial court did not err under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 in permitting evidence that the defendant was previously stopped for speeding and a significant amount of marijuana was found in the car; since the defendant’s constructive possession was at issue, the state was permitted to use the prior offense to show the defendant’s intent, bent of mind, and course of conduct, the incidents occurred approximately a year apart and involved similar conduct, and the probative value of the evidence was not outweighed by any unfair prejudice that resulted. Curtis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 322, 638 S.E.2d 773 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 203 (Ga. 2007).

With regard to a defendant’s conviction for the malice murder of the defendant’s husband, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence of a similar transaction as to the defendant poisoning a boyfriend with antifreeze via being fed green Jell-O because the defendant was intimate with both victims; both men went to the hospital complaining of flu-like symptoms soon before each man died; both men died from the unique cause of antifreeze poisoning; the defendant was the last person to see either man alive; both men died soon after the defendant served them Jell-O; and the defendant, who had financial problems before the deaths of both men, collected substantial money in connection with each man’s death. Turner v. State, 281 Ga. 647, 641 S.E.2d 527 (2007).

When a defendant was charged with violating O.C.G.A. § 16-8-60(b), the admission of similar crimes evidence did not violate due process; evidence that following the defendant’s arrest on the Georgia charge, the defendant had been arrested in Florida for possession of illegally reproduced recordings was appropriate for showing scheme and course of conduct, and the Florida act was sufficiently similar to the Georgia charges. Hayward-El v. State, 284 Ga. App. 125, 643 S.E.2d 242 (2007).

Guilty plea to earlier offense properly admitted. — In the malice murder and armed robbery case, the trial court did not err under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 in admitting into evidence the defendant’s guilty plea to an earlier robbery; the crimes were close in time, two years apart, each involved the morning robbery of a lone male at a convenience store, and in both robberies, the robbery was accomplished with a weapon other than a firearm, a borrowed vehicle was used, money was taken from the register, and the employee was forcibly moved around the store. Daniels v. State, 281 Ga. 226, 637 S.E.2d 403 (2006).

Conviction of sex offense admissible in failure to register as offender trial. — Defendant’s motion to sever the failure to register as a sex offender counts under former O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12 from the remaining aggravated sodomy and child molestation counts was properly denied as: (1) the defendant was not entitled to severance as a matter of right since the charges involved a series of acts which were connected together; (2) the case was not so complex as to impair the jury's ability to distinguish the evidence and to apply the law intelligently to the counts as joined; and (3) the failure to sever the failure to register as a sex offender counts was proper as the failure to report charges were legally material to the crimes against two children because the failure constituted evasive conduct that was circumstantial evidence of guilt and evidence of the conduct underlying the defendant's conviction of a sex offense that was admissible as a similar transaction. Bryson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 36, 638 S.E.2d 181 (2006).

Trial court did not err in admitting into evidence a no contest plea and in "making reference" to the plea with regard to the similar transaction evidence because the defendant's failure to object to the introduction of the evidence precluded review of the issue on appeal; further, the plea was admissible to show a conviction for purposes of the defendant's alleged failure to register as a sex offender under former O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12 and the jury was permitted to consider the plea as similar transaction evidence. Bryson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 36, 638 S.E.2d 181 (2006).

Prior difficulty with witness properly admitted. — In the defendant's criminal case, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 a prior difficulty the defendant previously had with one of the witnesses in the case; the evidence at issue was the defendant's performance of sexual acts on a juvenile victim prior to the acts that were alleged in the indictment, and this was relevant to show the defendant's motive, intent, and bent of mind in committing the acts against the victim for which the defendant was indicted. Clark v. State, 282 Ga. App. 248, 638 S.E.2d 397 (2006).

Admission of prior conviction for indecent exposure. — In a sexual battery case, it was proper to admit similar transaction evidence of a prior conviction for indecent exposure. Although the present incident involved the defendant groping the victim's breast, during both incidents, the defendant commented on the victim's appearance, asked the victim to look at the defendant, and began masturbating in the victim's presence; the proof of the prior incident tended to establish the charged offense and was also relevant to rebut the defendant's claim that it was the victim who had exposed the victim's breasts to the defendant by showing the defendant's course of conduct, bent of mind, and scheme. Romo v. State, 288 Ga. App. 237, 653 S.E.2d 832 (2007).

Trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence: in both incidents, which occurred seven months apart, the defendant had a verbal disagreement with young unarmed males, demanded that they leave the premises, and when they refused to comply, retrieved a particular make of weapon and fired it at or near the victims, then calmly walked inside. Johnson v. State, 289 Ga. App. 435, 657 S.E.2d 333 (2008).

When defendant was accused of robbing an auto parts store, similar transaction evidence was properly admitted; the evidence showed defendant's participation in nine other armed robberies of retail establishments in the same metropolitan area over a seven-month period, including six robberies at five other auto parts stores. Wyche v. State, 291 Ga. App. 165, 661 S.E.2d 226 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 914 (Ga. 2008).

Defendant was charged with raping a mentally retarded 27-year-old. Evidence that two years earlier the defendant was convicted of taking indecent liberties with an eight- and an 11-year-old child was properly admitted as the evidence was probative to show the defendant's lustful disposition toward persons of limited mental capacity, and the evidence's relevance outweighed any prejudice. Kent v. State, 294 Ga. App. 134, 668 S.E.2d 442 (2008).

In a prosecution for felony murder, armed robbery, and burglary, it was not error to admit evidence of an armed robbery that the defendant and the codefendant committed two weeks before the charged crimes as the trial court's conclusion that the two crimes were sufficiently similar was not clearly erroneous. Jackson v. State, 284 Ga. 484, 668 S.E.2d 700 (2008).

In a malice murder prosecution when the victim was violently stabbed and severely beaten, evidence that an officer saw the defendant violently attack an acquaintance as the result of a minor disagreement was properly submitted as a similar transaction to show the defendant's bent of mind and course of conduct. Dixon v. State, 285 Ga. 312, 677 S.E.2d 76 (2009).

Incident occurring eight years ago admitted. — Similar transaction evidence of an eight-year-old incident in which the defendant robbed two victims at gunpoint was not too remote in time or dissimilar to the armed robbery and aggravated assault charges the defendant was on trial for, and was thus properly admitted to show course of conduct, bent of mind, motive, and identity. Wallace v. State, 295 Ga. App. 452, 671 S.E.2d 911 (2009).

Trial court properly allowed similar transaction evidence in the defendant's trial for malice murder, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-1(b), to show course of conduct; the defendant, who was working as a security officer at a government building was charged with attacking a coworker without provocation. The state was permitted to present evidence of a similar transaction from eight years earlier in which the defendant, wearing the uniform of a security guard, ran down the stairs of a train station to the platform, grabbed a man awaiting the arrival of a train, beat and kicked the victim, threw the victim on the train tracks, and when the victim climbed back on the platform, the defendant resumed beating and kicking the victim until transit police arrived. Hicks v. State, 285 Ga. 386, 677 S.E.2d 111 (2009).

Eleven-year lapse does not render prior similar offense inadmissible. — Eleven-year lapse of time between defendant's similar prior sex offense and the one on trial did not itself render evidence of the prior offense inadmissible. It was one of the more important factors in considering admissibility; once it crossed that threshold, it thereafter affected the weight and credibility of the testimony. Hill v. State, 183 Ga. App. 404, 359 S.E.2d 190 (1987).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting defendant's conviction for criminal attempt, second-degree sexual assault, in which the victim was over 25 years old, but was developmentally disabled and mildly retarded; this evidence was admissible in defendant's trial for child molestation, attempted child molestation, enticing a child for indecent purposes, and statutory rape to show course of conduct, bent of mind, lustful disposition, and modus operandi and as tending to corroborate the child victims' testimony; the conviction, which occurred almost 11 years earlier, was not too remote to be admissible. Leaptrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Testimony from other rape victims. — In a rape prosecution, similar transaction testimony from the defendant's prior rape victims was properly admitted, as the testimony was probative of the defendant's course of conduct, intent, modus operandi, and lustful disposition, and corroborated the victim's testimony that the defendant claimed to have previously raped persons that "nobody would believe." Sanders v. State, 297 Ga. App. 897, 678 S.E.2d 579 (2009).

When the defendant was accused of touching the "private part" of a 12-year-old girl, it was proper to admit evidence of a 22-year-old woman's rape. Both victims were females with whom the defendant had a previous good relationship and over whom he had authority, and both incidents occurred in the middle of the night when the victims were not fully alert or fully capable of resisting; a mere difference in the victims' ages would not render a prior transaction inadmissible. Walley v. State, 298 Ga. App. 483, 680 S.E.2d 550 (2009).

Exceptions to prohibition of evidence of other crimes. — When the extraneous crime forms part of the res gestae, or is one of a system of mutually dependent crimes, or is evidence of guilty knowledge, or may bear upon the question of the identity of the accused or articles connected with the offense, or is evidence of prior attempts by the accused to commit the same offense upon the victim as that for which the defendant stands charged, or when the proof of the extraneous crime tends to prove malice, intent, motive, or the like, then its admission as evidence may be proper. Cawthon v. State, 119 Ga. 395, 46 S.E. 897 (1904); Wilson v. State, 173 Ga. 275, 160 S.E. 319 (1931); Williams v. State, 51 Ga. App. 319, 180 S.E. 369 (1935).

When evidence of other criminal transactions is a part of the res gestae or tends to show motive, or to show a course of conduct pointing toward and leading to the crime or to the concealment of the crime or the identity of the perpetrator thereof, such evidence is admissible as an exception to the general rule which makes evidence of other criminal transactions inadmissible under most circumstances. Richards v. State, 157 Ga. App. 601, 278 S.E.2d 63 (1981).

Evidence of another crime is admissible when it is part of a course of criminal conduct if it is a part of the res gestae. Whitfield v. State, 159 Ga. App. 398, 283 S.E.2d 627 (1981).

Independent crimes are admissible to show motive, intent, plan, identity, bent of mind, or course of conduct. In order for these independent acts to be admissible it must be shown that the defendant was the perpetrator of the independent crime and that there is sufficient similarity of the former independent crime that it tends to prove the latter crime. Weathersby v. State, 262 Ga. 126, 414 S.E.2d 200 (1992).

Explanation of why officer investigated defendant. — Because evidence of defendant's prior crimes was relevant to explain why a police officer investigated defendant, the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence. Smith v. State, 274 Ga. App. 852, 619 S.E.2d 358 (2005).

Prior crimes committed by defendant, including the murder of a store owner and an armed robbery, were properly admitted, not as similar transactions, but as evidence to show the motive, course of conduct, and bent of mind; moreover, evidence of the robbery was sufficiently similar to the current armed robbery charges. Grimes v. State, 280 Ga. 363, 628 S.E.2d 580 (2006).

Admission of evidence of defendant's prior misdemeanor convictions was harmless error. — Trial court did not commit reversible error when the court: (1) granted the state's motion in limine prohibiting admission of evidence that another person confessed to the crime; (2) permitted a police officer to explain the officer's conduct under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2; and (3) allowed the state to introduce evidence of defendant's prior misdemeanor convictions under O.C.G.A. §§ 24-2-2 and 24-9-20(b); thus, defendant failed to show that counsel's trial strategies on these issues constituted ineffective assistance of counsel. Harris v.

Admission of irrelevant evidence of affair did not require mistrial. — During a trial for felony murder while in the commission of cruelty to a child, evidence that a defendant's romantic partner did not know that the defendant was married was irrelevant; although the defendant's objection to the admission of the evidence was improperly overruled, the defendant's motion for a mistrial was properly denied because a mistrial was not mandated. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. 373, 637 S.E.2d 652 (2006).

Testimony as to circumstances connected with the accused's arrest is admissible even though the testimony incidentally shows the commission of another crime. Humphries v. State, 154 Ga. App. 596, 269 S.E.2d 90 (1980); Cleveland v. State, 155 Ga. App. 267, 270 S.E.2d 687 (1980); Woodard v. State, 155 Ga. App. 533, 271 S.E.2d 671 (1980).

When evidence is relevant for the purpose of showing the circumstances of the arrest, the evidence will not be excluded because the evidence incidentally shows the commission of another crime. Bryan v. State, 157 Ga. App. 635, 278 S.E.2d 177 (1981).

Testimony that an officer had gone to defendant's home to execute an arrest warrant for a probation violation explained the officer's presence at defendant's home and the officer's observation of defendant's use of marijuana; the testimony did not put defendant's character in issue and was, therefore, admissible. Jones v. State, 268 Ga. App. 246, 601 S.E.2d 763 (2004).

Because the police found weapons in defendant's car, after obtaining consent to search, when the police arrested defendant for stalking, the evidence was properly admitted in defendant's subsequent trial for burglary and aggravated assault to show the circumstances connected with the stalking arrest. Blackwell v. State, 274 Ga. App. 579, 618 S.E.2d 190 (2005).

When extreme prejudice results. — Statement volunteered by police officer, witness for the state, on cross-examination, that the defendant was apprehended after being shot while attempting to break into another house, was so prejudicial that the mere statement by the court that the jury was not to consider it did not cure the error, and a reversal was demanded on this ground. Felton v. State, 93 Ga. App. 48, 90 S.E.2d 607 (1955).

Trial for escape. — General rule which prohibits reference to other crimes by the accused is not fully applicable to a trial for escape, which by its nature alludes to a prior act resulting in incarceration or conviction; evidence of the escapee's original crime is often an unavoidable aspect of the state's proof with regard to the lawfulness of confinement. Johnson v. State, 188 Ga. 771, 4 S.E.2d 639 (1939); Carter v. State, 155 Ga. App. 840, 273 S.E.2d 417 (1980).

In trial for escape and other offenses, it was not error to introduce record of prior conviction to show lawfulness of confinement without a limiting instruction. Greene v. State, 155 Ga. App. 222, 270 S.E.2d 386 (1980).

Conviction relied upon must have occurred prior to the escape. — When a conviction does not occur prior to the escape and thus is not relied upon to establish the felony grade of offense, reference to the conviction is unnecessary and is error. Carter v. State, 155 Ga. App. 840, 273 S.E.2d 417 (1980).

Proof of other crime required. — In order to justify the admission of evidence relating to an independent crime committed by the accused, it is absolutely essential that there should be evidence establishing the fact that the independent crime was committed by the accused, and satisfactorily connecting that crime with the offense for which the accused is indicted. Robinson v. State, 62 Ga. App. 355, 7 S.E.2d 758 (1940); Johnson v. State, 152 Ga. App. 624, 263 S.E.2d 509 (1979); Albert v. State, 152 Ga. App. 708, 263 S.E.2d 685 (1979); Sweeny v. State, 152 Ga. App. 765, 264 S.E.2d 260 (1979); Rhodes v. State, 153 Ga. App. 306, 265 S.E.2d 110 (1980); Smith v. State, 154 Ga. App. 497, 268 S.E.2d 714 (1980); Haygood v. State, 154 Ga. App. 633, 269 S.E.2d 480 (1980); Head v. State, 246 Ga. 360, 271 S.E.2d 452 (1980); Rakestraw v. State, 155 Ga. App. 563, 271 S.E.2d 696 (1980); State v. Johnson, 246 Ga. 654, 272 S.E.2d 321 (1980).

Evidence of the commission of independent crimes by the accused may be admitted even when the defendant is acquitted of the other offense. Albert v. State, 152 Ga. App. 708, 263 S.E.2d 685 (1979), conviction reversed, Albert v. Montgomery, 732 F.2d 865 (11th Cir. 1984) (holding that the principle of collateral estoppel prevents the introduction for any purpose of evidence of crime of which a defendant has been acquitted).

Jury is to receive evidence of the commission of previous crimes only for the purposes specified, and not for the purpose of determining by this alone the guilt of the accused. Fitzgerald v. State, 52 Ga. App. 33, 182 S.E. 77 (1935).

In a prosecution for vehicular homicide and driving under the influence (DUI), the trial court properly allowed evidence regarding the defendant's prior DUI, as the defendant had pled guilty to that offense, the blood test results appeared on the uniform traffic citation, a certified copy of the accusation and plea was entered into evidence, and an officer testified that the defendant was the person arrested on that charge. Hurston v. State, 278 Ga. App. 472, 629 S.E.2d 18 (2006).

Although the modification of a defendant's first offender status by the Georgia Crime Information Center was authorized by O.C.G.A. § 42-8-65, it was not a conviction because only the trial court that imposed first offender probation was authorized to revoke that status. Thus, as the defendant was not shown to have been adjudicated guilty of the prior crimes, the state improperly impeached the defendant with evidence of the defendant's first offender record. Lee v. State, 294 Ga. App. 796, 670 S.E.2d 488 (2008).

Criminal confession is not rendered inadmissible because the language used therein indicates that the accused had committed another and separate offense. Dampier v. State, 245 Ga. 882, 268 S.E.2d 349, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 938, 101 S. Ct. 337, 66 L. Ed. 2d 161 (1980).

Mere accusation or indictment insufficient. — Mere introduction of an accusation with pleas of guilty thereon, embracing the same crime for which defendant is on trial, without proof of details as to the manner in which previous acts were committed, does not constitute similarity of transactions so connected as to reveal knowledge, plan, or system, and therefore the court erred in admitting, over objections, the former accusation and plea of guilty of defendant, charged with possession of non-taxpaid whiskey, to a previous charge of the same offense. Chambers v. State, 76 Ga. App. 269, 45 S.E.2d 724 (1947); Waters v. State, 82 Ga.

App. 608, 61 S.E.2d 794 (1950).

Use of form to pose prohibited question.

— It is error requiring the grant of a new trial for the state to put the plaintiff's character in issue by using a form completed by the plaintiff to ask a question which would otherwise be prohibited, and then introducing into the evidence the defendant's entire past criminal record to impeach the answer to that question. Mikle v. State, 236 Ga. 748, 225 S.E.2d 275 (1976).

Res gestae. — Generally, on a prosecution for a particular crime, evidence of another and distinct crime wholly independent from that for which one is on trial is inadmissible; but there are exceptions to this rule: one is, if the separate crime was committed as a part of the same transaction as that for which the accused is being tried, and forms a part of the res gestae. Bailey v. State, 214 Ga. 409, 105 S.E.2d 320 (1958) (abandonment); Williams v. State, 223 Ga. 773, 158 S.E.2d 373 (1967) (rape); Blanton v. State, 150 Ga. App. 559, 258 S.E.2d 174 (1979) (prostitution); Mosley v. State, 150 Ga. App. 802, 258 S.E.2d 608 (1979) (armed robbery); Bradley v. State, 154 Ga. App. 333, 268 S.E.2d 388 (1980) (burglary); Hayes v. State, 199 Ga. 251, 34 S.E.2d 97 (1945) (robbery); Durham v. State, 243 Ga. 408, 254 S.E.2d 359 (1979) (rape and murder); Deshazier v. State, 155 Ga. App. 526, 271 S.E.2d 664 (1980) (vehicular homicide).

When transactions involving other crimes and the alleged bad character of the defendant are so connected in time and event as to be part of the same transaction as that for which defendant is being tried, those transactions are admissible as a clear exception to the general rule of inadmissibility of other transactions. Kennedy v. State, 193 Ga. App. 784, 389 S.E.2d 350 (1989).

Three robberies of drive-through restaurants located within a short distance of each other occurred in less than a 24-hour period and the suspect walked up to the drive-through window wearing a green army jacket and using a blue car, were sufficiently similar and constituted part of the res gestae; therefore, the trial court did not err in admitting the evidence. Houston v. State, 270 Ga. App. 456, 606 S.E.2d 883 (2004).

Since the defendant produced a prison identification card voluntarily, and volunteered information about a prior conviction when a police officer asked if the defendant had a driver's license, the evidence was admissible as part of the res gestae despite its prejudicial nature. Bertholf v. State, 298 Ga. App. 612, 680 S.E.2d 652 (2009).

Connection between crimes in mind of actor. — To make one criminal act evidence of another, a connection between them must have existed in the mind of the actor, linking them together for some purpose the actor intended to accomplish; or it must be necessary to identify the person of the actor, by a connection which shows that the actor who committed the one must have done the other. Loughridge v. State, 181 Ga. 261, 182 S.E. 12 (1935); Andrews v. State, 196 Ga. 84, 26 S.E.2d 263, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 780, 64 S. Ct. 87, 88 L. Ed. 468 (1943), overruled on other grounds, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955); Kelley v. State, 98 Ga. App. 324, 105 S.E.2d 798 (1958).

Logical connection between crimes. — When one is on trial charged with the commission of a crime, proof of a distinct and independent offense is never admissible, unless there is some logical connection between the two, from which it can be said that proof of the one tends to establish the other. Wilson v. State, 173 Ga. 275, 160 S.E. 319 (1931); Scott v. State, 46 Ga. App. 213, 167 S.E. 210 (1932); McMichen v. State, 62 Ga. App. 50, 7 S.E.2d 749 (1940); Robinson v. State, 62 Ga. App. 355, 7 S.E.2d 758 (1940); Chambers v. State, 76 Ga. App. 269, 45 S.E.2d 724 (1947); Fowler v. State, 82 Ga. App. 197, 60 S.E.2d 473 (1950); Gilstrap v. State, 90 Ga. App. 12, 81 S.E.2d 872 (1954); Spinks v. State, 92 Ga. App. 878, 90 S.E.2d 590 (1955); Bailey v. State, 214 Ga. 409, 105 S.E.2d 320 (1958); Cardell v. State, 119 Ga. App. 848, 168 S.E.2d 889 (1969); Nicholson v. State, 125 Ga. App. 24, 186 S.E.2d 287 (1971); Wooten v. State, 125 Ga. App. 635, 188 S.E.2d 409 (1972); Lee v. State, 154 Ga. App. 562, 269 S.E.2d 65 (1980); Haygood v. State, 154 Ga. App. 633, 269 S.E.2d 480 (1980); Carroll v. State, 155 Ga. App. 514, 271 S.E.2d 650 (1980); Rakestraw v. State, 155 Ga. App. 563, 271 S.E.2d 696 (1980); State v. Johnson, 246 Ga. 654, 272 S.E.2d 321 (1980); Paxton v. State, 160 Ga. App. 19, 285 S.E.2d 741 (1981).

Mere fact that the defendant has recently committed a crime of the same sort as that for which defendant is on trial establishes no probative connection between the two crimes. Cardell v. State, 119 Ga. App. 848, 168 S.E.2d 889 (1969).

If the evidence be so dubious that the judge does not clearly perceive the connection between the crime with which the defendant is charged and another offense, the benefit of the doubt should be given to the prisoner, instead of suffering the minds of the jurors to be prejudiced by an independent fact, carrying with it no proper evidence of the particular guilt. Robinson v. State, 62 Ga. App. 355, 7 S.E.2d 758 (1940).

Evidence of the commission of one crime is not admissible upon the trial of the defendant for another crime, when the sole purpose is to show that the defendant is guilty of such other crime. Honea v. State, 181 Ga. 40, 181 S.E. 416 (1935); Loughridge v. State, 181 Ga. 261, 182 S.E. 12 (1935); Cooper v. State, 182 Ga. 42, 184 S.E. 716 (1936); Harrison v. State, 60 Ga. App. 610, 4 S.E.2d 602 (1939).

Only separate crimes which are admissible are those that are either similar or logically connected to the crime for which defendant is being tried, and crimes which are not similar or which are not logically connected to the crime for which defendant is being tried should be excluded from evidence; proof of crimes which are similar or are closely connected to the crime charged does tend to establish the crime charged. Bissell v. State, 157 Ga. App. 711, 278 S.E.2d 415 (1981).

There are exceptions to the "other crimes" rule when there is sufficient logical connection between the independent crime and the offense charged so that it can be said that proof of the former tends to prove the latter. Perry v. State, 158 Ga. App. 349, 280 S.E.2d 390 (1981); Kilgore v. State, 176 Ga. App. 121, 335 S.E.2d 465 (1985).

When there is no question that the modus operandi of a past burglary for which defendant had been convicted is similar to that of the burglary for which the defendant is on trial, a logical connection exists between the two offenses sufficient to render the prior offense relevant and admissible for the purpose of establishing the defendant's criminal intent in the case for which defendant is on trial. Scott v. State, 162 Ga. App. 541, 292 S.E.2d 125 (1982).

In defendant's trial for forgery and racketeering for selling fake badges for a golf tournament to a ticket agency, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting similar transaction evidence because all of the similar transactions were used, not to show identity, but to show bent of mind and course of conduct as: (1) four of the five transactions involved forgeries through which defendant appropriated the checks of other people and attempted to profit from those checks and at issue was whether defendant attempted to profit from badges that were constructed to resemble those created by a golf course; and (2) the final transaction even involved a scheme wherein defendant represented to potential buyers that defendant had golf tournament badges to sell to them, which defendant never delivered. With respect to the similarity requirement for admitting evidence of prior crimes, there can be substantial variation of circumstances when there exists a logical connection between crimes which are essentially dissimilar, and the issue is whether the extrinsic transactions are relevant to the issues in the trial of the case. When similar transaction evidence is being introduced to prove motive, intent, or bent of mind, it requires a lesser degree of similarity to meet the test of admissibility than when such evidence is being introduced to prove identity. Davis v. State, 264 Ga. App. 128, 589 S.E.2d 700 (2003).

Trial court did not err in ruling that similar transaction evidence was admissible because the ex-wife's testimony closely paralleled that of the victim, defendant's ex-girlfriend; in both cases defendant violated a restraining order, called the victim names, picked on bodily faults, and threatened both the victim and the victim's children. Maskivish v. State, 276 Ga. App. 701, 624 S.E.2d 160 (2005).

In a prosecution for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, and statutory rape allegedly committed by the defendant against three of the defendant's children, testimony from one of the defendant's other sons concerning similar transactions committed against that son was properly admitted in order to show the defendant's bent of mind and lustful disposition towards the defendant's own children. McCoy v. State, 278 Ga. App. 492, 629 S.E.2d 493 (2006).

Admission of evidence of a defendant's theft of another vehicle as similar transaction evidence to show course of conduct, intent, and identity was not an abuse of discretion since, as in the present case, the defendant stole the other car from a salesman during a test drive with the use of a weapon and then forced the salesman from the car next to a freeway exit ramp. Mullins v. State, 280 Ga. App. 689, 634 S.E.2d 850 (2006).

Identity, motive, malice, intent, plan, scheme, bent of mind, and course of conduct. — While it is the general rule that upon the trial of a person for a criminal offense, other and distinct criminal transactions cannot be given in evidence against the defendant, yet, according to the weight of authority, evidence of other transaction may be received as tending to show motive or intent, when the transactions are so connected in time and similar in their other relations that the same motive may reasonably be imputed to all. Bates v. State, 18 Ga. App. 718, 90 S.E. 481 (1916); Hales v. State, 250 Ga. 112, 296 S.E.2d 577 (1982).

Proof of another offense is admissible on the trial of a defendant charged with the commission of a crime even though such evidence incidentally places the defendant's character in issue, when evidence of such other crime tends to show identity, motive, malice, intent, plan, scheme, bent of mind, or course of conduct. Wilson v. State, 173 Ga. 275, 160 S.E. 319 (1931); Scott v. State, 46 Ga. App. 213, 167 S.E. 210 (1932); Phillips v. State, 51 Ga. App. 675, 181 S.E. 233 (1935); *Honea v. App. 563, 284 S.E.2d 68 (1981).

Evidence of other crimes to prove malice, intent, and motive is admissible only when the act of which the accused stands charged would be legal in the absence of those elements. Thomas v. State, 239 Ga. 734, 238 S.E.2d 888 (1977).

Evidence of independent crimes will not be admitted unless its relevance to the issues at trial outweighs its prejudicial impact. Tuzman v. State, 145 Ga. App. 761, 244 S.E.2d 882 (1978).

Fact that defendant was not arrested and charged with the commission of the independent crimes does not render evidence of the commission of such crimes inadmissible for showing common motive, plan, or scheme. Woodard v. State, 155 Ga. App. 533, 271 S.E.2d 671 (1980).

When evidence of other crimes is admitted for the limited purpose of showing identity, plan, motive, scheme, bent of mind, or course of conduct, the other crimes need not be listed in the indictment as defendant is not on trial for those crimes. State v. Johnson, 246 Ga. 654, 272 S.E.2d 321 (1980).

Trial court did not err in admitting similar transaction testimony concerning defendant's use of keys to gain entry into the apartments of women, ostensibly for maintenance purposes, as the trial court's finding that the evidence was admissible to establish motive, intent, and course of conduct was not clearly erroneous. Oliver v. State, 276 Ga. 665, 581 S.E.2d 538 (2003).

Trial court did not err in admitting similar transaction evidence regarding a previous incident when defendant, while intoxicated, drove through a chain link fence and overturned a car as the evidence was relevant to defendant's bent of mind to get behind the wheel of a vehicle when it was less safe for defendant to do so, especially since defendant claimed in the present case that defendant had not been driving when the van defendant was in struck a guardrail, and the evidence showed that defendant smelled of alcohol. Lanning v. State, 261 Ga. App. 480, 583 S.E.2d 160 (2003).

Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of other crimes defendant committed on the same day defendant robbed a convenience store as both of the similar crimes involved robberies of a female victim working alone at a convenience store on the same day, just as occurred with the indicted offense, and the clerks' descriptions of defendant's clothing and physical appearance in the similar crimes resembled those of defendant in the indicted offense; accordingly, sufficient circumstantial evidence connected defendant to the offenses and allowed for admission of the evidence of similar crimes. Ferguson v. State, 262 Ga. App. 28, 584 S.E.2d 618 (2003).

Admission of evidence that defendant committed a prior crime was proper pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 when the defendant was on trial for having pursued defendant's former girlfriend in defendant's car, threatening to kill her because they broke up, and shooting at her, and there was evidence from a prior crime that the defendant had taken the same type of action against another former girlfriend; the court found that such evidence was properly admitted in order to prove identity, course of conduct, intent, and motive because there was obvious similarity between the crimes and the methods in which the crimes were carried out. Morris v. State, 263 Ga. App. 115, 587 S.E.2d 272 (2003).

Admission of evidence of a prior attempted rape of a neighbor in defendant's rape trial involving a different victim was not an abuse of discretion since the evidence was admitted to show defendant's lustful disposition, to evince defendant's propensity to sexually assault women defendant knew, and to corroborate the victim's testimony of no consent; a finding that the probative value of the evidence outweighed the prejudicial effect of the evidence was implicit in the trial court's decision to admit the evidence. Rowe v. State, 263 Ga. App. 367, 587 S.E.2d 781 (2003).

When a prior victim testified as to the similarities between the prior victim's encounter with defendant and the victim's, the prior victim's evidence was properly admitted pursuant to Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R.

Criminal Cases (Cont'd)2. Other Conduct or Crimes (Cont'd)

31.3(B) to show defendant's bent of mind, intent, and course of conduct; any inconsistencies in the prior victim's testimony affected only the weight and credibility. Williams v. State, 264 Ga. App. 115, 589 S.E.2d 676 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting similar transaction evidence of a first car-jacking to show bent of mind, course of conduct, and identity since: (1) both incidents constituted car-jackings committed with a gun pointed at the victim; (2) the incidents occurred within six days of each other; (3) the first car-jacking involved a car of the same make and color as one used in the car-jacking that was being tried; (4) the victim of the first car-jacking positively identified defendant as the perpetrator of the first car-jacking; and (5) the testimony of the victim of the first car-jacking was sufficient to meet the elements of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-44.1(b). Mullins v. State, 267 Ga. App. 393, 599 S.E.2d 340 (2004).

Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of three similar transaction offenses in defendant's trial for robbery, hijacking a motor vehicle, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon since the earlier incidents were sufficiently similar to show that defendant had a course of conduct and bent of mind to steal cars, particularly in a certain area, because: (1) on two prior occasions defendant was discovered driving stolen cars and was convicted of theft by receiving; and (2) as to the third similar transaction, a witness testified that a man showed the witness a gun and demanded that the witness give him the keys to a car, defendant was subsequently arrested and identified by the witness, and defendant was indicted for armed robbery and entered a guilty plea to the offense of robbery. Cain v. State, 268 Ga. App. 39, 601 S.E.2d 415 (2004).

Trial court did not err when the court admitted evidence of defendant's prior conviction for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute in defendant's current case in which defendant was charged with, inter alia, trafficking in cocaine as the evidence was admitted for the permissible purpose of showing defendant's bent of mind and course of conduct. Kates v. State, 271 Ga. App. 326, 609 S.E.2d 710 (2005).

Prejudicial impact of prior crimes evidence did not outweigh the probative value in defendant's fleeing or attempting to elude a police officer trial as the prior crimes evidence showed a pattern of running from police and of resisting arrest and was properly admitted to show course of conduct, bent of mind, and intent. Mills v. State, 273 Ga. App. 699, 615 S.E.2d 824 (2005).

Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of independent crimes to show identity, bent of mind, and course of conduct because the independent crimes and the charged crimes showed that defendant committed the burglaries with accomplices, that the defendant committed the burglaries during daylight hours, that defendant and the accomplices would choose a home to burglarize by driving around semi-rural areas until they found a home that looked empty and that "sat back" some distance from the street on which it was located, and that defendant used the brother's white van to commit the charged crimes and one of the independent crimes. Denny v. State, 280 Ga. 81, 623 S.E.2d 483 (2005).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in finding an earlier transaction sufficiently similar to the one for which a defendant was on trial and in admitting the evidence as to the prior transaction to show course of conduct, intent, and modus operandi, as, while some aspects of the earlier crime differed from the one for which the defendant was on trial: (1) the victims in both instances were young women who were strangers to the defendant; (2) both incidents occurred at night, at or near a bar; (3) the defendant approached the women from behind, brandished a weapon, threatened to kill the victims, and caused the victims physical harm; (4) both times the defendant was dressed in camouflage pants and a dark shirt; and (5) while the prior incident occurred more than 15 years earlier, the defendant had been out of jail for just over a year after serving the defendant's sentence for the similar transaction and, thus, the lapse of time was not a significant factor. Ellis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 17, 637 S.E.2d 729 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 66 (2007).

When the defendant was accused of the malice murder of the mother of defendant's child, the trial court did not err in admitting testimony about an earlier statement where the defendant said that the defendant would have shot the victim and the victim's male companion had the defendant's gun not jammed; such evidence was proper to show motive, intent, and bent of mind. Lowery v. State, 282 Ga. 68, 646 S.E.2d 67 (2007), cert. denied, U.S. , 128 S. Ct. 508, 169 L. Ed. 2d 355 (2007).

Introduction of certified copy of indictment proper. — In proving a prior offense for the purpose of proving identity, bent of mind, course of conduct, etc., it is proper to introduce a certified copy of the indictment and the plea or verdict of guilty. Scott v. State, 162 Ga. App. 541, 292 S.E.2d 125 (1982).

Standard for admitting evidence of prior crimes is well-settled: the state must show that: (1) it is introducing evidence of an independent offense or act for an appropriate purpose; (2) there is sufficient evidence to establish that an accused committed the independent offense or act; and (3) there is sufficient connection or similarity between the independent offense or act and the crime charged so that proof of the former tends to prove the latter. Cain v. State, 268 Ga. App. 39, 601 S.E.2d 415 (2004).

Similar transaction evidence admissible. — Similar transaction evidence was properly admitted to show defendant's state of mind, knowledge, or intent because, in both crimes, defendant worked with an accomplice to force the victims to cooperate by threatening to shoot the victims, and both crimes were committed in a brazen manner during the daytime without any attempt to hide defendant's identity. Pace v. State, 272 Ga. App. 16, 611 S.E.2d 694 (2005).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting similar transaction evidence of defendants' actions with another teen-age girl, which did not result in a conviction, to show defendant's lustful disposition, course of conduct, bent of mind, and modus operandi in dealing with teenage girls and to corroborate the testimony of the child victims regarding defendant's behavior toward the victims. Leaptrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Evidence of defendant's three prior convictions was properly admitted in defendant's entering an automobile trial as: (1) certified copies of the convictions were introduced and defendant was placed at the scene of the prior crimes; (2) the prior offenses and the charged offenses all involved acts of entering an automobile during the early morning hours in downtown Savannah; (3) the crimes could be admitted to show bent of mind and course of conduct; and (4) the prejudicial impact of the similar transaction evidence did not outweigh the probative value. Williams v. State, 273 Ga. App. 213, 614 S.E.2d 834 (2005).

Similar transaction evidence of crimes against a rape victim was properly admitted for identification purposes in the defendant's trial for assault because the witness testimony, DNA evidence, and the discovery of the rape victim's possessions in the defendant's car tied the defendant to the sexual assaults and because the assailant in both cases hid the assailant's face with a dark-colored raincoat and used the same gun. Lampkin v. State, 277 Ga. App. 237, 626 S.E.2d 199 (2006).

Trial court did not err in admitting similar transaction evidence to show a modus operandi as a modus operandi was similar to "course of conduct" and the state sought to admit the similar transaction for the purpose of showing course of conduct, intent, motive, and bent of mind; while the earlier crime included a sexual assault and the crimes for which the defendant was being tried did not, the addition of a sexual component to the earlier crime did not subtract from the notable similarities. The trial court's statement that "the only reason that there (was) not a sexual content to this crime (was), well, we don't know what would have happened, and certainly the event was abruptly halted, so the ruling (stood)" was made out of the presence of the jury and could not have affected the verdict. Ellis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 17, 637 S.E.2d 729 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 66 (2007).

Differences between the state's proffer of similar transaction evidence and a witness's testimony at trial were insignificant and affected neither the admissibility of the similar transaction evidence, nor the outcome of the trial, in that: (1) the state proffered that the victims were walking behind a bar, but the witness testified that the victims had passed a bar and were near a restaurant; (2) the state proffered that the defendant showed the victims a gun, but the witness testified that the witness saw the gun but not that the defendant showed the gun to the witness; and (3) the state proffered that the defendant forced both victims to remove all of their clothes, but the witness testified that the witness had to remove some of the witness's clothes. Ellis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 17, 637 S.E.2d 729 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 66 (2007).

There was a sufficient connection between an earlier drug crime and the one at issue to support the admission of similar transaction evidence. In both instances defendant's vehicle was stopped on or near a certain interstate highway for driving in an unlawful manner, and upon each stop defendant consented to a search of defendant's vehicle and the search yielded cocaine; there was no doubt that defendant committed the prior act, as defendant confessed to it. Buckholts v. State, 283 Ga. App. 254, 641 S.E.2d 246 (2007).

When the defendant was charged with malice murder, felony murder, and cruelty to children, it was proper to admit similar transaction evidence about the defendant's violent acts toward the defendant's elementary-school-aged siblings and about the defendant's wife-beating; the evidence at issue dealt with the defendant's violent behavior toward family members residing in the same home, even those significantly younger than the defendant. Collum v. State, 281 Ga. 719, 642 S.E.2d 640 (2007).

In a trial for driving with a suspended license, the trial court did not improperly admit evidence of seven similar transactions; the similar transactions occurred in the same area and most at about the same time of day as the charged crime, two involved the same car, and all showed the defendant's bent of mind to drive with a suspended license. Williams v. State, 285 Ga. App. 190, 645 S.E.2d 676 (2007).

When there was evidence that the defendant performed an oral act on the vagina of the ten-year-old victim while she was sleeping in a camper, it was proper to admit evidence of an incident 14 years before when the defendant had taken a four-year-old into a bedroom and performed a similar oral act on her vagina; the lapse of 14 years did not make the evidence inadmissible, and the incidents were sufficiently similar. Boileau v. State, 285 Ga. App. 221, 645 S.E.2d 577 (2007).

When the defendant pointed a gun at the victim twice after the victim flicked a cigarette that landed on the defendant's car seat, the trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence that two days before the incident, the defendant pointed a gun at the chest of a teenager who was wearing a T-shirt with a message that the defendant did not like. Moore v. State, 286 Ga. App. 313, 649 S.E.2d 337 (2007).

In a trial for arson, burglary, and malice murder, the trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence of a fire at the defendant's former home to show motive and course of conduct; before each incident, the defendant acted in a suspicious manner with regard to the fire, both fires occurred at homes to which the defendant had access, and the defendant had incurred substantial debt before each fire and reaped a financial benefit as a result of each fire. Bryant v. State, 282 Ga. 631, 651 S.E.2d 718 (2007).

In a sexual battery case involving a 13-year-old victim, the trial court properly admitted evidence of a similar transaction regarding a 12-year-old girl. The trial court found that both incidents involved girls of a similar age who developed some sort of romantic relationship with the defendant and that the incidents occurred at the same residence and at about the same time. Engle v. State, 290 Ga. App. 396, 659 S.E.2d 795 (2008).

In a malice murder case, a voluntary manslaughter conviction was properly admitted as similar transaction evidence since in both cases defendant knew the victim and obtained the weapon from the victim, both incidents arose from arguments with the victim and resulted in the victim being struck or shot in the head, neither victim was able to defend against the attack, and in both cases the defendant attempted to conceal evidence. Harvey v. State, 284 Ga. 8, 660 S.E.2d 528 (2008).

In a murder and aggravated assault prosecution, the trial court properly admitted similar transaction evidence for the limited purposes of showing motive, state of mind, bent of mind, course of conduct, and plan or scheme, as the similar transaction and the crimes for which the defendant was on trial occurred in very close proximity, in time and location, and each involved the defendant using a handgun to shoot an unsuspecting victim without provocation. Abdullah v. State, 284 Ga. 399, 667 S.E.2d 584 (2008).

In defendant's prosecution for, inter alia, aggravated child molestation, evidence that the defendant previously engaged in a similar pattern of grooming a nine-year-old victim by, inter alia, giving the victim expensive presents before eventually molesting the victim was properly admitted to show bent of mind, common scheme or plan, and modus operandi; any objection to that victim's recantation of the accusation at the time because of fear for the victim's mother only went to the weight and credibility of the victim's testimony rather than the testimony's admissibility. Cannon v. State, 296 Ga. App. 687, 675 S.E.2d 560 (2009).

Testimony of victim's sibling about unprosecuted offense in child molestation case permitted. — Trial court did not err in allowing similar acts testimony by the victim's half-sister in an aggravated sexual battery and child molestation trial. Although the half-sister did not allege penetration by the defendant, she explained that she awoke after he pulled at her shorts, and she described how the defendant fled across the room in much the same way that the victim testified that the defendant fled from her room when she stirred; furthermore, the fact that the half-sister did not speak out about the abuse prior to the victim's outcry did not warrant a determination that the trial court abused the court's discretion by allowing the half-sister's testimony. Hilliard v. State, 298 Ga. App. 473, 680 S.E.2d 541 (2009).

Evidence that defendant had previously transported marijuana. — Evidence that marijuana was found in the trunk of defendant's automobile supported the inference that the defendant had previously transported marijuana and was relevant to prove that defendant was predisposed to commit the crime for which the defendant was indicted and to which the defendant raised the defense of entrapment, so that the evidence was sufficient to withstand a relevancy objection. Fancher v. State, 190 Ga. App. 438, 378 S.E.2d 923 (1989).

Scheme defined. — Plan, scheme, device, design, etc., means a peculiar or distinctive method of committing a crime which, if employed at another time by an accused, would tend to show the accused was the one who employed it this time. Nicholson v. State, 125 Ga. App. 24, 186 S.E.2d 287 (1971); Hammitt v. State, 183 Ga. App. 382, 359 S.E.2d 4, cert. denied, 183 Ga. App. 906, 359 S.E.2d 4 (1987).

Prior attempts by accused concerning same victim. — Testimony concerning a prior effort by an accused to commit the same crime upon the victim for which the accused is now charged is a long recognized exception to the general rule that evidence of prior crimes is inadmissible. Baker v. State, 245 Ga. 657, 266 S.E.2d 477 (1980); Haygood v. State, 154 Ga. App. 633, 269 S.E.2d 480 (1980).

Evidence of a subsequent successful conspiracy by defendant to murder her husband had a logical connection to the crime for which she was being tried, a separate conspiracy to murder him. Such evidence tends to show intent and state of mind, and certainly tends to establish conspiracy to murder the same victim. Buffington v. State, 171 Ga. App. 919, 321 S.E.2d 418 (1984).

Impeachment of defendant's specific testimony by contradictory evidence. — While the impeachment of a defendant's general credibility by proof of general bad character and of prior convictions is prohibited, impeachment of the specific testimony of a criminal defendant (e.g., "I never hurt nobody") may be accomplished by testimony that defendant did, in fact, hurt another, or by a certified copy of a conviction for a crime of physical violence. Williams v. State, 257 Ga. 761, 363 S.E.2d 535 (1988).

District attorney's reference to an indictment was an inappropriate means of impeaching, by contradictory evidence, defendant's statement that defendant had never hurt anyone. Williams v. State, 257 Ga. 761, 363 S.E.2d 535 (1988).

Exceptions to the general rule have been liberally extended in cases of sexual crimes. Perry v. State, 158 Ga. App. 349, 280 S.E.2d 390 (1981); Neal v. State, 159 Ga. App. 450, 283 S.E.2d 671 (1981).

Proof of crimes involving moral turpitude is admissible to impeach a witness who places the witness's character in issue through testimony given by the witness on direct examination. Emmett v. State, 199 Ga.

App. 650, 405 S.E.2d 707, cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 905, 405 S.E.2d 707 (1991).

In order for evidence of independent crime to be admissible as a circumstance of an arrest, it must be relevant to the circumstances of the arrest, which circumstances must, in turn, be relevant to the crime for which the defendant is on trial. Bryan v. State, 157 Ga. App. 635, 278 S.E.2d 177 (1981).

Conduct of defendant before, during the time of, and after commission of a crime may be considered by the jury in establishing defendant's intention and defendant's participation in order to determine whether or not such intention and conduct were sufficient corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice to sustain a conviction. This may be done by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence. Zuber v. State, 248 Ga. 314, 282 S.E.2d 900 (1981).

Defense counsel's failure to object to evidence that a burglar alarm went off at the house where defendant was arrested shortly before the defendant was arrested was not ineffective assistance of counsel because even if this evidence improperly placed defendant's character into evidence, contrary to O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2, there was no reasonable probability that defendant would have been acquitted, given the strength of other evidence against the defendant. Patterson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 341, 618 S.E.2d 81 (2005).

Conduct by family members. — Trial court erred in allowing the state's attorney to cross-examine the defendant, who was accused of possession of marijuana, as to whether other members of defendant's family had "been in trouble for marijuana." Hill v. State, 176 Ga. App. 509, 336 S.E.2d 276 (1985).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in curtailing defendant's cross-examination of the victim as to the victim's spouse's criminal activities since defendant argued that the victim might have been a participant in the criminal conduct and that, therefore, the victim's credibility would have to be tested against the victim's criminal conduct. Bell v. State, 265 Ga. App. 407, 593 S.E.2d 935 (2004).

Continuous course of conduct. — In a criminal prosecution, evidence of another crime is admissible when both crimes are part of a continuous course of conduct, closely connected in time, place, and manner of commission. Putman v. State, 251 Ga. 605, 308 S.E.2d 145 (1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 954, 104 S. Ct. 2161, 80 L. Ed. 2d 546 (1984).

Two conditions imposed on admission of evidence of independent crimes. — Before evidence of independent crimes is admissible two conditions must be satisfied: first, there must be evidence that the defendant was in fact the perpetrator of the independent crime; second, there must be sufficient similarity or connection between the independent crime and the offense charged that proof of the former tends to prove the latter. Bissell v. State, 157 Ga. App. 711, 278 S.E.2d 415 (1981); Paxton v. State, 160 Ga. App. 19, 285 S.E.2d 741 (1981); Milner v. State, 180 Ga. App. 97, 348 S.E.2d 509 (1986).

Two conditions precedent to the admission of evidence relating to defendant's prior act of exposing oneself are met when first, the witness positively identified defendant as the perpetrator of the crime; second, there was sufficient similarity between the former incident and the latter incident that proof of the former tends to prove the latter. Huckeba v. State, 157 Ga. App. 795, 278 S.E.2d 703 (1981).

Length of time intervening between prior difficulty and present offense is only material as affecting the credibility and weight to be given such evidence. Barnes v. State, 157 Ga. App. 582, 277 S.E.2d 916 (1981).

Objection to admission of similar transaction evidence must be at trial. — Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a new trial as defendant waived defendant's contentions that one of the similar transactions offered to show bent of mind and course of conduct was too remote in time, and that the similar transaction evidence was unduly prejudicial, as defendant failed to object on these grounds at trial. Murphy v. State, 263 Ga. App. 62, 587 S.E.2d 223 (2003).

Evidence of similar or connected sexual offenses against children is admissible in child molestation cases to corroborate the testimony of the victim as well as to show the lustful disposition of the defendant. Sullivan

v. State, 162 Ga. App. 297, 291 S.E.2d 127 (1982).

In crimes involving sexual offenses, evidence of similar previous transactions is admissible to show the lustful disposition of the defendant and to corroborate the victim's testimony, but the state must still make three affirmative showings: a proper purpose for the use of the evidence; sufficient proof that the defendant did, in fact, commit the independent act; and sufficient similarity or connection between the two incidents so that proof of the former tends to prove the latter. Hostetler v. State, 261 Ga. App. 237, 582 S.E.2d 197 (2003).

Since three prior incidents and the current child molestation charges against defendant all involved defendant going to locations frequented by children and exposing defendant's genitals to the children, the prior incidents were sufficiently similar to be admitted as similar transaction evidence in defendant's trial for child molestation; the fact that the prior incidents, unlike the current ones, did not involve touching the child victims did not mean that the prior incidents were not sufficiently similar to the current ones to be admitted, as there was no requirement that the prior crime or transaction had to be absolutely identical in every respect, and, in any event, the sexual abuse of young children, regardless of the sex of the victims or the nomenclature or type of acts perpetrated upon the children, was of sufficient similarity to make the evidence admissible. Hostetler v. State, 261 Ga. App. 237, 582 S.E.2d 197 (2003).

Evidence that defendant had perpetrated similar sexual offenses against children of the same age and gender using a similar method of operation was properly admitted because the requisite similarity between the independent offenses and the crimes charged was clearly established; a time lapse of about eight years went to the weight and credibility of the evidence. Hogan v. State, 272 Ga. App. 19, 611 S.E.2d 689 (2005).

Evidence of a prior sexual assault was properly admitted in defendant's child molestation trial as similar transaction evidence even though the trial court failed to make a determination as to the proper purposes for which the evidence was offered or as to defendant's identity as perpetrator of the independent act; the error was harmless as the evidence was sufficient for the trial court to have concluded that the Williams (Williams v. State, 261 Ga. 640, 409 S.E.2d 649 (1991)) requirements were satisfied. Howse v. State, 273 Ga. App. 252, 614 S.E.2d 869 (2005).

Similar transaction evidence was properly admitted in a prosecution for enticing a minor for indecent purposes and statutory rape because, in each case, the defendant obtained permission from the mothers of girls he knew well to take the girls for a specific purpose, diverted to an apartment, carried the girls to his bedroom, partially disrobed them, attempted to or did perform various sex acts, gave them a food treat, then returned them to their mothers with a fictitious explanation; the similar transaction evidence was not tainted, even though the victims' mothers knew one another. Jackson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 26, 619 S.E.2d 294 (2005).

Testimony that an older granddaughter was molested 25 years ago was not so remote as to be inadmissible in the defendant's trial for the child molestation of a 15-year-old granddaughter; similar transaction evidence, including the older granddaughter's testimony and evidence involving the molestation of the defendant's five-year-old great-granddaughter, was admissible to show the defendant's bent of mind or lustful disposition. Delk v. State, 274 Ga. App. 261, 619 S.E.2d 310 (2005).

Evidence of defendant's prior sexual battery of a juvenile was properly admitted in defendant's trial for child molestation and attempted child molestation of a nine-year-old girl to show defendant's lustful disposition toward molesting young girls because several years earlier defendant had pled nolo contendere to charges arising out of defendant touching the breast of a 16-year-old girl and placing her hand on his genitals. Cook v. State, 276 Ga. App. 803, 625 S.E.2d 83 (2005).

Evidence of the defendant's prior conviction for solicitation of sodomy was properly admitted as a similar transaction in the defendant's trial for child molestation and sexual battery against a child since the victims of the current child molestation and the defendant's prior offense were both young girls whom the defendant knew, and in both instances, while the defendant was alone with the girls, the defendant placed the defendant's hands on their vaginal areas. Attaway v. State, 279 Ga. App. 781, 632 S.E.2d 397 (2006).

In choosing to have a witness testify as to a defendant's good character, the defendant opened the door for the state to introduce all evidence bearing on the defendant's character, including a juvenile adjudication; the defendant's claim that the trial court erred in permitting the prosecution to cross-examine the defendant's character witness regarding the defendant's prior juvenile adjudication for child molestation because a certified copy of the juvenile adjudication was not tendered was without merit. Redman v. State, 281 Ga. App. 605, 636 S.E.2d 680 (2006).

During the defendant's trial for child molestation and statutory rape, the trial court did not err in admitting similar transaction testimony regarding the defendant's unwanted sexual advances toward his girlfriend's younger sister because the difference in the victims' ages did not make the similar transaction inadmissible; it is the totality of the similar facts surrounding the crimes that are properly considered in a similar transaction analysis. Gresham v. State, No. A10A0995, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 391 (Apr. 13, 2010).

Defendant's sexual acts at age 12 not admitted. — During a defendant's trial for aggravated child molestation and related charges, evidence of the defendant's sexual misconduct against two younger children at the age of 12 was improperly admitted and was more prejudicial than probative because: (1) there was no logical connection between the charged offenses and the prior misconduct as no pattern of continuous conduct or periods of incarceration between the incidents were shown; (2) the defendant was a child when the previous events occurred and an adult at the time of the charged events; and (3) no sexual misconduct was alleged to have occurred in the intervening years. Maynard v. State, 282 Ga. App. 598, 639 S.E.2d 389 (2006).

In a trial for rape, aggravated sodomy, and aggravated assault with attempt to commit rape, the trial court properly admitted as similar transaction evidence the defendant's prior guilty plea to a charge of child molestation; as both crimes involved forcing sexual acts upon teenage girls, a certified copy of the prior conviction sufficed to show similarity. Washington v. State, 286 Ga. App. 268, 648 S.E.2d 761 (2007).

In a child molestation case involving relations of the defendant, the trial court did not err in introducing evidence of similar transactions involving other child relations that happened 16 to 29 years before the trial on the present charges; the lapse of time between these offenses went to the weight and credibility of the testimony, not to the admissibility of the offenses. Boynton v. State, 287 Ga. App. 778, 653 S.E.2d 110 (2007).

In a prosecution for aggravated sexual battery and aggravated child molestation involving a 12-year-old child, evidence that the defendant had sexual intercourse with a 15-year-old child shortly before committing the charged crimes was properly admitted as the evidence was relevant to show bent of mind, course of conduct, and to corroborate the victim's testimony; the prejudicial effect of the evidence did not outweigh the probative value. Martin v. State, 294 Ga. App. 117, 668 S.E.2d 549 (2008).

Three prior acts of child molestation were admissible in defendant's trial for child molestation and sexual battery of an 11-year-old female victim, although one victim was a male, one was four years younger, and the acts committed were different. The sexual abuse of young children, regardless of the sex of the victims or the nomenclature or type of acts or other conduct perpetrated upon the children, was of sufficient similarity to make the evidence admissible because sex crimes against children require a unique bent of mind. Gunn v. State, 300 Ga. App. 229, 684 S.E.2d 380 (2009).

Evidence of similar sexual offenses against young adult in child molestation trial.

— Evidence of a prior sexual assault was sufficiently similar for purposes of the admission of similar transaction evidence in defendant's child molestation trial, despite a difference in the victim's ages, because in the prior assault the victim was 23 years old and in the charged assault the victim was 14 years old as there was sufficient similarity between the two acts; in both cases: (1) the events occurred in defendant's trailer home; (2) defendant initiated unwanted sexual attacks; (3) defendant put defendant's hands down the panties of the victim; (4) defendant masturbated and ejaculated on the victims; and (5) defendant unsuccessfully attempted penetration. Howse v. State, 273 Ga. App. 252, 614 S.E.2d 869 (2005).

Evidence of prior obstruction of police officers admissible. — After defendant struck and pushed an officer, and fought with another officer who attempted to arrest defendant the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting evidence of a similar transaction because, in both incidents, defendant refused to comply with law enforcement officers' instructions, cursed at the officers, and physically resisted by struggling with the officers; the similar transaction evidence showed a course of conduct in resisting law enforcement officers in the performance of their duties and was relevant to rebut defendant's claim of justification. Harris v. State, 276 Ga. App. 234, 622 S.E.2d 905 (2005).

Internet chat room transcript admissible. — Transcript of an Internet chat room conversation between defendant and a police officer, posing as a 14-year-old girl, was properly admitted as similar transaction evidence in defendant's trial for pimping, contributing to the delinquency of a minor, and sexual exploitation of a minor; the officer was present to testify, personally witnessed the real-time chat recorded in the transcript as it was taking place, and testified that the transcript accurately represented the on-line conversation; the officer's testimony was tantamount to that of a witness to an event and was sufficient to authenticate the transcript. Ford v. State, 274 Ga. App. 695, 617 S.E.2d 262 (2005).

Admission of similar transaction evidence against adult in child molestation case. — In a child molestation case, evidence that before assaulting certain women, defendant grabbed the victim by the back of the victim's hair or held the victim's neck, was properly admitted as "other transactions" evidence, since defendant used a similar method to control the child victim before sexually assaulting the victim; this evidence was relevant to show defendant's course of conduct and rebut defendant's defense of fabrication. That the prior acts involved adults did not preclude their admission as similar transactions. Helton v. State, 268 Ga. App. 430, 602 S.E.2d 198 (2004).

Evidence admissible on assault and battery claim. — With regard to a former employee's assault and battery claim, a trial court erred in excluding evidence of a dentist's prior threats to kill the dentist's spouse and children and of the dentist pushing a 13-year-old patient after the patient had allegedly been rude to the dentist; the evidence was admissible given that the dentist was alleged to have assaulted the employee and threatened to kill the employee. Ferman v. Bailey, 292 Ga. App. 288, 664 S.E.2d 285 (2008).

Evidence of defendant's prior assault on victim. — In a prosecution against a defendant for aggravated assault upon defendant's spouse, evidence that defendant had earlier committed an assault upon the spouse was admissible to demonstrate defendant's intent or bent of mind. Roberson v. State, 180 Ga. App. 406, 349 S.E.2d 39 (1986).

In a prosecution against a defendant for aggravated assault on defendant's girlfriend, evidence that the defendant had previously attacked her with a machete was admissible. Smith v. State, 232 Ga. App. 290, 501 S.E.2d 523 (1998).

In a child molestation prosecution, since evidence of the defendant's uncharged molestation of the victim was admissible without notice or a hearing, defense counsel was not ineffective for not objecting to such evidence. Stillwell v. State, 294 Ga. App. 805, 670 S.E.2d 452 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0493, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 222 (Ga. 2009).

Nonconvicted prior drug transactions admissible. — Evidence of prior drug transactions for which defendant was not arrested but in which defendant used a beeper to contact the arrestee and defendant's car to transport the arrestee was relevant to show defendant's participation for distribution of cocaine. Howard v. State, 206 Ga. App. 610, 426 S.E.2d 181 (1992).

Testimony of victim describing the telephone calls the victim received from defendant over a period of time and defendant's aborted visit the same month as the crime on trial was evidence of defendant's bent of mind and tended to show that as well as motive, intent, plan, identity, and/or course of conduct. Watson v. State, 180 Ga. App. 82, 348 S.E.2d 557 (1986).

Use of alias. — District attorney's opening statement to jury referring to defendant by defendant's alias "The Grass Man" was relevant since testimony of the witnesses established that defendant often used the alias. Campbell v. State, 160 Ga. App. 561, 287 S.E.2d 591 (1981).

Evidence that defendant was on parole at the time of the crime was not inadmissible since the evidence showed defendant's motive for committing robbery and was material. Cook v. State, 221 Ga. App. 831, 472 S.E.2d 686 (1996).

Defendant's denial of alleged admission of other acts. — Testimony in rebuttal to testimony by defendant that defendant had never told anyone that defendant had robbed and raped some people and thrown guns out of a car window is admissible to impeach defendant's testimony in defendant's own behalf. Baker v. State, 161 Ga. App. 670, 288 S.E.2d 280 (1982).

Prior peace warrant of victim against defendant. — Under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2, evidence of prior difficulties between the accused and the victim is admissible to illustrate the accused's motive, intent, or bent of mind toward the victim; therefore, a peace warrant that victim had taken out against defendant nine months before the victim's death was clearly relevant to show defendant's motive and "bent of mind" towards the victim, and the admission of the warrant into evidence did not violate defendant's due process rights. Williams v. Kemp, 846 F.2d 1276 (11th Cir. 1988), cert. dismissed, 489 U.S. 1094, 109 S. Ct. 1579, 103 L. Ed. 2d 931 (1989), cert. denied, 494 U.S. 1090, 110 S. Ct. 1836, 108 L. Ed. 2d 965 (1990).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion to suppress certain testimony about prior difficulties that had occurred between defendant and the murder victim as such evidence was relevant to the relationship between the victim and defendant, and was admissible to show defendant's motive, intent, and bent of mind in murdering the victim. Moody v. State, 277 Ga. 676, 594 S.E.2d 350 (2004).

Evidence not related to issues excluded.

— In a voluntary manslaughter case, a photograph portraying the victim's use of obscene hand gestures, a photograph portraying the victim's display of what appeared to be two partially consumed bottles of beer, and photographs portraying the victim's obscene consumption of a cake baked in the likeness of a nude woman were properly excluded because the photographs were not relevant to the issues being tried and not relevant to defendant's claim of self-defense. Guy v. State, 204 Ga. App. 228, 418 S.E.2d 778, cert. denied, 204 Ga. App. 921, 418 S.E.2d 778 (1992).

When the trial court refused to allow evidence as to whether defendant consented to intercourse with defendant in the sexual molestation case under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) and evidence that defendant bragged about it to others after the fact, the trial court did not err; evidence as to the victim's nonchastity was inadmissible as irrelevant under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 as was evidence of the victim's preoccupation with sex. Slack v. State, 265 Ga. App. 306, 593 S.E.2d 664 (2004).

Questions and responses alluding to prior arrests impermissibly placed defendant's character in issue, and when the trial court failed to take any corrective action in fulfillment of the court's duty, the defendant was denied a fair trial. Richardson v. State, 199 Ga. App. 10, 403 S.E.2d 877 (1991).

No mistrial when defendant declines cautionary instructions. — Acts of cruelty to children by the defendant have no relevance whatsoever to the issues in a trial for arson. However, when the defendant expressly declined the trial court's offer to give cautionary instructions to the jury and stated that defendant would stand on defendant's motion for mistrial, it cannot be said that, as a matter of law, the giving of cautionary instructions would have been inadequate so that a mistrial was demanded. Kuchenmeister v. State, 199 Ga. App. 64, 403 S.E.2d 847, cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 906, 403 S.E.2d 847 (1991).

Mistrial was not necessary to preserve defendant's right to a fair trial after trial court immediately ruled out improperly admitted evidence and instructed the jury to disregard the evidence and, thus, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying defendant's motion for a mistrial after defendant claimed that the state improperly placed defendant's character into evidence when the state attempted to introduce evidence of a third similar shoplifting incident in which defendant was involved but the state's evidence failed to establish the third similar incident. Bradford v. State, 261 Ga. App. 621, 583 S.E.2d 484 (2003).

Similarity between former transactions and charged crime not found. — When, in presenting similar crimes evidence to the jury, the state merely introduced certified copies of the guilty pleas, that procedure was reversible error because the jury was not presented with any evidence to establish the similarity or connection between the former transactions and the charged crime. Little v. State, 202 Ga. App. 7, 413 S.E.2d 496 (1991).

Evidence of a prior violent act. — Trial court did not err in admitting evidence of defendant's conviction for manslaughter since the plaintiff contended that the defendant made a violent, malicious, and unwarranted attack on the plaintiff, as it went to the issue of defendant's bent of mind, habit, and course of conduct. Dimarco's, Inc. v. Neidlinger, 207 Ga. App. 526, 428 S.E.2d 431 (1993).

In a prosecution for battery, evidence of the victim's prior acts of violence and convictions for battery was properly excluded as the defendant failed to make a prima facie showing of justification. There was no evidence that the victim attacked the defendant, and the testimony of the victim's former romantic companion indicated that the defendant could not have seen the victim's alleged attack on the companion. Frasier v. State, 295 Ga. App. 596, 672 S.E.2d 668 (2009).

Evidence of other conduct or crimes was admissible in the following cases. — See Fitzgerald v. State, 51 Ga. App. 636, 181 S.E. 186 (1935) (possession of whiskey); Honea v. State, 181 Ga. 40, 181 S.E. 416 (1935) (conspiracy to commit robbery); Loughridge v. State, 181 Ga. 261, 182 S.E. 12 (1935) (conspiracy to commit robbery and murder); Crow v. State, 52 Ga. Evidence of other transactions was admissible when, as in the charged crime, in the other transactions defendant misrepresented to homeowners how quickly defendant could begin work and how many laborers defendant would commit to the project, in each transaction, defendant barely started work before abandoning the project, and in each case, defendant avoided customers' inquiries and failed to refund the unearned down payments. Smith v. State, 265 Ga. App. 57, 592 S.E.2d 871 (2004).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting evidence in defendant's trial for child molestation, attempted child molestation, enticing a child for indecent purposes, and statutory rape that defendant pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana and multiple counts of contributing to the deprivation of a minor after defendant was discovered smoking marijuana with a 13-year-old girl. Leaptrout v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Defendant's prior burglary conviction was properly admitted in defendant's burglary trial as: (1) defendant waived any claim that a prior conviction was insufficiently similar to the burglary as defendant did not raise the claim at the pretrial hearing and at trial; (2) defendant failed to preserve any objection to the introduction of the Alabama "Case Action Summary" based on a best evidence theory; and (3) defendant failed to show that the prior conviction was more prejudicial than probative. Brooks v. State, 273 Ga. App. 691, 615 S.E.2d 829 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting the evidence as the state offered the evidence to show defendant's bent of mind or course of conduct, specifically, to show defendant's conduct in possessing small amounts of cocaine and when caught, denying that the cocaine belonged to defendant; the facts in the two instances were sufficiently similar to allow the introduction of the prior conviction into evidence and that the probative value of the evidence outweighed any prejudicial value. Kidd v. State, 277 Ga. App. 29, 625 S.E.2d 440 (2005).

Defendant's aggravated assault conviction was upheld on appeal, as the victim's identification of the defendant as the perpetrator was sufficient evidence to uphold the conviction, and evidence of a subsequent altercation between the two, like evidence of a prior difficulty, was probative evidence that the victim immediately identified the defendant to police on the day of the incident. Bond v. State, 283 Ga. App. 620, 642 S.E.2d 223 (2007).

In an aggravated assault case, since there was evidence that the victim's injuries were consistent with the use of a sharp instrument, similar transaction evidence of attacks with a box cutter and with a knife during altercations was not admitted for an improper purpose. The evidence was admissible to show the defendant's bent of mind and course of conduct. Miller v. State, 292 Ga. App. 641, 666 S.E.2d 35 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 903 (Ga. 2008).

In a malice murder prosecution, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting testimony concerning the violent relationship between the defendant and the victim (the defendant's paramour), and the marks and scratches witnesses saw on the victim's body as the testimony qualified as prior difficulties or similar transaction evidence. Smith v. State, 284 Ga. 304, 667 S.E.2d 65 (2008).

Defendant was convicted of voluntary manslaughter for fatally stabbing the defendant's spouse. A witness's testimony at a Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.3(B) hearing that the defendant had threatened the witness with a knife was sufficient to establish the commission of the prior act, and as the prior act was sufficiently connected to the charged crime, the testimony was properly admitted at trial. McKenzie v. State, 294 Ga. App. 376, 670 S.E.2d 158 (2008).

Evidence of prior conviction of bribery. — Admission of an owner's conviction for bribery was harmless error because, although the conviction was irrelevant to claims against a contractor, there was no prejudice demonstrated. Greene v. Bryant, 277 Ga. App. 201, 626 S.E.2d 185 (2006).

Evidence of previous arrest for burglary admissible. — In a trial for burglary, the trial court properly admitted evidence of a prior burglary as evidence of intent and state of mind, even though the trial court failed to expressly balance the probative value of the evidence against the prejudicial impact; the evidence was not overly prejudicial as detailed limiting instructions were given when the evidence was admitted and at the close of the case. Clark v. State, 272 Ga. App. 89, 611 S.E.2d 741 (2005).

Error in admitting similar transaction evidence required reversal. — While state presented sufficient evidence of the victim's age to support assault charge under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(1), because the trial court clearly erred in admitting evidence of two burglaries defendant committed in 1998 as similar transactions to help prove the issue of identity, defendant's aggravated assault, burglary, robbery, theft, and battery convictions were reversed. Usher v. State, 290 Ga. App. 710, 659 S.E.2d 920 (2008).

Evidence of other conduct or crimes was inadmissible in the following cases. — See Cawthon v. State, 119 Ga. 395, 46 S.E. 897 (1904) (adultery as background for murder); Alsobrook v. State, 126 Ga. 100, 54 S.E. 805 (1906) (adultery as background for murder); Moose v. State, 145 Ga. 361, 89 S.E. 335 (1916) (threats to another in assault case); *Young v. App. 793, 270 S.E.2d 214 (1980) (sale of contraband).

3. Victim's Character

In a trial for homicide, general bad character of the deceased for violence cannot be established by proof of specific acts. Ivey v. State, 42 Ga. App. 357, 156 S.E. 290 (1930); Smithwick v. State, 199 Ga. 292, 34 S.E.2d 28 (1945); Wilcher v. State, 87 Ga. App. 93, 73 S.E.2d 57 (1952); Henderson v. State, 234 Ga. 827, 218 S.E.2d 612 (1975); Barrett v. State, 140 Ga. Criminal Cases (Cont'd)3. Victim's Character (Cont'd)

Ga. 453, 276 S.E.2d 633 (1981).

Evidence of victim's violent character may be admitted when defendant acted in self-defense. — Charge that proof of the violent and turbulent character of the deceased is admissible only when it is shown prima facie that the deceased was the assailant, and that the accused had been assaulted and was honestly seeking to defend oneself, was not error. Tatum v. State, 57 Ga. App. 849, 197 S.E. 51 (1938); Smithwick v. State, 199 Ga. 292, 34 S.E.2d 28 (1945); Beam v. State, 208 Ga. 497, 67 S.E.2d 573 (1951); Henderson v. State, 234 Ga. 827, 218 S.E.2d 612 (1975); Maynor v. State, 241 Ga. 315, 245 S.E.2d 268 (1978); Smith v. State, 247 Ga. 453, 276 S.E.2d 633 (1981); Hanlon v. State, 162 Ga. App. 46, 290 S.E.2d 285 (1982).

Proof of a victim's violent character becomes admissible when it is shown prima facie that the deceased was the assailant, that the accused had been assaulted, and that the accused was honestly seeking to defend oneself. Williams v. State, 249 Ga. 6, 287 S.E.2d 31 (1982); Cooper v. State, 249 Ga. 58, 287 S.E.2d 212 (1982).

Victim's violent character and general reputation for violence were admissible when the codefendant arguably made a showing that defendant was honestly seeking to defend oneself rather than to act as the aggressor. Smith v. State, 267 Ga. 372, 477 S.E.2d 827 (1996).

Because a murder defendant did not assert a justification defense, there was no basis for defendant to seek to introduce evidence of victims' characters. Lance v. State, 275 Ga. 11, 560 S.E.2d 663 (2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1050, 123 S. Ct. 620, 154 L. Ed. 2d 525 (2002).

Victim's general character for violence cannot be established by proof of prior specific acts of violence, but a defendant should be allowed to offer evidence that the victim had a reputation for a particular type of violence. Williams v. State, 249 Ga. 6, 287 S.E.2d 31 (1982).

Evidence of victim's character irrelevant. — With regard to a defendant's conviction for child molestation as well as the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for a new trial, the trial court did not err by limiting the defendant's cross-examination of the victim by refusing to allow the defendant to cross-examine the 11-year-old victim regarding an alleged Internet profile page that listed the victim's age as 17 years old and having an occupation as a cheerleader for a professional sports team. The victim's age was not at issue in the case nor was the fact that the victim had previously stated that the victim was a cheerleader for a professional sports team, thus, the trial court properly ruled that the defendant was merely attempting to run around the prohibition on the admission of prior bad acts and impeach the victim about an immaterial issue. Daniel v. State, 296 Ga. App. 513, 675 S.E.2d 472 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C1192, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 326 (Ga. 2009).

Evidence of victim's drug use. — Trial court did not err by refusing to allow the defendant to show that crack cocaine was found inside the ambulance that transported the victim to the hospital as a police officer testified that crack cocaine was found in the ambulance; moreover, defendant was permitted to impeach the victim with certified copies of the victim's prior felony convictions, including two for drug possession. Haggins v. State, 277 Ga. App. 742, 627 S.E.2d 448 (2006).

Evidence of victim's relationships. — In a murder prosecution in which the victim's body was never found, evidence of the victim's relationships at the time of the victim's disappearance was relevant because it rendered the inference that the victim did not run away but was killed more probable than it would be without the evidence. Hinton v. State, 280 Ga. 811, 631 S.E.2d 365 (2006).

Evidence of nonchastity of victim inadmissible in trial of child molestation charge. — To the extent that the alleged evidence, sought to be introduced by the defendant, concerning the general reputation and character of the victim, dealt with the victim's reputation for nonchastity, it was inadmissible at trial in a prosecution for child molestation. Lively v. State, 157 Ga. App. 419, 278 S.E.2d 67 (1981).

Whether or not the victim was a prostitute was not relevant to the determination of who killed the victim. Bryant v. State, 249 Ga. 242, 290 S.E.2d 75 (1982).

School disciplinary record of victim inadmissible. — Trial court did not err in granting the state's motion in limine, which sought to prevent the defendant from introducing the victim's school records in an attempt to show that the victim had disciplinary problems, since such evidence was absolutely irrelevant to any issue in the prosecution for child molestation. Lively v. State, 157 Ga. App. 419, 278 S.E.2d 67 (1981).

Victim's bomb threat irrelevant. — Because making a bomb threat did not unambiguously reflect on a child victim's credibility, honesty, or imagination, was not related to the victim's testimony, and was not material to the issues on trial, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in refusing to allow the defense to introduce the evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2. Bentley v. State, 277 Ga. App. 483, 627 S.E.2d 61 (2006).

Evidence of assault victim's character not relevant. — In a prosecution for aggravated assault, to the extent that the defendant sought to attack the victim's character through testimony about the victim's use of alcohol during pregnancy, whether the victim hid the defendant from the police, and the victim's alleged jealousy over the defendant's new relationship, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in limiting the scope of cross-examination to the issues directly related to the incidents. Massey v. State, 278 Ga. App. 303, 628 S.E.2d 706 (2006).

Victim's involvement in charitable civic organization inadmissible. — In a rape prosecution, while the prosecutor should not have been allowed to question the victim about the victim's involvement with a civic organization that helped mentally ill children, the admission of such irrelevant material did not warrant a mistrial. Brown v. State, 260 Ga. App. 77, 579 S.E.2d 87 (2003).

Testimony as to the general reputation of the deceased, when admissible in a murder case, may come from two sources: the accused or a witness. Henderson v. State, 234 Ga. 827, 218 S.E.2d 612 (1975).

Evidence of victim's violent acts. — Defendant was not improperly prohibited from introducing evidence of a victim's violent acts against third persons during the state's case, despite evidence that: (1) the victim pinned defendant against a wall; (2) defendant ran into defendant's house screaming that the defendant had been robbed and reported the robbery to the police; (3) defendant had fresh cuts or bruises on defendant's neck; and (4) defendant reported to police that defendant had shot at someone as defendant tried to fend off a robber; it did not necessarily follow that defendant honestly sought to defend oneself when defendant fired a gun at the victim, given evidence that the victim turned away or ran from defendant before the shooting and that the victim was shot in the back from at least two and one-half feet away. Nelloms v. State, 273 Ga. App. 448, 615 S.E.2d 153 (2005).

Evidence of victim's prior child molestation against defendant not admitted. — In a defendant's trial for aggravated battery against a victim more than 65 years of age in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a) and (d), evidence that the victim had fondled the defendant's genitals when the defendant was 15 was not admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-2 to support the defendant's claim of justification under O.C.G.A. § 16-3-21. Strozier v. State, 300 Ga. App. 199, 685 S.E.2d 743 (2009).

Evidence that victim used cocaine. — Whether the victim of an aggravated assault and false imprisonment was addicted to cocaine was irrelevant to the issue of whether defendant assaulted the victim and held the victim against the victim's will, and the trial court did not err in ruling that defendant could not present evidence of the victim's prior cocaine use other than certified copies of convictions. Harris v. State, 196 Ga. App. 304, 396 S.E.2d 288 (1990).

In a prosecution for murder, the victim's prior conviction for possession of cocaine did not tend to prove a reputation for violence nor the reasonableness of defendant's belief that deadly force was necessary, and the court properly refused to admit such evidence. Russell v. State, 264 Ga. 121, 441 S.E.2d 750 (1994).

Toxicology report showing the presence of cocaine metabolites in a homicide victim's blood was properly excluded because the evidence was too attenuated to warrant speculation about the effects of cocaine on the victim at the time of the shooting. Bell v. State, 280 Ga. 562, 629 S.E.2d 213 (2006).

Exchanging sex for drugs. — Although the victim's past cocaine use was irrelevant, the defendant was allowed to discuss any arrangement that the victim had made with the defendant in exchange for sex and question the victim as to the victim's use of drugs on the night in question. Goodwin v. State, 208 Ga. App. 707, 431 S.E.2d 473 (1993).

In a prosecution of defendant for possession of methamphetamine in defendant's body, evidence of prior convictions for the sale of that drug were not admissible. King v. State, 230 Ga. App. 301, 496 S.E.2d 312 (1998).

Reckless behavior of victim. — In a prosecution for involuntary manslaughter, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in disallowing evidence of the victim's past reckless conduct, which consisted of the testimony of a police officer that the victim had, on several occasions in the past, been found in the early morning hours intoxicated and sitting in the victim's wheelchair in the road, creating a dangerous condition. Casillas v. State, 233 Ga. App. 752, 505 S.E.2d 251 (1998).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for mistrial after a witness testified to other drug transactions defendant was involved in even though defendant's general character and especially defendant's conduct in other drug transactions were irrelevant matter as such statements were unsolicited, the trial court immediately instructed the jury to disregard the testimony, and the witness did not tell the jury anything the jury did not already know about defendant. McCollum v. State, 258 Ga. App. 574, 574 S.E.2d 561 (2002).

Trial court's refusal to allow defendant to introduce a certified copy of the victim's prior conviction for simple assault, even though the testimony of the investigating officer was also offered, was harmless error in light of the fact that the trial court permitted the defense to present testimony from five witnesses concerning other incidents. Jones v. State, 265 Ga. App. 97, 592 S.E.2d 888 (2004).

In the defendant's trial for homicide by vehicle in the first degree, serious injury by vehicle, driving under the influence of alcohol, and reckless driving, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in excluding as irrelevant evidence of a victim's two prior traffic citations because a trooper testified unequivocally that the impact occurred in the lane in which the victim and the victim's family were traveling, and there was no evidence introduced to the contrary; moreover, there was no evidence that the victim was speeding at the time of the fatal collision. Potter v. State, 301 Ga. App. 411, 687 S.E.2d 653 (2009).

Evidence of victim's criminal activity. — Evidence that the victim was driving an allegedly stolen vehicle at the time the victim was shot by defendant was not relevant to the defense of justification. Wilson v. State, 262 Ga. 588, 422 S.E.2d 536 (1992), overruled on other grounds by Sanders v. State, 281 Ga. 36, 635 S.E.2d 772 (2006).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to admit evidence of the victim's robbery conviction because the defendant failed to meet the requirements for admission of evidence of violent acts by the victim against third parties by relying on the language of the indictment associated with the victim's conviction and offering no witnesses or other evidence to establish the facts underlying the crime; the trial transcript did include defense counsel's unchallenged recitation of the allegation set forth in the indictment, and although that language set forth certain elements of the crime of robbery, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-40(a)(1) and (2), it did not provide a factual basis for determining whether an act of violence was involved in the robbery at issue. Arnold v. State, 286 Ga. 418, 687 S.E.2d 836 (2010).

4. Jury Instructions

Jury charge as to good character. — Good character affords no license for committing a crime, and it is entirely proper to charge the jury that the jury would be authorized to convict, notwithstanding proof of good character, if upon consideration of all the evidence the jury believes the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Mote v. State, 184 Ga. App. 333, 361 S.E.2d 523 (1987).

Instruction on defense of good character must generally be requested. — Except in "exceptional cases," such as one in which the good character defense is the sole defense against the uncorroborated allegations of the prosecuting witness and the state's case, apart from those allegations, is based solely on highly tenuous circumstances and is extremely weak, the court's failure to give an instruction on good character, absent a timely request, does not warrant a new trial. Riceman v. State, 166 Ga. App. 825, 305 S.E.2d 595 (1983).

Mistrial not warranted when curative instruction given. — After a witness stated in an answer not responsive to the question asked of the witness that the defendant and the victim had smoked crack cocaine together, the trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a mistrial on the ground that the defendant's character had been improperly put in issue; a curative instruction was sufficiently prompt and clear. Rhines v. State, 288 Ga. App. 128, 653 S.E.2d 500 (2007).

Trial court properly denied a mistrial based on allegedly improper character evidence after an officer did not specifically indicate that defendant had a criminal record when asked if the officer knew defendant, and after the trial court gave an adequate curative instruction, the officer clarified that the officer knew defendant to be a nice person and outstanding football player; moreover, even if there was error, it was harmless in light of the overwhelming evidence of guilt. Gartrell v. State, 291 Ga. App. 21, 660 S.E.2d 886 (2008).

As the trial court instructed the jury to disregard the information contained in a witness's non-responsive answer to a question from the prosecutor, which impugned the defendant's character, the defendant was not entitled to a mistrial. Patterson v. State, 285 Ga. 597, 679 S.E.2d 716 (2009), cert. denied, U.S. , 130 S. Ct. 1051, 175 L. Ed. 2d 892 (2010).

New trial denied when defendant failed to object to curative instruction given. — Defendant's motion for a new trial was properly denied because the state presented sufficient identification and circumstantial evidence linking the defendant to a burglary, including similar transaction evidence of a prior burglary, and in response to trial counsel's objection to the state's comment that the defendant was under the influence of drugs or alcohol at the time of the offense, the defendant did not object to the curative instruction given. Bryant v. State, 285 Ga. App. 508, 646 S.E.2d 717 (2007).

24-2-3. Complainant's past sexual behavior not admissible in prosecutions for certain sex offenses; exception; in camera hearing; court order.

(a) In any prosecution for a violation of Code Section 16-6-1, relating to rape; Code Section 16-6-2, relating to aggravated sodomy; Code Section 16-6-4, relating to aggravated child molestation; or Code Section 16-6-22.2, relating to aggravated sexual battery, evidence relating to the past sexual behavior of the complaining witness shall not be admissible, either as direct evidence or on cross-examination of the complaining witness or other witnesses, except as provided in this Code section. For the purposes of this Code section, evidence of past sexual behavior includes, but is not limited to, evidence of the complaining witness's marital history, mode of dress, general reputation for promiscuity, nonchastity, or sexual mores contrary to the community standards.

(b) In any prosecution for a violation of Code Section 16-6-1, relating to rape; Code Section 16-6-2, relating to aggravated sodomy; Code Section 16-6-4, relating to aggravated child molestation; or Code Section 16-6-22.2, relating to aggravated sexual battery, evidence relating to the past sexual behavior of the complaining witness may be introduced if the court, following the procedure described in subsection (c) of this Code section, finds that the past sexual behavior directly involved the participation of the accused and finds that the evidence expected to be introduced supports an inference that the accused could have reasonably believed that the complaining witness consented to the conduct complained of in the prosecution.

(c) The procedure for introducing evidence as described in subsection (b) of this Code section shall be as follows:

(1) At the time the defense shall seek to introduce evidence which would be covered by subsection (b) of this Code section, the defense shall notify the court of such intent, whereupon the court shall conduct an in camera hearing to examine into the defendant's offer of proof;

(2) At the conclusion of the hearing, if the court finds that any of the evidence introduced at the hearing is admissible under subsection (b) of this Code section or is so highly material that it will substantially support a conclusion that the accused reasonably believed that the complaining witness consented to the conduct complained of and that justice mandates the admission of such evidence, the court shall by order state what evidence may be introduced by the defense at the trial of the case and in what manner the evidence may be introduced; and

(3) The defense may then introduce evidence pursuant to the order of the court. (Code 1933, § 38-202.1, enacted by Ga. L. 1976, p. 741, § 1; Ga. L. 1989, p. 272, § 1; Ga. L. 2005, p. 20, § 13.1/HB 170.)

DECISIONS UNDER PRE-1976 LAW

General Consideration

Editor's notes. — In light of the similarity of the provisions, decisions under Ga. L. 1976, p. 20, § 1 are included under this Code section.

Constitutionality. — O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 does not violate a defendant's sixth amendment right of confrontation; it serves a variety of state interests which outweigh that right. Harris v. State, 257 Ga. 666, 362 S.E.2d 211 (1987).

Statute is a strong legislative attempt to protect the victim-prosecutor in rape cases by the exclusion of evidence which might reflect on the character of the witness without contributing materially to the issue of the guilt or innocence of the accused. Parks v. State, 147 Ga. App. 617, 249 S.E.2d 672 (1978) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3).

O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 seeks to eliminate the philosophy that women of promiscuous sexual reputation are entitled to less protection under the rape laws than women of chaste reputation. Singleton v. State, 157 Ga. App. 192, 276 S.E.2d 685 (1981); Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981); Snyder v. State, 201 Ga. App. 66, 410 S.E.2d 173 (1991).

O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 is a legislative attempt to exclude evidence which might reflect on the character of the witness without contributing materially to the issue of the guilt or innocence of the accused. Martin v. State, 196 Ga. App. 145, 395 S.E.2d 391 (1990).

Discretion of court to apply “rape shield” principle. — Trial court did not err in applying the “rape shield” principle to exclude evidence that the victim had allegedly engaged in sexual activity with her ex-boyfriend immediately prior to the alleged act of sexual battery; the court had discretion to apply such principle even when the exclusion was not mandated under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3. Bates v. State, 216 Ga. App. 597, 454 S.E.2d 811 (1995).

Trial court did not abuse the court’s discretion in excluding the defendant’s claim that his victim had prior consensual sex with him and that he reasonably believed she consented on the night of the offense, since the victim testified to the events of that night, there was a trail of clothing left near the crime scene, and evidence of her injuries was offered. Davis v. State, 235 Ga. App. 362, 509 S.E.2d 655 (1998).

Construction with O.C.G.A. § 24-3-38. — Despite O.C.G.A. § 24-3-38, giving a party the right to have a whole conversation heard, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 prohibited the admission of a portion of defendant’s statement in which he said that the victim had sexual intercourse with her cousin. Snow v. State, 228 Ga. App. 649, 492 S.E.2d 564 (1997).

Rape shield law was not implicated since the testimony of the victim concerned prior physical abuse, not sexual abuse. Demetrios v. State, 246 Ga. App. 506, 541 S.E.2d 83 (2000).

Evidence of relationship with boyfriend. — Given that the defendant was not charged with rape, evidence of the victim’s sexual activity, and the fact that she had a boyfriend, with whom she allegedly had sexual intercourse during the time of the alleged sexual abuse, should not have been excluded under either the 2004 or 2005 version of the Rape Shield statute as: (1) that evidence acted as a possible explanation for the victim’s physical trauma, placing her credibility and the defendant’s guilt into question; (2) the jury’s split verdict supported the defendant’s argument that even without the excluded testimony, the state’s case was far less than overwhelming; and, (3) the appeals court could not determine what role the excluded evidence would have played in the jury’s deliberations; hence, a new trial as to the charges of child molestation and incest was ordered. Gresham v. State, 281 Ga. App. 116, 635 S.E.2d 316 (2006).

Victim’s prior accusations of sexual misconduct. — Rape-shield law does not necessarily prohibit testimony as to the falsity of a victim’s prior accusations of sexual misconduct directed against persons other than defendant. Benton v. State, 265 Ga. 648, 461 S.E.2d 202 (1995).

Defendant was not required to make a threshold showing that the victim’s previous molestation allegations were false before defendant was entitled to a hearing on the reasonable probability of falsity. Peters v. State, 224 Ga. App. 837, 481 S.E.2d 898 (1997).

Testimony of previous false allegations by the victim was not prohibited; however, defendant failed to make the threshold showing of a reasonable probability that the victim’s three previous rape reports were false. Banks v. State, 250 Ga. App. 728, 552 S.E.2d 903 (2001).

Pregnancy of victim. — Evidence of a victim’s past sexual behavior for the purpose of showing that she may have been pregnant at the time the allegations were made and may have therefore made up the charge to justify or explain the pregnancy was barred by O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3. Green v. State, 221 Ga. App. 436, 472 S.E.2d 1 (1996).

Evidence that a child rape victim had sex with her boyfriend six months before the alleged rape was properly excluded since, while relevant to show that the victim’s pregnancy was not caused by defendant, it was insufficiently probative due to the time frames involved. Williams v. State, 263 Ga. App. 597, 588 S.E.2d 790 (2003).

“Quite possibly pregnant” evidence disallowed. — Cross-examination of the victim with regard to sexual acts with males other than defendant and the fact that she was “quite possibly pregnant” was properly disallowed since the only proffer made by defendant concerning the possible pregnancy as a motive for lying was counsel’s mere statement, and defendant denied ever having sexual relations with the victim. Gibbs v. State, 196 Ga. App. 140, 395 S.E.2d 387 (1990).

Miscarriage by victim. — With regard to a defendant's convictions for aggravated sodomy and kidnapping, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by excluding as barred by the rape shield statute evidence of the victim's prior miscarriage since the rape shield statute bars evidence relating to the past sexual behavior of the complaining witness. Smith v. State, 294 Ga. App. 692, 670 S.E.2d 191 (2008).

Parent status of minor victim was irrelevant fact. — Trial court correctly excluded all reference to the fact that the 16-year-old victim had a child of approximately 21 months of age. Johnson v. State, 245 Ga. App. 690, 538 S.E.2d 766 (2000).

Rape shield statute provides the exclusive means for admitting evidence relating to the past sexual behavior of the complaining witness in prosecutions for rape. The res gestae rule, impeachment techniques, and other traditional means for introducing evidence which is otherwise inadmissible can have no effect in this situation. Johnson v. State, 146 Ga. App. 277, 246 S.E.2d 363 (1978).

Rape shield statute supersedes all evidentiary exceptions, including the res gestae rule. Phillips v. State, 196 Ga. App. 267, 396 S.E.2d 57 (1990).

O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 does not prohibit testimony of previous false allegations by the victim; however, before such evidence can be admitted, the trial court must make a threshold determination outside the presence of the jury that a reasonable probability of falsity exists. Smith v. State, 259 Ga. 135, 377 S.E.2d 158, cert. denied, 493 U.S. 825, 110 S. Ct. 88, 107 L. Ed. 2d 53 (1989).

Once the court determined that a child-victim's previous allegation of abuse was unreliable, testimony of the previous allegation was no longer subject to the rape shield statute protection and should have been admitted. Hines v. State, 221 Ga. App. 193, 470 S.E.2d 787 (1996).

On appeal from a conviction for two counts of aggravated child molestation, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant a new trial, as no abuse of discretion resulted in excluding evidence that one of the victims made prior false accusations of sexual abuse against an older cousin, because the evidence presented a credibility issue for the trial court to resolve in analyzing whether there was a reasonable probability of falsity. Roberts v. State, 286 Ga. App. 346, 648 S.E.2d 783 (2007).

Evidence of prior false claims improperly barred. — Evidence concerning allegedly false prior rape claims made by the prosecutor was not barred by O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 as the subject testimony was admissible, not merely to impeach the witness credibility, but as substantive evidence tending to establish that there had been no rape, but mere consensual sexual intercourse; accordingly, the trial court abused the court's discretion in denying defendant's motion for a new trial. Humphrey v. State, 207 Ga. App. 472, 428 S.E.2d 362 (1993).

Rape shield statute prohibits all evidence relating to the past sexual behavior of the complaining witness, including marital history, mode of dress, general reputation for promiscuity, nonchastity, or sexual mores contrary to community standards; in other words, her reputation concerning past sexual activity with persons other than the defendant. The exceptions are, if so found by the judge after an in camera hearing, that the past behavior involving participation by the accused, or that the evidence supports an inference that the accused could have reasonably believed that the complaining witness consented to the conduct complained of. Parks v. State, 147 Ga. App. 617, 249 S.E.2d 672 (1978).

Evidence of prior sexual experience is not permitted by O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3. Roberts v. State, 158 Ga. App. 309, 279 S.E.2d 753 (1981); Raines v. State, 191 Ga. App. 743, 382 S.E.2d 738 (1989).

Trial court did not err in refusing to admit evidence of the victim's past marital problems when defendant admitted that the victim did not tell him which type of marital problem it was. Hence, his lack of knowledge that the victim's marital problem related to infidelity could have had no reasonable bearing on whether the victim would consent to the conduct complained of. Burley v. State, 190 Ga. App. 75, 378 S.E.2d 328 (1989).

Rape shield statute precludes the introduction of evidence of the victim's past sexual behavior. Obviously, a prior rape committed against the victim has nothing to do with her past sexual behavior. Raines v. State, 191 Ga. App. 743, 382 S.E.2d 738 (1989).

Trial court properly disallowed defendant's proffer that the victim might have said defendant raped her on occasions other than the two charged, since it was not clear how such evidence would have aided defendant and there was no indication that the victim was lying about the other incidents of rape. Gibbs v. State, 196 Ga. App. 140, 395 S.E.2d 387 (1990).

Evidence of portions of a conversation between defendant and the victim that involved her past sexual abuse by family members and others was properly excluded. Hicks v. State, 222 Ga. App. 828, 476 S.E.2d 101 (1996).

Inconsistent victim testimony and ability to question. — Victim's prior statement seemingly fell within the language of the Rape Shield Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, as the statement related to the victim's "past sexual behavior." However, the record shows that the defense did not seek to use the victim's prior statement to pursue the inadmissible topic of her sexual history with individuals other than defendant. Rather, the defense sought to use the statement to show that the victim's "past sexual behavior" did not include defendant and that the victim's trial testimony concerning the victim's sexual experiences with defendant was a fabrication. As one of the purposes of the Rape Shield Statute is to assist the truth-seeking process, it should not provide "justification for letting the witness affirmatively resort to perjurious testimony in reliance on [a defendant's] disability to challenge her credibility." Thus, the trial court erred in restricting defendant from cross-examining the victim concerning the prior statement; however, such error was harmless as the victim explained why the testimony regarding contact with defendant was inconsistent. Mooney v. State, 266 Ga. App. 587, 597 S.E.2d 589 (2004).

Evidence of character or other crimes. — Proffered testimony of a defense witness that the witness had exchanged sex with the victim for money and that defendant knew of this at the time of the incident was not admissible under the "highly material category" of subsection (c)(2) of O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3. Brown v. State, 214 Ga. App. 676, 448 S.E.2d 723 (1994).

Victim's testimony that victim had not had intercourse in five months admissible. —

After the state attempted to prove the defendant's rape of the victim by showing that the defendant passed herpes to the victim, the trial court's permission for the victim to testify that the victim had not had sex for five months prior to the rape did not violate the rape shield law, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, as the victim's testimony was relevant to exclude the possibility that someone other than defendant had sexual contact with the victim and gave the victim herpes. Warner v. State, 277 Ga. App. 421, 626 S.E.2d 620 (2006).

Testimony of defendant concerning overheard conversations was properly disallowed. — Even though the trial court allowed defendant to testify that the defendant had had prior sexual intercourse with the complaining witness, the court properly disallowed testimony from defendant that the defendant had overheard conversations by the victim's family members that the victim "ran around." Marks v. State, 192 Ga. App. 64, 383 S.E.2d 626 (1989).

Exceptions to the general rule of inadmissibility listed in this statute are exclusive and those exceptions are provided solely for the benefit of the defendant who, by proper and timely objection, may prevent the state from introducing the evidence excluded by the statute. Johnson v. State, 146 Ga. App. 277, 246 S.E.2d 363 (1978) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3).

Two exceptions contained in O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 are exclusive. Jones v. State, 190 Ga. App. 416, 379 S.E.2d 189 (1989).

Virginity irrelevant. — Admitting testimony that an alleged victim was not a virgin to support an inference that an accused reasonably believed she consented to his advances is erroneous since it is against just such reasoning that rape shield laws have been enacted. Johnson v. State, 146 Ga. App. 277, 246 S.E.2d 363 (1978).

Admission of victim's testimony that during the attack she told defendant she was a virgin was harmless error since the defense was based upon a claim of mistaken identity, not alleged consent by the victim. Veal v. State, 191 Ga. App. 445, 382 S.E.2d 131 (1989).

Evidence inadmissible despite physician's testimony that victim was sexually active. — Inquiry into the victim's past sexual experiences was properly refused, even where a physician testified that in examining the victim it was obvious she had been sexually active. Worth v. State, 183 Ga. App. 68, 358 S.E.2d 251, cert. denied, 183 Ga. App. 907, 358 S.E.2d 251 (1987).

Applicability to noncomplaining witness.

— O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 includes cross-examination of the other witnesses about the sexual conduct of the complaining witness so the argument that the statute applies only to cross-examination of the complaining witness is without merit. Ellis v. State, 181 Ga. App. 630, 353 S.E.2d 822 (1987).

Harmless to deny examination as to incident victim denies. — Any error in denying the defendant a thorough and sifting cross-examination of the victim concerning a past sexual experience with the defendant is harmless when the defendant subsequently testifies to such an experience and the victim then denies the experience. Clarke v. State, 169 Ga. App. 433, 313 S.E.2d 716 (1984).

Where the defendant had never seen or known the victim prior to her abduction, evidence of past sexual activity was not admissible on the question of consent. Fuller v. State, 169 Ga. App. 488, 313 S.E.2d 505 (1984).

Prohibition inapplicable to impeachment as to victim's attire. — Rape shield law is not applicable to evidence offered to impeach the victim as to her mode of dress at the time in question. Villafranco v. State, 252 Ga. 188, 313 S.E.2d 469 (1984).

Reversible error when defendant was not allowed to show wife's medical records. — When a physician had testified that the victim had a venereal disease and that she maintained she had not had sexual intercourse with anyone else, it was reversible error not to allow defendant to show by his wife's medical records, or otherwise, that his wife was then undergoing medical treatment and tests for pregnancy and showed no sign of the disease, and therefore, by logical extension, that defendant did not have the disease. Reece v. State, 192 Ga. App. 14, 383 S.E.2d 572 (1989).

Evidence of infectious discharge in victim's body. — Exclusion of medical testimony regarding an infectious discharge discovered in the victim's body within hours after the alleged rape was reversible error, since the excluded testimony was relevant to defendant's claim that he did not penetrate the victim because of the victim's gross physical condition. White v. State, 201 Ga. App. 53, 410 S.E.2d 441 (1991).

Evidence victim dropped out of school and missed prior court date not barred. — Defense's question to the victim concerning her status as a high school dropout and her failure to keep a previous court appointment did not violate O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, since the questions did not directly reflect on her past sexual behavior. George v. State, 257 Ga. 176, 356 S.E.2d 882 (1987).

Evidentiary exhibit properly excluded. — Exhibit, which was apparently a fictional work about someone's sexual experiences and was to be used in an attack upon the victim's reputation for prior sexual behavior, was properly excluded under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3. Kilgore v. State, 195 Ga. App. 884, 395 S.E.2d 337 (1990).

Denial of hearing held error. — When defendant offered to prove that the complaining witness had prior sexual encounters with defendant and others and that defendant knew about the others and of her reputation at the time of the incident on trial, it was error to deny a hearing on the defendant's offer of proof relating to the witness's past sexual behavior. Hamilton v. State, 185 Ga. App. 536, 365 S.E.2d 120 (1987), cert. denied, 185 Ga. App. 910, 365 S.E.2d 120 (1988).

Appellate standard of review. — Appellate court reviews the trial court's exclusion of evidence under the rape shield statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, for abuse of discretion. Jackson v. State, 254 Ga. App. 562, 562 S.E.2d 847 (2002).

Child Molestation

Rape shield law applicable in child molestation cases. — In a prosecution for child molestation, evidence of the victim's past sexual behavior and preoccupation with sex was properly excluded. McGarity v. State, 224 Ga. App. 302, 480 S.E.2d 319 (1997), overruled in part by Abdulkadir v. State, 279 Ga. 122, 610 S.E.2d 50 (2005).

Trial court properly refused to allow defense counsel to question an investigator about the victim's prior sexual activity in a child molestation case as the rape shield law, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 (prohibiting the introduction of evidence of the past sexual behavior of the complaining witness in rape cases), was also applicable in child molestation cases, and no exceptions to the rape shield law was implicated. Flowers v. State, 255 Ga. App. 660, 566 S.E.2d 339 (2002).

O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(b) is applicable in child molestation cases and excludes evidence relating to the past sexual behavior of the complaining witness with some limited exceptions which include: (1) to show that someone other than the defendant caused the injuries to the child; (2) to show lack of victim credibility if the victim's prior allegations of molestation were false; and (3) to show other possible causes for the symptoms exhibited. Since no exception applied, inquiry into a later rape of defendant's victim was properly foreclosed in defendant's rape and incest trial. Taylor v. State, 268 Ga. App. 333, 601 S.E.2d 815 (2004).

In 2005, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 was amended to provide expressly that the rape shield law applies to prosecutions for child molestations. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 281, 620 S.E.2d 394 (2005).

Early masturbation of victim irrelevant evidence. — In a child molestation case, evidence of the victim's possibly engaging in masturbation at an early age would not have been admissible as the defendant made no allegation that the victim had any unusually early or sudden sexual knowledge; thus, the victim's sexual history was irrelevant under the circumstances. Hughes v. State, 297 Ga. App. 581, 677 S.E.2d 674 (2009).

Expert testimony on abuse accommodation syndrome. — Defendant's claim that the defendant should have been able to question witnesses about the victim's alleged molestation by her stepfather and step-uncle was rejected as a nurse's testimony that the victim's behavioral characteristics were consistent with those of a child who had been sexually molested fell far short of the expert testimony regarding abuse accommodation syndrome that warranted the admission of evidence of previous molestation by others. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 884, 635 S.E.2d 240 (2006).

Rape shield law inapplicable in child molestation cases. — By its plain terms the rape shield statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(a), applied only in prosecutions for rape and not to child molestation cases; however, the trial court did not err by applying O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(a) to defendant's case because defendant was prosecuted for, among other offenses, rape, and the fact that defendant was acquitted of the rape charge did not require a new trial on the other charges. Abdulkadir v. State, 279 Ga. 122, 610 S.E.2d

Child abuse accommodation syndrome. — Contrary to the defendant's contention, the trial court properly excluded evidence consisting of any prior abuse committed against the victims by persons other than the defendant on relevancy grounds, given that the state's fact witness, a social worker, did not testify that the victims' demeanor exhibited symptoms consistent with child abuse accommodation syndrome. The court noted that the evidence was not excludable under the rape shield statute as contended by the state. Segura v. State, 280 Ga. App. 685, 634 S.E.2d 858 (2006).

Evidence of a child sexual abuse victim's previous sexual activity was properly excluded under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(b), because medical evidence indicated the child had been sexually violated within the last 48 hours. Callahan v. State, 256 Ga. App. 482, 568 S.E.2d 780 (2002).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in excluding evidence of a victim's prior false accusation of sexual misconduct made against another person under the rape shield statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(b), based on the state's proffer that the victim told defendant she was sexually active with her boyfriend because defendant, who was molesting her at the time, kept telling her that he was preparing her for adulthood and kept badgering her as to whether she was having sex with anyone, and because the victim thought that defendant would finally leave her alone if she told him that she was involved in a relationship and was sexually active. After considering the context and circumstances of the allegation, the trial court determined that the victim's prior accusation was the result of coercion and duress from her alleged abuser. Eley v. State, 266 Ga. App. 45, 596 S.E.2d 660 (2004).

In a rape case, the trial court properly found that under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, the defendant failed to show that the child victim had made three prior false allegations of sexual misconduct. In the first case, the defendant asserted a vague claim unsupported by any evidence that when the child was two years old, the child might have made some unspecified allegation against a relative against whom no charges were brought; in the second case, the allegations led to a guilty plea; the third case, police found that a minor had touched the victim but that no crime had been committed. Osborne v. State, 291 Ga. App. 711, 662 S.E.2d 792 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 783 (Ga. 2008).

With regard to defendant's convictions for sexual battery and child molestation of a step-child, the trial court properly excluded defendant's attempt to introduce evidence of a purported false allegation by the victim that the victim was the victim of date rape in 2006 under the rape shield law as defendant did not seek to introduce the evidence to show that the victim had psychological problems, rather, defendant argued that the victim had made a previous false allegation. Birkbeck v. State, 292 Ga. App. 424, 665 S.E.2d 354 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 874, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 874 (Ga. 2008); overruled in part, State v. Gardner, 286 Ga. 633, 690 S.E.2d 164 (2010).

Evidence not admissible in child molestation case. — In a prosecution for child molestation, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by granting the state's motion to exclude evidence that the victim told her physician that she was sexually active with her boyfriend. Cox v. State, 241 Ga. App. 388, 526 S.E.2d 887 (1999).

Evidence not admissible. — At a trial in which defendant was accused of sexual offenses against the daughter, the trial court did not err under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(b) in refusing to admit evidence of the possibility that the daughter was previously sexually molested by the babysitter; such evidence was inadmissible in a molestation case to show the victim's reputation for nonchastity or the victim's preoccupation with sex, and an exception to this rule did not apply, as the state presented neither medical evidence showing that the victim had been molested nor evidence showing that the victim had indicated symptoms consistent with the child abuse accommodation syndrome. Zepp v. State, 276 Ga. App. 466, 623 S.E.2d 569 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

and the trial pursuant to the Rape Shield Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, because the evidence was cumulative to the extent that a portion of a letter from the victim recounting the victim's prior sexual activity supported an inference that the victim consented to sexual conduct since the jury was aware that the victim was pregnant with the defendant's child; to the extent that the portion of a letter from the victim in which the victim described future sexual activities that the victim would like to engage in with the defendant was relevant and admissible to show that the victim still had feelings for the defendant, that evidence was cumulative to the victim's testimony that the victim still loved the defendant and remained in contact with the defendant. Morgan v. State, No. A09A1853, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 66 (Jan. 25, 2010).

Trial court did not err by excluding letters the victim wrote to the defendant during the time period between the defendant's arrest and the trial pursuant to the Rape Shield Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, because although the trial court initially indicated that the Rape Shield Statute prohibited admission of the letters, it clearly indicated that it would consider any future proper attempt to admit the evidence, but the defendant declined to do so; assuming that the ruling was erroneous, the verdict was sustainable because the evidence in the letters that the victim had a previous sexual relationship with the defendant before the incident and wanted to have one with the defendant in the future was not relevant to the charges for which the defendant was convicted, namely kidnapping, kidnapping with bodily injury, family violence aggravated assault, and false imprisonment. Morgan v. State, No. A09A1853, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 66 (Jan. 25, 2010).

Sexual activity of household excluded. — Evidence that a child sexual abuse victim was raised in a household where sexual activity was open was properly excluded, under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(b), because nothing in the proffered evidence showed that this would cause the victim to have knowledge of the sexual acts performed on the victim by defendant. Callahan v. State, 256 Ga. App. 482, 568 S.E.2d 780 (2002).

Evidence of prior false claims properly barred. — Trial court properly excluded evidence offered to show that the victim's prior allegations of molestation were false based on the fact that the officer investigating the matter had failed to seek an arrest warrant for the alleged molester for more than one year after the complaint was made because it was not sufficient to establish that the allegations were false. Mann v. State, 244 Ga. App. 756, 536 S.E.2d 608 (2000).

Evidence that victim had venereal disease not admissible. — Trial court did not err in granting the state's motion to suppress evidence that the victim had a venereal disease one year after the last act of molestation since there was no evidence or offer of proof that the defendant did not have the disease. Ricks v. State, 249 Ga. App. 80, 546 S.E.2d 919 (2001).

Exception did not apply. — When the state did not offer any medical evidence to prove the girl had been molested or any testimony to show that she had displayed symptoms consistent with the child abuse accommodation syndrome, the exception to the admissibility of past sexual activity did not apply and inquiry into the victim's sexual history was precluded by O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 (b). Rocha v. State, 248 Ga. App. 53, 545 S.E.2d 173 (2001).

Evidence in child sexual abuse cases. — Trial court did not err in refusing to allow cross-examination of a child sex abuse victim concerning alleged prior false accusations of molestation made against the victim's half brother after the trial court conducted a hearing to determine if the allegations at issue had a "reasonable probability of falsity," and ruled that the defense had not carried the defense's burden of showing a reasonable probability that the victim's accusation against the victim's half-brother was false; it was apparent that the trial court was faced with the conflicting testimony of the victim and the victim's half-brother and found that of the victim more credible. Williams v. State, 266 Ga. App. 578, 597 S.E.2d 621 (2004).

A child molestation defendant's trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to investigate and introduce the child victim's prior accusations of molestation, because there was no evidence of any such false prior accusations other than the victim's testimony at the trial itself that the child's cousin touched the child inappropriately. Purvis v. State, 301 Ga. App. 648, 689 S.E.2d 53 (2009).

Reference to evidence prohibited by rape shield law did not create manifest necessity for mistrial. — At defendant's trial for various sexual offenses based on allegations by his stepdaughter, which were later recanted, there was no manifest necessity for a mistrial over defendant's objection where a child abuse investigator mentioned, in violation of the trial court's ruling on a motion in limine based on O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, that the stepdaughter had viewed pornographic movies even though the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in granting the state's motion in limine to exclude the evidence; defense counsel's question to the investigator did not call for the improper response, and, once the issue had been injected, the defense was entitled to clarify that defendant bore no responsibility for the victim's viewing of the pornographic movies. Payne v. State, 267 Ga. App. 498, 600 S.E.2d 422 (2004).

Although the trial court erred by excluding evidence of one child victim's alleged homosexual relationship in defendant's trial on 14 counts of child molestation and 11 counts of aggravated child molestation, it was highly probable that the error did not contribute to the jury's verdict; even if defendant was given the opportunity to cross-examine the victim about the victim's past sexual behavior, the judge would have been unlikely to have adjudged that evidence as credible, completely disregarding defendant's guilty plea and the other evidence that such a similar transaction did occur. Brown v. State, 275 Ga. App. 281, 620 S.E.2d 394 (2005).

Constitutional challenge of rape shield statute denied. — Evidence that the victim was molested by her stepfather would not have diminished evidence that defendant molested the victim; therefore, application of the rape shield statute did not deny him a fair trial. Rouse v. State, 204 Ga. App. 845, 420 S.E.2d 779, cert. denied, 204 Ga. App. 922, 420 S.E.2d 779 (1992).

Question regarding victim's previous accusation against defendant. — Defense counsel was properly prohibited from asking the 11-year-old victim on cross-examination whether she had previously accused the defendant, her stepfather, of molesting her.

Allen v. State, 210 Ga. App. 447, 436 S.E.2d 559 (1993).

Questioning about motive to fabricate allegations not barred. — Limitation on cross-examination of an alleged child molestation victim, precluding examination of whether she was dating an older man, did not preclude questioning whether she had a motive to fabricate the allegations due to conflicts with defendant over parental discipline. Nixon v. State, 234 Ga. App. 797, 507 S.E.2d 833 (1998).

Evidence of victim's sexually transmitted disease allowed. — Since the defendant was convicted of incest and child molestation, the trial court erred in disallowing the defendant to introduce medical evidence of a sexually transmitted disease for which the victim had tested positive for the purpose of corroborating defendant's defense, not for the purpose of exploring the victim's past or other sexual behavior. Chambers v. State, 205 Ga. App. 78, 421 S.E.2d 326 (1992).

Questioning about promiscuity precluded. — In a prosecution for child molestation and incest, the defendant was properly precluded from questioning the victim about her alleged promiscuity. Walker v. State, 234 Ga. App. 40, 506 S.E.2d 179 (1998).

Because evidence of the victim's disease was inadmissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(a), trial counsel's performance could not be considered deficient based on a failure to contest the receipt of the medical information; thus, an order granting defendant's petition for a writ of habeas corpus was reversed because even if counsel had requested a continuance for the purpose of testing the defendant, no reasonable likelihood existed that the outcome of the trial would have been different, and in fact, a negative result for defendant at the time of trial would not have established the medical condition at the time of the crimes, or rule out the possibility that the defendant had molested the victim. Murrell v. Ricks, 280 Ga. 427, 627 S.E.2d 546 (2006).

Inapplicable to victim's prior alleged molestations. — O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 did not bar the introduction of victim's prior alleged molestations to show that someone other than defendant caused the injuries to the two victims. Lemacks v. State, 207 Ga. App. 160, 427 S.E.2d 536 (1993).

Evidence of child victim's alleged viewing of pornography. — Trial court did not err in limiting inquiry into a child victim's alleged viewing of the victim's brother's pornographic materials because there was no showing of relevance when the victim denied seeing the movies and did not use words of a sexual nature that normally would not be in the victim's vocabulary. Montgomery v. State, 277 Ga. App. 142, 625 S.E.2d 529 (2006).

Evidence of sexually transmitted disease.

— Trial court did not err in refusing to allow the offered testimony regarding other sexual assaults upon the victim after defendant failed to offer proof that the victim's stepfather was also infected with gonorrhea. Any evidence of the victim's sexual activity with her stepfather would have shed no light on the origin of the victim's sexually transmitted disease. Rouse v. State, 204 Ga. App. 845, 420 S.E.2d 779, cert. denied, 204 Ga. App. 922, 420 S.E.2d 779 (1992).

Harmless error. — Although the defendant in a child molestation case should have been allowed to question one of the teenagers involved about her sexual relationship with the defendant's child because at the time of the trial, the rape shield statute applied only to rape cases, the error was harmless; such a relationship was placed into evidence by the teenager's own statements. Krirat v. State, 286 Ga. App. 650, 649 S.E.2d 786 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 745 (Ga. 2007).

Incest. — Rape shield statute was applicable in prosecution for incest. Estes v. State, 165 Ga. App. 453, 301 S.E.2d 504 (1983).

Flirtation between child and parent inadmissible. — Trial court did not err by excluding evidence concerning daughter's alleged flirtation with her stepfather because the rape shield statute bars such evidence. Murphy v. State, 195 Ga. App. 878, 395 S.E.2d 76 (1990).

Incest is a sexual crime included within O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3. Haynes v. State, 180 Ga. App. 202, 349 S.E.2d 208 (1986).

Rape

Evidence not admissible in rape case. — In a prosecution for rape and other offenses, the trial court properly precluded defendant from examining an officer regarding intimate photographs and letters written by the victim to her husband while he was in prison. Martin v. State, 219 Ga. App. 277, 464 S.E.2d 872 (1995).

Victim impact statement in which the victim stated that defendant "took her virginity" was not admissible for impeachment purposes under the rape shield statute. Fetterolf v. State, 223 Ga. App. 744, 478 S.E.2d 889 (1996).

Evidence concerning a romantic relationship between the victim and a recused prosecuting attorney was inadmissible. Griffin v. State, 224 Ga. App. 225, 480 S.E.2d 608 (1997).

There was no error in the trial court's refusal to allow defendant to introduce evidence of the victim's past sexual behavior to explain how her hymen became perforated. Snow v. State, 228 Ga. App. 649, 492 S.E.2d 564 (1997).

Even though defendant had obtained a pretrial order allowing him to present testimony that he and the victim had previously had consensual intercourse, his asking a nurse about the victim's statement to her about a prior act of voluntary intercourse violated the rape shield statute since this evidence was not included in defendant's proffer. Banks v. State, 230 Ga. App. 258, 495 S.E.2d 877 (1998).

Evidence of victim's prior rape was not admissible as a prior false allegation or otherwise; defendant's argued inference that the victim must have consented because as a previous rape victim she would have exhibited more wariness of strange men was not permissible. Williams v. State, 251 Ga. App. 137, 553 S.E.2d 823 (2001).

Trial court properly excluded evidence as to the victims' past sexual behavior in defendant's rape and aggravated assault trial as defendant failed to satisfy either prong of O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(b) since: (1) the victims were beaten; (2) one victim testified that she was pushed to the ground and hit in the face; (3) the other victim was dragged to an abandoned yard and told repeatedly to "shut up" while being punched in the face; and (4) the victims testified that they never had sex with defendant before the night in question. Williams v. State, 257 Ga. App. 54, 570 S.E.2d 362 (2002).

In a prosecution for rape and sodomy, the trial court properly refused to allow the defendant to present evidence as to the victim's past conduct in which she allegedly consented to sex in exchange for drugs, as defendant did not proffer any evidence to demonstrate the basis for his belief that the victim consented to his conduct. Brown v. State, 260 Ga. App. 77, 579 S.E.2d 87 (2003).

Since the victim never claimed that defendant was the father of her child, evidence of her sexual conduct was irrelevant pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(b). Carson v. State, 259 Ga. App. 21, 576 S.E.2d 12 (2002).

Rape shield statute was properly used to exclude testimony of the victim's mother and in limiting victim's cross-examination; the evidence excluded under the rape shield statute involved the victim's sexual act with a third party and was also excludable on relevancy grounds. Abdulkadir v. State, 264 Ga. App. 805, 592 S.E.2d 433 (2003).

Evidence of the sexual history of defendant's wife was properly excluded under the Georgia Rape Shield Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, as defendant was charged with the aggravated assault of his wife in conjunction with a rape charge; trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to argue that evidence of the prior sexual history of defendant's wife was admissible. Osterhout v. State, 266 Ga. App. 319, 596 S.E.2d 766 (2004).

Trial court properly refused to allow testimony that a victim of domestic violence had been seen working as a prostitute because that information had no relevance to the aggravated assault and false imprisonment charges for which a defendant was convicted, and further, the defendant failed to produce any evidence that could have provided a nexus between the alleged prostitution and a conclusion that someone else might have inflicted the victim's injuries. Moorer v. State, 290 Ga. App. 216, 659 S.E.2d 422 (2008).

Testimony about ongoing customer-prostitute relationship should be allowed. — Defendant's aggravated sodomy conviction was reversed after the trial court erroneously refused to allow testimony concerning defendant's five-year relationship with the victim, a prostitute, under Georgia's Rape Shield Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3; the ongoing customer-prostitute relationship between the two would support a reasonable inference that defendant believed that the defendant's sexual relationship with the victim on the night in question was consensual; the evidence also had a direct bearing on the victim's motivation to fabricate the rape allegation, and therefore was admissible; defendant's proposed cross-examination of the victim was confined to the existence of an ongoing relationship between them. Ivey v. State, 264 Ga. App. 377, 590 S.E.2d 781 (Nov. 26, 2003).

Use of term "virgin" prohibited. — Any evidence of physical injuries a victim receives during the commission of a rape, including the condition of the hymen, is admissible, but the term "virgin" is a comment on prior sexual history and therefore not admissible. Herndon v. State, 232 Ga. App. 129, 499 S.E.2d 918 (1998).

Inquiry about dress prohibited. — The trial court properly refused to permit defendant to introduce evidence or to make inquiry about the mode of the victim's dress on the night of the rape. Alford v. State, 243 Ga. App. 212, 534 S.E.2d 81 (2000).

Victim's desire to keep knowledge of sexual activity from parents. — Despite defendant's contention that defendant should have been allowed to present evidence that the victim had the motive to fabricate her claim of rape in order to prevent her parents from knowing that she had become sexually active, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in restricting defendant's cross-examination of the victim regarding her past sexual history based on Green v. State, 221 Ga. App. 436 (1996). Lloyd v. State, 263 Ga. App. 234, 587 S.E.2d 372 (2003).

Effectiveness of counsel in questioning. — Failure of defense counsel to cross-examine rape victim regarding her prior sexual history was not ineffective assistance of counsel since such questioning was clearly prohibited under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3. Brown v. State, 225 Ga. App. 49, 483 S.E.2d 318 (1997).

Inquiring about areas of victim fabrication. — When defendant was charged with raping a victim who accepted defendant's offer of a ride as the victim was on her way to return a jacket to a former boyfriend, the rape shield law, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3(a), did not prohibit defendant from inquiring of the victim about a theory that the victim fabricated the rape charge to explain semen stains on the boyfriend's jacket, resulting from the sexual encounter, because she wanted to reestablish a romantic relationship with the boyfriend, because defendant was not seeking to inquire about the victim's character for sexual behavior. Richardson v. State, 276 Ga. 639, 581 S.E.2d 528 (2003).

O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 applies by its terms to any prosecution for rape, making no distinction between the different phases of the trial. Singleton v. State, 157 Ga. App. 192, 276 S.E.2d 685 (1981).

Statutory rape. — Although the rape shield statute is applicable by its terms to rape cases, logic and the intent of the Act show that it should be equally applicable in statutory rape cases, except that the exceptions in the Act relating to consent and the accused's prior participation would be inapplicable in statutory rape cases. Barnes v. State, 244 Ga. 302, 260 S.E.2d 40 (1979); Hill v. State, 159 Ga. App. 489, 283 S.E.2d 703 (1981); Brown v. State, 173 Ga. App. 640, 327 S.E.2d 515 (1985).

In a prosecution for statutory rape, evidence of sexual intercourse between the victim and other individuals was properly excluded under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3; in the absence of any indication that the prior acts of sexual intercourse were forcibly accomplished, evidence of sexual intercourse with others would relate to past sexual behavior and reflect upon the character of the victim. Berry v. State, 210 Ga. App. 789, 437 S.E.2d 630 (1993).

Evidence of other sexual activity with defendant allowed. — O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 permits introduction of evidence of other sexual activity of the complaining witness only if such behavior involved the defendant or if such evidence supports an inference that the defendant reasonably believed the complaining witness would have consented to his actions. Rouse v. State, 204 Ga. App. 845, 420 S.E.2d 779, cert. denied, 204 Ga. App. 922, 420 S.E.2d 779 (1992).

Evidence that victim had contracted gonorrhea three months before she was raped, that she wore sexually suggestive clothing and acted promiscuously when she frequented nightclubs, and that she demanded money from another man threatening to claim that he raped her was properly ruled inadmissible. Ford v. State, 189 Ga. App. 395,

Victim's statements to defendant about past relationships. — Rape shield statute applied to victim's statements to defendant about her having had sexual relations with black men and having had children by these men which defendant sought to introduce as evidence that defendant believed the victim consented to have sex with him. Logan v. State, 212 Ga. App. 734, 442 S.E.2d 883 (1994).

Reasonable belief that victim consented.

— Since the defendant had known the victim for only one hour before the alleged rape occurred, and since in that time, it was unlikely that the defendant discovered any past sexual activity on the part of his victim that could justify his claim that she consented to intercourse, the trial court's refusal to admit evidence as to the victim's prior sexual experience was not a denial of defendant's right to a thorough and sifting cross-examination. Lamar v. State, 243 Ga. 401, 254 S.E.2d 353, appeal dismissed, 444 U.S. 803, 100 S. Ct. 23, 62 L. Ed. 2d 16 (1979).

Proffered testimony of two young men regarding the victim's advances toward them was inadmissible in a rape case, since there was no evidence of consent by the victim, nor any evidence that defendant had knowledge of the alleged conduct between the victim and the two young men. Moore v. State, 195 Ga. App. 851, 395 S.E.2d 13 (1990).

Evidence that a victim of an attempted rape had recorded a phone-sex tape did not support an inference that the defendant could have reasonably believed that she consented to the attempted sexual intercourse. Sweeney v. State, 233 Ga. App. 862, 506 S.E.2d 150 (1998).

Refusal to allow cross-examination of rape victim on existence of pubic hairs found on victim inconsistent with those of appellant and victim was not error. Tremble v. State, 162 Ga. App. 761, 292 S.E.2d 442 (1982).

In rape cases, proof of prior consent without regard to identity of persons or similarity of circumstances may be admitted to allow the jury to weigh or calculate the probability of consent with respect to an entire class of "unchaste" women when the court finds that the evidence supports an inference that the accused could have reasonably believed that the complaining witness consented to the conduct complained of. Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981).

State's introduction of evidence that victims contracted gonorrhea after rape and that defendant had gonorrhea during time in question did not authorize defendant to question victims concerning their prior sexual conduct. McNeese v. State, 170 Ga. App. 118, 316 S.E.2d 564 (1984).

Sexual Battery

No application in sexual battery cases. — Trial court did not err in refusing to charge the jury that it could consider the victim's character in determining whether the sexual contact with defendant was consensual or against the victim's will since the rape shield statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, on which defendant relied in arguing for the instruction, did not apply directly to sexual offenses such as sexual battery or aggravated sexual battery, and also because there was no evidence of any past sexual behavior between defendant and the victim. Stinson v. State, 256 Ga. App. 902, 569 S.E.2d 858 (2002) (decided prior to 2005 amendment).

Evidence not admissible in sexual assault case. — Trial court correctly granted the state's motion in limine to exclude evidence concerning the sexual assault victim having had consensual sex with her boyfriend before defendant sexually assaulted her because the Georgia rape shield statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, barred the sexual assault victim's prior sexual history as having any relevance to defendant's intent at the time of his sexual assault on the victim. Bing v. State, 256 Ga. App. 88, 567 S.E.2d 731 (2002).

O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 is applicable to prosecutions for aggravated assault with intent to rape, and trial court did not err in sustaining the state's objection to defense counsel's questions concerning the prosecutors' previous sexual conduct. Blount v. State, 172 Ga. App. 120, 322 S.E.2d 323 (1984).

Sodomy

Evidence not admissible in sodomy case. — Evidence of any previous consensual homosexual fantasies the victim may have had was not admissible because it would in no way support an inference that the accused could have reasonably believed that the victim consented to the conduct complained of in the prosecution, which included armed robbery and kidnapping, as well as non-consensual aggravated sodomy at knife point. Rogers v. State, 247 Ga. App. 219, 543 S.E.2d 81 (2000).

In a prosecution for aggravated sodomy, even though the rape shield statute did not apply, evidence of the victim's sexual behavior with persons other than the defendant was properly excluded as not relevant since the defendant's defense was that he was not there, rather than that the victim had consented. Mobley v. State, 212 Ga. App. 293, 441 S.E.2d 780 (1994).

Evidence of victim's prior relationships with defendant. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in excluding evidence of a rape victim's alleged past sexual behavior with defendant as the evidence of alleged prior sexual encounters with the victim did not lead to an inference of consent since the evidence established that defendant could not have reasonably believed that the victim consented to the sodomy and intercourse at issue based on defendant brandishing a gun and threatening to shoot the victim's friend and the victim if the victim did not comply with defendant's demands for sex. Jennings v. State, 292 Ga. App. 149, 664 S.E.2d 248 (2008).

Procedure

Defense must notify court of need for in camera hearing. — Before a trial court can be faulted for refusing an in camera hearing as provided for by O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, the court must be placed on notice as to the intent of the defense to seek to introduce such evidence, and the defense must specifically notify the court of the need for an in camera hearing for its offer of proof. Tucker v. State, 173 Ga. App. 742, 327 S.E.2d 852 (1985); Evans v. State, 180 Ga. App. 1, 348 S.E.2d 561 (1986).

Defendant was not entitled to an in camera hearing on defendant's offer of proof of the victim's past sexual behavior when the defendant later testified before the jury that the defendant had consensual sex with the victim and the defendant never made a proffer of anticipated testimony of an independent witness who would testify that the witness saw the consensual sex. Nelson v. State, 210 Ga. App. 249, 435 S.E.2d 750 (1993).

Victim may not appeal finding of admissibility. — Since the victim is not the defendant, the court does not consider any prejudice to her that admission of sexual history evidence may allow as against its probative value; nor is she provided any right of appeal against a finding of admissibility. Once the pertinence of a woman's lack of chastity, and hence its admissibility, is determined at the in camera inspection, this character trait may be proved. Hardy v. State, 159 Ga. App. 854, 285 S.E.2d 547 (1981).

Retrial

Reprosecution not barred when evidence inappropriately introduced. — Defendant's introduction of evidence that was prohibited by the rape shield statute gave the court grounds to find manifest necessity for a mistrial; therefore, state and federal double jeopardy provisions did not bar reprosecution. Banks v. State, 230 Ga. App. 258, 495 S.E.2d 877 (1998).

Trial court did not err in denying a defendant's plea in bar of former jeopardy with regard to kidnapping, rape, and other charges for alleged crimes committed against the defendant's estranged wife as defense counsel violated the Rape Shield Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3, in questioning the defendant's spouse as to how often the spouse had engaged in sexual intercourse after the alleged rape, which entitled the state to a mistrial. The defendant did not have the right to force the state either to endure a prejudiced trial or forego prosecution entirely. Birdsong v. State, 298 Ga. App. 322, 680 S.E.2d 159 (2009).

Retrial not barred by double jeopardy clause. — Trial judge did not abuse the judge's discretion in determining that declaration of a mistrial was required because prejudicial and inadmissible matter injected by the defense in violation of O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 made it impossible for an impartial verdict to be reached, and retrial of defendant was not barred by the double jeopardy clause of the fifth amendment. Abdi v. State, 249 Ga. 827, 294 S.E.2d 506 (1982), cert.

Declaration of a mistrial by the trial judge, on the judge's own motion, in a rape prosecution, following the cross-examination of the alleged victim, which culminated in a question by defense counsel concerning the past sexual behavior of the witness, a violation of O.C.G.A. § 24-2-3 that was "highly improper" and prejudicial, was proper and did not bar a second trial of the defendant for the alleged offense. Abdi v. Georgia, 744 F.2d 1500 (11th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1006, 105 S. Ct. 1871, 85 L. Ed. 2d 164 (1985).

Editor's notes. — The cases noted below were decided under the law as it existed prior to the enactment, by Ga. L. 1976, p. 741, § 1, of former Code 1933, § 38-202.1.

Evidence of general reputation for lewdness is admitted for the purpose of illustrating the probability of consent, and to negative the nonconsent and force. Teague v. State, 208 Ga. 459, 67 S.E.2d 467 (1951). But see, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955), for comment, see 14 Ga. B.J. 363 (1952).

Evidence of specific acts not allowed. — In a prosecution for rape, only the showing of female's general character for lewdness is permitted, and evidence of specific acts of lewdness with other men or a cross-examination of the female as to such acts is not allowed; and the rule is not changed when the accused admits the intercourse and claims that intercourse was with consent. Latimer v. State, 188 Ga. 775, 4 S.E.2d 631 (1939); Teague v. State, 208 Ga. 459, 67 S.E.2d 467 (1951). But see, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955), for comment, see 14 Ga. B.J. 363 (1952).

Evidence of specific acts allowed. — When the alleged victim of the rape is sworn as a witness for the state, justice and the defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial require that his counsel be permitted to cross-examine her thoroughly as to any prior act of lewdness with the accused and with other men. Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955). But see Lynn v. State, 231 Ga. 559, 203 S.E.2d 221 (1974). For comment, see 19 Ga. B.J. 95 (1956).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Brief of evidence. — In the preparation of the brief of evidence after trial, only such portions of documents should be embraced therein as were actually read or considered at the trial. Crawford v. Roney, 126 Ga. 763, 55 S.E. 499 (1906).

Entry on back of deed. — When the plaintiff relies on a deed coming from the plaintiff’s own possession, the opposite party may without proof of its execution, rely upon an endorsement, memorandum, or entry on the back of the deed. McBrayer v. Walker, 122 Ga. 245, 50 S.E. 95 (1905).

Foreign state code. — When one party offers a section of the code of another state as proof of the law of that state on a given subject, that party is not required to introduce all cognate sections. If there are other sections applicable the opposite party may offer those sections, but cannot complain that one’s adversary has not done so. Southern Ry. v. Robertson, 7 Ga. App. 154, 66 S.E. 535 (1909).

Real estate valuations. — It would be a misconception of the principle invoked by statute to allow the several valuations as stated by the real estate board in a document together with their arguments and reasons therefor, to be introduced in evidence by the plaintiff merely because the plaintiff’s witness on cross-examination had stated a single valuation from this paper, when the entire document was otherwise absolutely inadmissible as hearsay. City of Atlanta v. Atlanta Title & Trust Co., 45 Ga. App. 265, 164 S.E. 224 (1932).

Victim’s testimony. — After the defense counsel was allowed to pursue the inconsistencies between a witness’s trial testimony and the witness’s statement to a detective, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-2-4, the state was entitled to rebut the defense’s implication that a robber was not the defendant by reading the entire statement to the jury; consequently, the trial court did not err in allowing the detective to read part of a victim’s statement to the jury. Houston v. State, 270 Ga. App. 456, 606 S.E.2d 883 (2004).

Photos of victim. — Trial court properly admitted one of three photographs of the victim’s body which showed an exterior mark of strangulation, as such was not overly gruesome and inflammatory; moreover, pre-incision photos of a victim which depicted the location and nature of the victim’s wounds were admissible as both relevant and material. McWilliams v. State, 280 Ga. 724, 632 S.E.2d 127 (2006).

Letters. — Trial court did not err by refusing the defendant’s request to admit only the portions of letters written by the codefendant that cast the codefendant in a bad light relative to the crimes and excluding other portions that described the defendant’s role in the crimes as being more significant than the defendant had described in a custodial interview because the defendant was not permitted to admit portions of the letters for the purportedly-limited purpose of showing the codefendant’s state of mind without waiving the defendant’s objections to the state’s introduction of the remainder of the letters. Stinski v. State, 286 Ga. 839, 691 S.E.2d 854 (2010).

ILLUSTRATIONS

General Consideration

Not exhaustive. — Cases specified in the Code in which hearsay evidence is admitted as exceptions to the general rule excluding hearsay testimony are not exhaustive of the cases in which hearsay evidence is admissible. Rea v. Pursley, 170 Ga. 788, 154 S.E. 325 (1930); Ellis v. O'Neal, 175 Ga. 652, 165 S.E. 751 (1932); Moore v. Atlanta Transit Sys., 105 Ga. App. 70, 123 S.E.2d 693 (1961), for comment, see 25 Ga. B.J. 202 (1962).

Objections. — When evidence is objected to en bloc certain portions of which are admissible, and portions are not, a complaint of the admission of the evidence as a whole is without merit. Brannan v. Mobley, 169 Ga. 243, 150 S.E. 76 (1929).

A general objection, such as that the verdict is unsupported by the evidence, gives the appellate court ground to set aside the verdict, if it is founded on hearsay. Eaton Oil & Auto Co. v. Greene County, 53 Ga. App. 145, 185 S.E. 296 (1936).

Cited in Owens v. Owens, 218 Ga. 336, 127 S.E.2d 897 (1962).

Illustrations

Statements of the testator, either before the execution of a purported will, at the time of execution, or after the execution of a paper, are admissible to aid in the determination of the fact whether the paper offered for probate is really the writing which was attested by witnesses as required by law. Greater latitude is given to the admission of parol evidence on the issue of probate than on the construction of the will after probate. Ellis v. O'Neal, 175 Ga. 652, 165 S.E. 751 (1932).

Testimony of an arresting officer as to statements made to the officer by a cab driver, in the presence of the accused, regarding the activities of the accused while a passenger during the night after the crime was committed, was hearsay, not being original evidence, under § 24-3-2, nor an exception to the hearsay rule. Nor was it admissible by acquiescence or silence, since the circumstances required neither an answer nor denial by the accused. Rosborough v. State, 209 Ga. 362, 72 S.E.2d 717 (1952).

Declarations of a deceased employee to an employer and to the investigating police officer as to the cause of the accident were hearsay, inadmissible under any exception to the hearsay rule. Lockhart v. Liberty Mut. Ins. Co., 141 Ga. App. 476, 233 S.E.2d 810 (1977).

General Consideration

When testimony considered hearsay. — Testimony is considered hearsay only if the witness is testifying to another party's statement in order to prove or demonstrate the truth of that statement. Otherwise it is a verbal act and thus original evidence rather than hearsay. Hurston v. State, 194 Ga. App. 226, 390 S.E.2d 119 (1990).

When defendant's statement that plans for dock construction were submitted was based on defendant's own personal knowledge, but defendant's statement regarding approval was hearsay, based on information from a source who told defendant about such approval, the trial court erred in considering this evidence. Clauss v. Plantation Equity Group, Inc., 236 Ga. App. 522, 512 S.E.2d 10 (1999).

Underlying reasons for rule. — Chief reasons for the exclusion of hearsay evidence are the want of a sanction of an oath, and of any opportunity to cross-examine the witness. Foster v. Brooks, 6 Ga. 287 (1849); Bennett v. State, 49 Ga. App. 804, 176 S.E. 148 (1934); Peacon v. Peacon, 197 Ga. 748, 30 S.E.2d 640 (1944).

Necessity is not enough to justify hearsay. The two underlying reasons for any exception to the hearsay rule are a necessity for the exception and a circumstantial guaranty of the trustworthiness of the offered evidence which is that there must be something present which the law considers a substitute for the oath of the declarant and the declarant's cross-examination by the party against whom the hearsay is offered. Gale v. State, 138 Ga. App. 261, 226 S.E.2d 264 (1976); Irby v. Brooks, 246 Ga. 794, 273 S.E.2d 183 (1980), overruled on other grounds, Swain v. Citizens & S. Bank, 258 Ga. 547, 372 S.E.2d 423 (1988).

There is a distinction between illegal testimony and secondary evidence in that hearsay testimony (illegal testimony) has no probative force whatsoever, and its only effect is to prejudice the minds of the jury against the party against whom such hearsay evidence is introduced, while the only objection to secondary evidence is that it is received without first laying the preliminary foundation; such evidence stands on a different footing, and if admitted without objection it is nevertheless competent, for by allowing such evidence without objecting at the time it is sought to be introduced the party waives the party's right to have the best evidence of such fact sought to be proved, and cannot subsequently insist that the court should withdraw such secondary evidence from the consideration of the jury. Rushin v. State, 63 Ga. App. 646, 11 S.E.2d 844 (1940).

Hearsay testimony is wholly without probative value, and its introduction without objection does not give it any weight or force whatever in establishing a fact. Higgins v. Trentham, 186 Ga. 264, 197 S.E. 862 (1938); Crawley v. Selby, 208 Ga. 503, 67 S.E.2d 775 (1951); Collins v. State, 146 Ga. App. 857, 247 S.E.2d 602 (1978); Finch v. Caldwell, 155 Ga. App. 813, 273 S.E.2d 216 (1980).

Necessity. — Under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1, hearsay evidence is admitted in specified cases from necessity. There are three prerequisites for admission of hearsay because of necessity: (1) necessity; (2) particularized guarantees of trustworthiness; and (3) the evidence must be relevant to a material fact and more probative on that material fact than other evidence that may be procured or offered. Booth v. State, 264 Ga. App. 393, 590 S.E.2d 789 (2003).

"Necessity" exception applies only when witness unavailable. — "Necessity" exception to the hearsay rule, set forth in subsection (b) of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1, applies only when the witness is unavailable, usually because of death or in cases where the witness may not be compelled to testify, as in the case of a wife who cannot be compelled to testify against her husband. Glisson v. State, 188 Ga. App. 152, 372 S.E.2d 462 (1988).

Hearsay not admitted. — Statements to a police officer by the victim in a prosecution for battery which were made three-and-one-half hours after the incident and which bore no mark of spontaneity or other such state of mind undeniably free of conscious device or afterthought were not part of the res gestae; as pure hearsay, the statements were inadmissible since the state did not show "necessity," to wit, that the declarant was unavailable and that the state made reasonable efforts to secure the presence of the declarant. Wilbourne v. State, 214 Ga. App. 371, 448 S.E.2d 37 (1994).

Requirements for necessity exception. — To meet the necessity exception, the state must show that the declarant is unavailable to testify and that it made reasonable efforts to locate the declarant and secure the declarant's presence. Holmes v. State, 271 Ga. 138, 516 S.E.2d 61 (1999).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in deeming a witness to be unavailable when the evidence showed that investigators for both the state and a codefendant could not locate the witness after diligent and extensive efforts conducted over a month and a half before trial. Holmes v. State, 271 Ga. 138, 516 S.E.2d 61 (1999).

In a malice murder prosecution, statements made by the victim in the months before death were admissible under the necessity exception to hearsay as the statements were made to investigating police officers shortly after the events involving defendant and the victim. Peterson v. State, 274 Ga. 165, 549 S.E.2d 387 (2001).

Necessity exception inapplicable when declarant incompetent. — Necessity exception most commonly applies when the out-of-court declarant is unavailable to testify because of death or the exercise of a privilege not to testify, and the circumstances surrounding the statement provide a guaranty of trustworthiness, not when the declarant is unavailable because the declarant fails to qualify as a competent witness. Shaver v. State, 199 Ga. App. 428, 405 S.E.2d 281, cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 907, 405 S.E.2d 281 (1991).

Necessity requirement held satisfied. — See Patterson v. State, 202 Ga. App. 440, 414 S.E.2d 895 (1992); Jones v. State, 240 Ga. App. 723, 524 S.E.2d 773 (1999); Battle v. State, 244 Ga. App. 771, 536 S.E.2d 761 (2000).

Requirements of necessity and guaranty of trustworthiness satisfied. — In a murder prosecution, when defendant's common-law wife asserted the privilege not to testify against husband, statements wife made during the official investigation and confirmed at a subsequent pre-trial hearing were admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule without conducting an additional hearing on their reliability. Drane v. State, 265 Ga. 663, 461 S.E.2d 224 (1995). But see Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

Wife's out-of-court statement containing a reference to defendant's inculpatory admission was admissible pursuant to the "necessity" hearsay exception. Quijano v. State, 271 Ga. 181, 516 S.E.2d 81 (1999).

Sibling relationship satisfied guarantees of trustworthiness. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in determining that sisters had the sort of relationship which held guarantees of trustworthiness, such that the victim's statements to the sister concerning her finances were admissible under the necessity exception to hearsay, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b). Todd v. State, 274 Ga. 98, 549 S.E.2d 116 (2001).

Under the necessity exception to hearsay, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b), the testimony of four individuals about the victim's statements regarding the subletting of the townhouse, the problems the victim was having about retrieving the mail, and the missing furniture and checks were admissible because the victim's statements were necessary and sufficiently trustworthy since they were made to the individuals in whom the victim placed a great deal of confidence. Thomas v. State, 274 Ga. 156, 549 S.E.2d 359 (2001).

Requirements of necessity and guaranty of trustworthiness not satisfied. — Victim's declarations to an army medic before the crimes in question that the defendant had injured the victim were inherently untrustworthy, and thus were improperly admitted under the necessity exception to the hearsay doctrine: (1) the victim was intoxicated when the victim made the statements; and (2) the victim also stated that the victim would lie to the victim's chain of command about the injury. The error was harmless, however, because the evidence could not have contributed to the verdict as two eye-witnesses implicated the defendant as a party to the crimes. Navarrete v. State, 283 Ga. 156, 656 S.E.2d 814 (2008), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 104, 172 L.Ed.2d 33 (2008).

Any error in admitting a hearsay statement was harmless by defendant's subsequently being called as witness. Hufstetler v. State, 171 Ga. App. 106, 319 S.E.2d 869 (1984).

Hearsay was inadmissible, but harmless error. — Testimony was inadmissible hearsay because the former police detective did not actually test the blood but was simply repeating information the detective read in the lab report, and while the court may have abused the court's discretion by allowing the detective to testify as to the results of the blood test, any error was harmless given the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Green v. State, 249 Ga. App. 546, 547 S.E.2d 569 (2001).

Trial court erred in admitting testimony of a police officer about what the murder victim told the officer shortly after defendant shot into the bedroom in which the victim was sleeping, which was one of defendant's prior bad acts that the state tried to get admitted under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule. Such testimonial hearsay in a criminal prosecution was admissible when the declarant was unavailable only if the defendant had a prior opportunity to cross-examine the declarant about the hearsay statement, and defendant had no such opportunity, but because the statement did not contribute to defendant's conviction, admission of it was harmless error. Moody v. State, 277 Ga. 676, 594 S.E.2d 350 (2004).

Evidence properly excluded. — When the defendant did not tender the copies of the convictions which the defendant desired to have introduced to impeach witnesses, but only made a proffer of the testimony of the clerk's representative, the state's objection based on the failure to produce the best evidence was properly sustained. The testimony of the deputy clerk as to the content of the records was not only not the best evidence, it was also hearsay. Lipscomb v. State, 194 Ga. App. 657, 391 S.E.2d 773 (1990).

Even assuming that the trial court erred in refusing to admit an employee of a power company to testify that she saw on her computer screen a particular entry reflecting that a work order had issued for the defendant's address because there had been a disruption in electrical service to the defendant's home the night before the victims were killed and that it had been reported to the power company that the electric meter had been disconnected, it did not constitute reversible error since there was other evidence that the electric meter had been removed from the house the night before the victims were killed, and the power company's data did not identify the persons who had removed the meter. Coleman v. State, 286 Ga. 291, 687 S.E.2d 427 (2009).

Summary of terminated caseworker's files was hearsay evidence and should not have been introduced into evidence; without the summary, the state lacked clear and convincing evidence to show that parental rights should be terminated. In re A.A., 252 Ga. App. 167, 555 S.E.2d 827 (2001).

Applicability

Anything heard by a witness while in the presence of the defendant is not hearsay and is admissible. Latimore v. State, 170 Ga. App. 848, 318 S.E.2d 722 (1984).

Anything seen or heard by a witness in the presence of a defendant is admissible and does not constitute inadmissible hearsay. Hurston v. State, 194 Ga. App. 226, 390 S.E.2d 119 (1990).

Cumulativeness is not an exception to the hearsay rule and affords no basis for an evidentiary ruling at trial. Parker v. State, 162 Ga. App. 271, 290 S.E.2d 518 (1982).

Res gestae rule is exception to rule against admission of hearsay testimony. Lively v. State, 157 Ga. App. 419, 278 S.E.2d 67 (1981).

No basis for res gestae exception when victim made statements to third parties three days after alleged offenses. Parker v. State, 162 Ga. App. 271, 290 S.E.2d 518 (1982).

Rule not applicable. — Hearsay rule prohibits the witness from testifying as to what another person said; it does not apply to what the witness personally said. Webb v.

Hearsay rule did not apply to bar testimony of a witness as to the witness's own statements. Bowers v. State, 241 Ga. App. 122, 526 S.E.2d 163 (1999).

Defendant did not establish that trial counsel provided ineffective assistance of counsel; counsel acted reasonably in not objecting to unresponsive testimony because the counsel did not want to draw attention to that testimony, the failure to object to alleged hearsay was not problematic because the testimony of the witnesses about what the witnesses observed was not hearsay, and defendant did not otherwise show that trial counsel was ineffective. Blunt v. State, 275 Ga. App. 409, 620 S.E.2d 572 (2005).

Recognized exception required. — Hearsay evidence is not admissible to prove the truth of the fact asserted, unless the evidence constitutes a recognized exception to the general rule excluding hearsay. Moore v. State, 154 Ga. App. 535, 268 S.E.2d 706 (1980).

When the only evidence that the defendant was driving without a license was hearsay from one of the police officers, not covered by one of the exceptions and not otherwise admissible as necessary and demonstrably trustworthy, reversal of the conviction for driving without a license was required. Day v. State, 235 Ga. App. 771, 510 S.E.2d 579 (1998).

Evidence properly excluded because witness was available. — Witness's testimony as to a conversation the witness had with a child's mother was properly excluded as the mother testified and defendant did not ask the mother about the conversation. Georgia does not recognize a third party's admission against penal interest when that admission exculpates the defendant. Hood v. State, 273 Ga. App. 430, 615 S.E.2d 244 (2005).

Actual Knowledge Requirement

Witness must have actual knowledge of a fact before it is proper to allow the witness to testify positively as to the existence of such fact. Bennett v. State, 49 Ga. App. 804, 176 S.E. 148 (1934); State Hwy. Dep't v. Wilkes, 106 Ga. App. 634, 127 S.E.2d 715 (1962).

Presumption of personal knowledge. —

When a witness testifies to a fact, the presumption is, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that the witness is testifying from the witness's own knowledge. Bailey v. Newberry, 52 Ga. App. 693, 184 S.E. 357 (1935); Johnson v. Woodward Lumber Co., 76 Ga. App. 152, 45 S.E.2d 294 (1947).

When it appears that the witness has no direct or personal knowledge of the transactions testified to, and that the witness's testimony is based upon hearsay and is negative in character, the testimony is properly excluded. Banks v. Kilday, 88 Ga. App. 307, 76 S.E.2d 642 (1953); State Farm Mut. Ins. Co. v. Moss, 152 Ga. App. 84, 262 S.E.2d 248 (1979); In re J.C., 163 Ga. App. 822, 296 S.E.2d 117 (1982).

Testimony was properly excluded as hearsay since a property manager lacked any immediate and independent personal knowledge of past due condominium association assessments as the manager did not prepare the documents, personally supervise preparation of the documents, or make any entries of the underlying facts used to compile the documents. Dunwoody-Woodlands Condominium Ass'n v. Hedquist, 199 Ga. App. 91, 403 S.E.2d 893 (1991).

Investigators, as agents of the state or otherwise, may not testify to the fruits of their investigations without regard for the hearsay rule; rather, such witnesses, even agents of the state, are bound by that rule and must testify from their own first-hand knowledge alone. Cawthon Motor Co. v. Scheufler, 153 Ga. App. 282, 265 S.E.2d 96 (1980).

Criminal Law

1. Constitutional Rights

Refusal to admit certain hearsay may violate due process. — In determining whether or not to impose the death penalty, refusal to admit testimony that defendant had not committed the crime for which the penalty was to be imposed on the grounds that such testimony was hearsay may constitute a violation of the due process clause of U.S. Const., amend. 14. Green v. Georgia, 442 U.S. 95, 99 S. Ct. 2150, 60 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1979).

Constitutional right to confrontation does not require that all hearsay evidence be excluded from evidence in criminal cases. Littles v. Balkcom, 245 Ga. 285, 264 S.E.2d 219 (1980).

When defendant admitted the commission of armed robbery of a witness as described in the indictment, the defendant waived the defendant's right to challenge the witness's statements regarding the incident; therefore, the admission of the evidence did not violate defendant's right of confrontation, and there was no error in admitting the statements under the necessity exception of subsection (b) of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1. Johnson v. State, 247 Ga. App. 157, 543 S.E.2d 439 (2000).

Incriminating statements by another raise confrontation issues. — Since the declarant made a statement which incriminated defendant to police while under suspicion for the crimes, the declarant's statement did not have sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness and the statement's admission under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule violated defendant's constitutional right of confrontation. Yancey v. State, 275 Ga. 550, 570 S.E.2d 269 (2002).

Hearsay evidence of witnesses properly admitted. — With regard to several defendants' convictions for violating the Georgia Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act, O.C.G.A. § 16-14-1 et seq., the trial court did not err by allowing the state to introduce out-of-court statements made by four witnesses since the witnesses' veracity had been attacked during cross-examination, the witnesses were present, testified under oath, and were subject to cross-examination. The fact that the witnesses were discharged before the out-of-court statements were presented to the jury did not alter the result. Overton v. State, 295 Ga. App. 223, 671 S.E.2d 507 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0654, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 212 (Ga. 2009).

Harmless error. — Admission of a hearsay statement was erroneous due to the lack of a genuinely close relationship between the victim and the declarant to support both a necessity and trustworthiness finding. However, the error was deemed harmless as the statement was cumulative of other legally admissible evidence of the same facts, did not touch on the central issue of the case, and could not have significantly contributed to the verdict in light of eyewitness testimony regarding the crime. Brooks v. State, 281 Ga. 514, 640 S.E.2d 280 (2007).

2. Basis for Conviction

Hearsay testimony alone will not support a conviction though admitted without objection. Slater v. State, 44 Ga. App. 295, 161 S.E. 271 (1931).

Without corroboration one cannot be convicted of a crime upon hearsay testimony as to statements of a child who is incompetent as a witness because too young to appreciate the nature and sanctity of the oath. Nelson v. State, 247 Ga. 172, 274 S.E.2d 317, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 882, 102 S. Ct. 365, 70 L. Ed. 2d 192 (1981).

Application and Examples

1. Admissible Hearsay

Indicia of reliability required for admissibility are that the statements be nonnarrative, that the declarant is shown by the evidence to know whereof the declarant speaks, that the witness is not apt to be proceeding on faulty recollection, and that the circumstances show that the declarant had no apparent reason to lie to the witness; it is not required that all of the indicia be present for the statement to be admissible. Timberlake v. State, 158 Ga. App. 125, 279 S.E.2d 283 (1981).

"Spontaneous declaration" is admissible hearsay testimony. — Statement which is a spontaneous reaction to a startling event is admissible hearsay testimony. House v. State, 252 Ga. 409, 314 S.E.2d 195 (1984); Daker v. State, 243 Ga. App. 848, 533 S.E.2d 393 (2000), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 1093, 122 S. Ct. 838, 151 L. Ed. 2d 717 (2002), cert. denied, 534 U.S. 1093, 122 S. Ct. 838, 151 L. Ed. 2d 717 (2002).

Assertion of spousal privilege meets the necessity requirement for admission of hearsay under the O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b) necessity exception. Herring v. State, 252 Ga. App. 4, 555 S.E.2d 233 (2001).

Hearsay evidence is admissible for impeachment, though inadmissible for other purposes. Seaboard Coast Line R.R. v. Smalley, 127 Ga. App. 652, 194 S.E.2d 612 (1972).

Hearsay testimony is admissible to prove the location of a county line. Poulos v. State,

49 Ga. App. 20, 174 S.E. 253 (1934).

Market price can be shown by hearsay. McKenzie v. Perdue, 67 Ga. App. 202, 19 S.E.2d 765, rev'd on other grounds, 194 Ga. 356, 21 S.E.2d 705 (1942).

Admission of necessity. — When statements explaining the circumstances of the murder were spontaneous and unsolicited, and made immediately after the shooting, after the defendant fled the scene, the statements satisfied the criteria for an admission out of necessity. White v. State, 276 Ga. 583, 581 S.E.2d 18 (2003).

Because the testimony of two witnesses recounting what the victim said to the witnesses prior to the victim's death was relevant to demonstrate the prior difficulties between defendant and the victim, and was accompanied by particular guarantees of trustworthiness, the trial court did not err in admitting the testimony under the "necessity" exception to the hearsay rule. Mathis v. State, 279 Ga. 100, 610 S.E.2d 62 (2005).

In defendant's prosecution for murdering defendant's former girlfriend, the girlfriend's statements to two friends were properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b) because the statements were uncontradicted statements made to people the victim had known for over a year, in whom the girlfriend placed great confidence and to whom the girlfriend regularly turned for advice with personal problems and to discuss personal matters, so the trial court could find the statements contained particularized guarantees of trustworthiness. Williams v. State, 279 Ga. 731, 620 S.E.2d 816 (2005).

Parent's statement that the parent's child, a passenger in the defendant's car, came to the parent sick and vomiting after a sleepless night and told the parent that the passenger witnessed a murder was nontestimonial in nature and fell within the necessity exception to the hearsay rule. Testimony by the parent and by a police investigator who was looking for the passenger showed that the passenger was unavailable, and this was a situation where a declarant made a statement to a person in whom the declarant placed great confidence and to whom the declarant turned for help with problems. Shipman v. State, 288 Ga. App. 134, 653 S.E.2d 383 (2007).

Hearsay statements by a murder victim were necessary, as the victim was deceased and unavailable. Bryant v. State, 282 Ga. 631, 651 S.E.2d 718 (2007).

Defendant's spouse's statement necessary and trustworthy. — Defendant's spouse's statement was properly admitted in defendant's criminal trial under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b), since it was necessary and it evidenced a guarantee of sufficient trustworthiness; the spouse was unavailable because the spouse refused to testify, the statements were trustworthy because the statements were made to police during their investigation of the criminal incident, and the statements were necessary because the statements provided insight into defendant's state of mind. Scott v. State, 261 Ga. App. 756, 583 S.E.2d 579 (2003).

Double hearsay proper. — Double hearsay was properly admitted about what a witness heard an individual say because the individual's credibility had been placed at issue by way of an attack on the witness's motive. Dillard v. State, 272 Ga. App. 523, 612 S.E.2d 804 (2005).

Hearsay evidence admissible at transfer hearing in juvenile cases. — Given that the right of confrontation is a trial right, there is no reason to apply that right to a transfer hearing involving a juvenile; therefore, hearsay evidence is admissible at such hearings. In the Interest of T. F., 295 Ga. App. 417, 671 S.E.2d 887 (2008).

2. Hearsay Not Found

That portion of the birth certificate which relates to the date of birth and the sex of the child, and certain facts concerning the name, race, place of residence, and other facts concerning the child's mother, is not obtained by the physician through hearsay and is clearly admissible. Posey v. State, 46 Ga. App. 290, 167 S.E. 340 (1932).

Evidence not offered to prove truth of matter asserted. — Challenged testimony was not inadmissible hearsay because: (1) neither the identification testimony by the victim, nor a detective regarding the alleged hearsay in obtaining the defendant's name, violated the defendant's rights to confrontation and cross-examination as neither witness actually repeated any alleged hearsay; (2) the evidence did not create a credibility problem that could only be cured by cross-examination, and the state did not offer the evidence to establish the truth of the matter asserted; and (3) the testimony explained why the police included the defendant's photograph in the line-up. Jennings v. State, 285 Ga. App. 774, 648 S.E.2d 105 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 667 (Ga. 2007).

Homeowner countersued a contractor for fraud. Testimony by a subcontractor that the contractor's project supervisor told the subcontractor to increase the bid because the homeowner was "loaded" was not hearsay, because the testimony was not admitted to show the truth of the matters asserted, and the testimony was a circumstance relevant to the fraud claim. Lumpkin v. Deventer N. Am., Inc., 295 Ga. App. 312, 672 S.E.2d 405 (2008).

Locksmith receipt indicating that defendant had a key made for a vehicle was not inadmissible hearsay evidence in the defendant's prosecution for, inter alia, trafficking in cocaine under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(a)(1) because the receipt was not offered as proof of what was asserted therein but as evidence that a piece of paper with the defendant's name on it was found in the same residence where cocaine and firearms were located, thereby linking the defendant circumstantially to the residence and the contraband; thus, the receipt was original evidence. Weems v. State, 295 Ga. App. 680, 673 S.E.2d 50 (2009).

As an officer's testimony about a dispatcher's statement that two Hispanic males were involved in a firearm discharge was not offered for the truth of the dispatcher's statement, but to explain the officer's subsequent conduct, the testimony was not hearsay. Herieia v. State, 297 Ga. App. 872, 678 S.E.2d 548 (2009).

Evidence that defendant was told age of victims. — Counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to testimony that defendant was told that the declarant "didn't want any guy to take off with [the declarant's] 16-year-old daughter"; the testimony was not hearsay as the testimony was admitted to show that defendant was told that the girls were only 16. Ford v. State, 274 Ga. App. 695, 617 S.E.2d 262 (2005).

Anything seen or heard by a witness in the presence of a defendant is admissible and does not constitute hearsay. Grindle v. State, 151 Ga. App. 164, 259 S.E.2d 166 (1979).

Receipt removed from burglarized house. — In a burglary case, the trial court did not err in allowing a receipt from one of the burglarized homes to be admitted into evidence and in allowing the occupant of the home to testify about the receipt; the receipt and the testimony were not offered to demonstrate who purchased the item or any of the circumstances surrounding that purchase, but to show that the defendant removed the receipt from the home, and the testimony did not constitute hearsay. Perez v. State, 284 Ga. App. 212, 643 S.E.2d 792 (2007).

Cumulative evidence of properly admitted proof of title. — In a dispute over two subdivision lots, the trial court did not err in admitting evidence that was cumulative to properly admitted evidence showing a legal property owner's record title, and the evidence was not hearsay, as alleged by a claimant who sought title to the property by prescription; further, the evidence was relevant to the issue of whether a claimant's adverse possession ripened into title by prescription. Smith v. Stacey, 281 Ga. 601, 642 S.E.2d 28 (2007).

When a witness testifies as to what the witness told another person, the statement is not hearsay. Holloman v. State, 167 Ga. App. 683, 307 S.E.2d 266 (1983).

When facts testified to are proved without contravention by witness whose knowledge of the facts is immediate and personal, this is not hearsay, and the admission of like statements made by another, even if hearsay, does not under these circumstances constitute reversible error. Johnson v. State, 158 Ga. App. 183, 279 S.E.2d 483 (1981).

Testimony of phone conversation with officer. — Trial court did not admit hearsay testimony by allowing a police officer to testify as to a conversation the officer had with defendant over the phone and to authenticate defendant's voice as being the voice of the person defendant talked to over the phone; voluntary, noncustodial, incriminating statements of defendants are admissible through the testimony of anyone who heard them. Ingram v. State, 268 Ga. App. 149, 601 S.E.2d 736 (2004).

Testimony not hearsay that was based on officer's observation of cell phone calls. —

2. Hearsay Not Found (Cont'd)

Testimony by an investigating officer that after confiscating a codefendant's cell phone, the officer used the recently called function and discovered that the phone had been used to call a taxi service just prior to the robbery of a taxi driver was properly admitted as the evidence was not hearsay under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1 because the evidence was based on the officer's own veracity and competence. Troutman v. State, 297 Ga. App. 196, 676 S.E.2d 836 (2009).

Testimony of police sergeant's own actions was not hearsay. — With regard to a defendant's murder conviction, the trial court did not err by overruling a hearsay objection to testimony by a police sergeant regarding investigative work performed on the case since the sergeant participated in the investigation through desk work; using information gained by the police obtained telephone records and subscriber information to identify potential suspects; and testified on the stand to the steps the sergeant personally took that led to the identification of the defendant as a suspect. The testimony of the sergeant was not hearsay as the sergeant did not relay information told by other persons and the testimony was nothing more than a recitation of the sergeant's own actions. Henley v. State, 285 Ga. 500, 678 S.E.2d 884 (2009), cert. denied, U.S. , 130 S. Ct. 800, 175 L. Ed. 2d 559 (2009).

Investigator's testimony was original evidence. — Although defendant contended that the waiver certificate was hearsay under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1 and improperly placed the defendant's character in issue, testimony was considered hearsay only if the witness was testifying to another party's statement in order to prove or demonstrate the truth of that statement; otherwise it was a verbal act and thus original evidence rather than hearsay. Therefore, defendant's hearsay objection was meritless because the investigator wrote the statement as well as read the statement into evidence, and thus, the statement was original evidence. Bynum v. State, 300 Ga. App. 163, 684 S.E.2d 330 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0225, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 300 (Ga. 2010).

Testimony of security agent as to value of shoplifted items. — Defendant was properly convicted of felony theft by shoplifting because a jury was permitted to consider a security agent's testimony regarding the value of the items stolen since the agent had personal knowledge of the prices of the subject merchandise from a cash register readout. Bell v. State, 262 Ga. App. 788, 586 S.E.2d 455 (2003).

Testimony of investigating officer that "co-indictee's name is Lawrence" was not hearsay, but was a statement of undisputed fact, identifying for the jury that person to whom the officer was then talking. Jackson v. State, 209 Ga. App. 53, 432 S.E.2d 649 (1993).

Testimony of caseworker in parental termination case. — In a termination of parental rights case, a parent failed to show that the testimony of the sole witness, a caseworker, was hearsay; although another employee worked on the case before the witness, the witness was the caseworker at the time of the hearing, and the record did not show that the witness lacked personal knowledge of the facts the witness testified to, most of which were memorialized in the trial court's previous orders, which were admitted without objection at the termination hearing. In the Interest of M.D.L., 285 Ga. App. 357, 646 S.E.2d 331 (2007).

Investigating officer's testimony about original lead. — Investigating officer's testimony that the officer investigated defendant based on information the officer received from an unnamed source did not constitute hearsay because the officer did not divulge the content of that information. Jenkins v. State, 268 Ga. 468, 491 S.E.2d 54 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1029, 118 S. Ct. 1318, 140 L. Ed. 2d 481 (1998).

Questions summarizing prior testimony. — Prosecution's questioning of a state's witness, summarizing incriminating testimony of previous state's witnesses for the witness, who was then asked whether that witness had, in fact, heard that testimony, was not objectionable on the ground that it sought to elicit hearsay, where the previous witnesses' testimony was offered under oath and was subject to cross-examination. King v. State, 185 Ga. App. 698, 365 S.E.2d 852, cert. denied, 185 Ga. App. 910, 365 S.E.2d 852 (1988).

Admission of transcript from earlier conviction. — When defendant in a prosecution for rape and aggravated sodomy pled guilty to a prior charge of aggravated sexual assault, admission of a transcript of the prior victim's testimony given at a hearing to compel the witness to testify was proper under the necessity exception to hearsay evidence. McBee v. State, 228 Ga. App. 16, 491 S.E.2d 97 (1997).

Deposition testimony of driver and passenger involved in traffic accident was not hearsay in a suit wherein occupants of another vehicle sought damages from the driver of a truck parked in the emergency lane of a highway. Reid v. Midwest Transp., 270 Ga. App. 557, 607 S.E.2d 170 (2004).

An official publication of the New York Stock Exchange, purporting to show the monthly average prices of cotton, which was introduced without objection in a hearing before an auditor and acted on by the auditor and the parties as if the quotations were correct, cannot, on a hearing by the judge of exceptions of fact to the auditor's report, be excluded on the ground that it was hearsay evidence. McKenzie v. Perdue, 67 Ga. App. 202, 19 S.E.2d 765, rev'd on other grounds, 194 Ga. 356, 21 S.E.2d 705 (1942).

Prior consistent statement. — Because the veracity of a witness's trial testimony was placed in issue, the witness's prior testimony was properly admitted as a prior consistent statement. Jackson v. State, 271 Ga. App. 278, 609 S.E.2d 207 (2005).

Victim's statement to a doctor was properly admitted as a prior consistent statement as the victim testified at trial and was cross-examined by the defendant; the defendant had asserted in opening statement and the defendant implied during cross-examination that because the victim's parent would have been upset if the parent believed the victim were having consensual sex, the victim falsely testified that the defendant forced the victim to engage in sex, which testimony was designed to preserve the victim's relationship with the parent, and to continue the victim's receipt of food and shelter from the parent. Smith v. State, 282 Ga. App. 339, 638 S.E.2d 791 (2006).

When a victim testified that the victim could not remember all of the details of a robbery, which occurred six years before the trial, it was not error to introduce the victim's prior consistent statement. The victim was a forgetful witness who testified at trial and who was cross-examined by the defendant. Williams v. State, 291 Ga. App. 279, 661 S.E.2d 658 (2008).

After the victim's mother testified that the defendant admitted to the mother that the defendant molested the victim, the trial court did not err in allowing an investigator to testify that the mother had told the investigator the same thing because the mother testified at trial and was cross-examined, and the defendant placed the mother's veracity in issue during cross-examination by attempting to show that the mother had an improper motive for testifying against the defendant, a motive that developed after the mother made the prior consistent statement to the investigator. Davis v. State, No. A10A0868, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 403 (Apr. 21, 2010).

Identification of defendant in photo array. — In a prosecution for armed robbery and related offenses, the trial court properly allowed hearsay evidence of identification. It was not error to allow a police officer to testify as to who the victims identified in the photo arrays as a law enforcement officer could testify to a pre-trial identification if the person who actually made the identification testified at trial and was subject to cross-examination. Monfort v. State, 281 Ga. App. 29, 635 S.E.2d 336 (2006).

Evidence rested upon veracity of witness, not other person. — In a trial for theft by taking, it was error to preclude a witness from giving testimony that potentially would have corroborated the defendant's explanation for the defendant's possession of a stolen trailer on the ground that the testimony was hearsay under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(a). The value of the evidence rested upon the veracity of the witness, not the veracity of the person referred to by the witness; furthermore, the error was not harmless, as the unsatisfactoriness of the defendant's explanation for possessing the trailer was central to the conviction. Boivin v. State, 298 Ga. App. 411, 680 S.E.2d 415 (2009).

3. Contents of Books and Records

Testimony concerning the content of records, unsupported in the evidence by the records themselves, which are never offered in evidence, should be excluded as hearsay. Foster v. National Ideal Co., 119 Ga. App.

773, 168 S.E.2d 872 (1969).

Testimony concerning information acquired solely through books and records kept by a third person is inadmissible as hearsay. Porterfield v. State, 150 Ga. App. 303, 257 S.E.2d 372 (1979).

Article stating costs of raising children not "notoriously accurate." — In a divorce case, it was reversible error for the trial court to have admitted in evidence, over the husband's objection, a publication of the United States Department of Agriculture entitled, "Family Economics Review," which the wife sought to admit in evidence because of tables stating the costs of raising children. This article was not admissible under the exception to the hearsay rule allowing the admission of books, such as mortality tables and almanacs which have become "notoriously accurate" with respect to the facts or scientific propositions sought to be proved. Suarez v. Suarez, 257 Ga. 102, 355 S.E.2d 649 (1987).

Documents not properly authenticated. — Check to a condominium unit occupant from a property management company for water damage and a handwritten listing of repair costs allegedly included in this payment were hearsay and were not properly authenticated. Glenridge Unit Owners Ass'n v. Felton, 183 Ga. App. 858, 360 S.E.2d 418 (1987).

County report containing opinions of employees and other persons. — Report, although issued by the county, was not admissible under the public record exception to the hearsay rule since the report was merely a compilation of opinions by various private parties and unnamed public employees and stated only that its purpose was to present recommendations regarding a sanitary land-fill question; it did not purport to be, nor was any evidence admitted to indicate that the report was, an expression or declaration of county policy or that the report's contents had been adopted, endorsed, or otherwise approved by the county. United Waste, Ltd. v. Fulton County, 184 Ga. App. 694, 362 S.E.2d 476 (1987).

Witness's testimony of what the witness figures written on a slip of paper by a loan officer meant is hearsay, as the witness did not create the writing. Rodgers v. Cumberland Volkswagen, Inc., 167 Ga. App. 826, 307 S.E.2d 721 (1983).

Billing records are generally admissible evidence after testimony providing the proper foundation pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1. Rowan v. Reuss, 246 Ga. App. 139, 539 S.E.2d 241 (2000).

Hospital records admitted to rebut earlier testimony. — In a medical malpractice action, when hospital records were admitted not for the purpose of proving that the diagnosis contained in the records was the correct one, but to counter the incorrect impression made on cross-examination of the plaintiff's expert that a notation appeared nowhere in the medical chart, any error in the allowance of these exhibits was harmless. Doctors Hosp. v. Bonner, 195 Ga. App. 152, 392 S.E.2d 897 (1990).

Affidavits based on business records inadmissible. — As the affidavits of an assignee's chief financial officer (CFO) showed that the CFO's knowledge of the facts sworn to was based on the CFO's review of the attached business records and not personal knowledge, the affidavits were inadmissible hearsay. Nyankojo v. North Star Capital Acquisition, 298 Ga. App. 6, 679 S.E.2d 57 (2009).

Victim's ministry ordination certificates. — Because the trial court's admission of prejudicial hearsay testimony regarding the victim's ministry ordination certificates was harmless error, given the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, a voluntary manslaughter conviction, as a lesser-included offense of murder, was upheld on appeal. Smith v. State, 283 Ga. App. 722, 642 S.E.2d 399 (2007).

4. Conversations

Testimony of one person to a conversation had with another person over the telephone, in which the person testifying did not know the other person, or recognize the other's voice, and that person's identity is not established otherwise than from what was said in the conversation itself, is hearsay and inadmissible, when the person sought to be bound thereby as the other party to the conversation is not shown to have admitted having such conversation, and testified positively to the contrary. Greble v. Morgan, 69 Ga. App. 641, 26 S.E.2d 494 (1943).

Testimony of the victim's close friend regarding a conversation with the victim on the telephone immediately before defendant killed the victim was admissible. Fetty v. State, 268 Ga. 365, 489 S.E.2d 813 (1997).

Testimony of a witness as to a conversation with two men who visited the witness in jail would be hearsay and inadmissible as evidence. Ratcliff v. State, 237 Ga. 496, 228 S.E.2d 879 (1976).

Casually rendered statement by deceased victim. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in excluding a statement by a deceased victim to a coworker made after the victim, returning from a lunch break, "just nonchalantly walked in and was talking to the witness." Gissendaner v. State, 272 Ga. 704, 532 S.E.2d 677 (2000).

Statement overheard by juror. — When a foreman's affidavit is submitted to prove that a "third person" made a prejudicial statement which a juror overheard, the affidavit is inadmissible as hearsay. Central of Ga. R.R. v. Nash, 150 Ga. App. 68, 256 S.E.2d 619, cert. dismissed, 244 Ga. 495, 260 S.E.2d 909 (1979).

Conversation deputy had with defendant spouse. — Even assuming the trial court erred by allowing a deputy sheriff to testify about a conversation the deputy had with defendant's spouse after defendant's spouse refused to testify at defendant's trial on a charge of possession of marijuana to prove that marijuana found in defendant's home belonged to defendant, the error was harmless because testimony which showed that defendant provided police with a urine sample that tested positive for marijuana metabolites was sufficient, in and of itself, to sustain defendant's conviction. Cargile v. State, 261 Ga. App. 319, 582 S.E.2d 473 (2003).

Statement in an affidavit. — An affidavit that contained a statement by the owner of several building material suppliers that the owner asked the suppliers' credit manager to obtain a personal guaranty on a line of credit extended to a builder constituted hearsay that could not be used in opposition to a motion for summary judgment filed by the builder's former president regarding the guaranty. Atlanta Glass, Inc. v. Tucker, 291 Ga. App. 760, 663 S.E.2d 272 (2008).

E-mail conversations. — In a deprivation proceeding when the Department of Family and Child Services sought to extend the department's custody of a child, the trial court was presumed to have ignored an e-mail recommending that the child remain with the child's father to the extent that the e-mail contained hearsay. Even without the e-mail, ample evidence supported the trial court's decision to extend the deprivation order. In the Interest of Q.H., 291 Ga. App. 598, 662 S.E.2d 358 (2008).

Conversation with police inadmissible when defendant chose not to testify. — As a defendant and the defendant's spouse chose not to testify in the defendant's trial for, inter alia, felony murder, defense counsel could not comment in closing argument on the existence of statements made by both to the police to try to raise an inference of accident as those statements were inadmissible hearsay. Alexander v. State, 285 Ga. 9, 673 S.E.2d 208 (2009).

5. Criminal Cases

Testimony of a police officer as to a witness's verbal identification or physical gesture pointing out a suspect in a police line-up is inadmissible hearsay evidence if the witness is present and available to testify. Brown v. State, 234 Ga. 632, 217 S.E.2d 150 (1975).

Victim's statement made within minutes of a crime to a police officer was admissible as part of the res gestae, under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3, including the fact that the victim recognized one of the perpetrators of the crime as the defendant. Inman v. State, 281 Ga. 67, 635 S.E.2d 125 (2006), cert. denied, U.S. , 128 S. Ct. 42; 169 L. Ed. 2d 40 (2007).

When a robbery victim testified at trial about the description the victim gave of the robber to police and was subject to cross-examination, this testimony was not hearsay. Although a police officer also testified about the description, that evidence was cumulative of the victim's testimony. Smashum v. State, 293 Ga. App. 41, 666 S.E.2d 549 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 952 (Ga. 2008).

Testimony of police officer as to statement of defendant's husband. — Testimony of a police officer that when defendant and her husband entered the sheriff's office, in response to the officer's question whether he could help them, the husband stated in defendant's presence that defendant had killed her niece was admissible from necessity because the husband had claimed the marital privilege and because the husband gave the statement immediately upon meeting the officer and never sought to change it. Luallen v. State, 266 Ga. 174, 465 S.E.2d 672 (1996). But see Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

5. Criminal Cases (Cont'd)

Testimony of officer. — Defendant's conviction of sexual assault against a person in custody, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5.1(c)(1)(A), was supported by sufficient evidence because the evidence showed that defendant used defendant's position as a police officer to induce the victim to have sex with the defendant, and consent of the victim was not a defense to prosecution, O.C.G.A. § 16-6-5.1(c)(3). Furthermore, although the trial court erred in admitting hearsay evidence pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1 to explain a detective's conduct in investigating the case, it was highly probable that the testimony did not contribute to the verdict. Krauss v. State, 263 Ga. App. 488, 588 S.E.2d 239 (2003).

Trial court erred in admitting hearsay testimony from two police officers as to their investigation of a murder as nothing necessitated an inquiry by the state into the conduct, motive, or mental processes of the investigating officers; however, the error was harmless in light of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Lewis v. State, 279 Ga. 69, 608 S.E.2d 602, cert. denied, 546 U.S. 987, 126 S. Ct. 571, 163 L. Ed. 2d 478 (2005).

Officer's testimony as to pretrial identifications by two witnesses who did not appear at trial was inadmissible hearsay; however, the error was harmless because the testimony was merely cumulative of legally admissible evidence provided by a third witness. Wyche v. State, 291 Ga. App. 165, 661 S.E.2d 226 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 914 (Ga. 2008).

Trial court did not err in admitting a detective's testimony that there were two knives recovered from the scene of a robbery because the detective's testimony that the detective personally observed two knives at the police station was not hearsay, and, even assuming that the trial court erred in admitting the testimony, the testimony's admission was harmless; the objectionable testimony was cumulative of the detective's admissible testimony regarding the detective's own observation of the two knives and of a codefendant's testimony that the codefendant and the defendant both wielded knives during the attempted robbery, and there was overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, including the testimony of the victim, the codefendant's testimony about the defendant's involvement in the robbery, and the fact that the defendant was apprehended immediately after the robbery, in the same area. Marcia-Hernandez v. State, 302 Ga. App. 93, 690 S.E.2d 236 (2010).

Testimony of defendant's wife. — Statements by the defendant's wife to the police were admissible under the necessity exception since, on the day of the murder at issue, the wife described the defendant's threatening behavior and the bloody condition of their apartment, but claimed the marital privilege at trial. Perkins v. State, 269 Ga. 791, 505 S.E.2d 16 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1118, 119 S. Ct. 1768, 143 L. Ed. 2d 798 (1999).

In a prosecution for family violence battery, when defendant's wife, the victim, refused to testify, her statements to the police within minutes of her injuries were admissible. Kwon v. State, 238 Ga. App. 617, 517 S.E.2d 83 (1999).

Testimony of victim who invoked marital privilege at trial. — When the only witness to the crime was the victim, who was the defendant's wife, and she invoked the marital privilege at trial, her prior verbal and written statements made to the arresting officer shortly after the defendant's arrest were admissible under the necessity exception. Sorrow v. State, 234 Ga. App. 357, 505 S.E.2d 842 (1998), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 811, 120 S. Ct. 44, 145 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1999).

Testimony of absent victim. — Statement from the victim of defendant's prior offense was allowed to be read into evidence since the victim could not be located, and the prosecutor provided documentation of the reasonable efforts made to locate the victim. Smalls v. State, 251 Ga. App. 516, 554 S.E.2d 273 (2001).

Although the court erred by admitting the victim's mother's hearsay testimony that the victim told the mother that the victim was going to a club with a coworker, under the necessity exception, the testimony was cumulative; the fact that defendant accompanied the victim to a club was established by the testimony of defendant's girlfriend that defendant told the girlfriend that defendant went to a club with a man who had drugged and robbed defendant, and that defendant had killed the man and left the victim in the victim's car in the local elementary school parking lot. Belmar v. State, 279 Ga. 795, 621 S.E.2d 441 (2005).

Trial court did not err in admitting hearsay statements made by the victim under the necessity exception, finding that the victim was unavailable, the statements were trustworthy, and the statements were made in confidence to the victim's parent. Buttram v. State, 280 Ga. 595, 631 S.E.2d 642 (2006).

Testimony as to statements of third persons. — In a prosecution for rape, the trial court properly barred defendant's cross-examination of a police officer about whether the victim's stepfather told the officer that someone had told the stepfather that the victim was pregnant. Lee v. State, 241 Ga. App. 182, 525 S.E.2d 426 (1999).

Hearsay statement made by a neighbor to the police that a friend admitted to shooting the victim using defendant's gun without defendant's knowledge was inadmissible under the necessity exception; although the neighbor was unavailable because the neighbor had moved away from Georgia, the statement by the friend lacked trustworthiness because it was made more than four months after the shooting while both the friend and neighbor were on drugs. Bragg v. State, 279 Ga. 156, 611 S.E.2d 17 (2005).

Defendant was not allowed to use the defense counsel's testimony about what an uncalled witness had been expected to say in order to establish the truth of that uncalled witness's testimony, since such testimony was hearsay with no probative value; because the defendant did not call a witness at the motion for new trial hearing or present a legally acceptable substitute for the witness's direct testimony, it was impossible for the defendant to show there was reasonable probability that the results of the proceeding would have been different, and defendant's claim of ineffective assistance of counsel failed.

Testimony of defendant's employer as to statements of an unidentified person from a service station who had called the employer to demand payment of a check after the employer stopped payment on the check was inadmissible hearsay and had no probative value. Archer v. State, 291 Ga. App. 175, 661 S.E.2d 230 (2008).

Even if an officer's testimony that an unavailable codefendant had identified the defendant as "Paco" was hearsay, the testimony did not amount to a pretrial identification of the defendant as the perpetrator of the crime. The testimony merely established that the officer believed that a person known as "Paco" lived at an address where the officer decided to conduct a search. Melendez v. State, 291 Ga. App. 402, 662 S.E.2d 183 (2008).

Trial court did not err when it declined to admit hearsay after finding that the party seeking to use the hearsay had not made the necessary proffer because, although defense counsel asserted that the persons who would testify to the utterances purportedly made by the victims were friends of the victims who reported the utterances to police shortly after the victims were killed, such a presentation was insufficient to authorize the admission of hearsay pursuant to the necessity exception found in O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b) since there was no showing of the required special relationship between the deceased declarants and the proffered witnesses. Coleman v. State, 286 Ga. 291, 687 S.E.2d 427 (2009).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to allow testimony under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b), that the victim had told her sister that her neighbor had raped her several months prior to her murder because the hearsay testimony was not proper impeachment evidence when it was not relevant to the crimes for which the defendant was on trial, and it was also not relevant to the neighbor's motive or interest in testifying; although the victim, the declarant, was deceased and unavailable, the defendant failed to prove that the hearsay testimony was relevant to and probative of a material fact since the alleged rape occurred several months prior to the victim's murder, there was no evidence connecting either the rape or the neighbor to it, and even assuming the proffered testimony's trustworthiness, the fact that the neighbor had raped the victim in the past did not directly connect him to the victim's murder or show that he committed the murder or a similar crime. Arrington v. State, 286 Ga. 335, 687 S.E.2d 438 (2009).

Language conduit rule. — Use of a translator between the defendant and a witness did not render the witness's testimony about the substance of the translation inadmissible, pursuant to the language conduit rule, as no evidence was presented to the trial court to show that the translator had a motive to distort the translation. Lopez v. State, 281 Ga. App. 623, 636 S.E.2d 770 (2006).

Statements not offered for truth of matter asserted. — Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel as: (1) a hearsay objection to statements the defendant made during an argument and to testimony that the defendant stated that the defendant should have killed the other witnesses would have been futile as the statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted; (2) a hearsay objection to a witness's testimony as to the defendant's statements during a van ride would also have been futile as the statements were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3; and (3) counsel's strategic decision to attack certain testimony through cross-examination was not ineffective assistance of counsel. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. 229, 637 S.E.2d 393 (2006).

Testimony of unavailable witness. — Witness's statements to a police officer were properly admitted under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule to counter defendant's claim that no person who had been shot could have traveled from the crime scene to the nursing home in the time available, as the findings that the witness was unavailable, that the state made diligent efforts to locate the witness, and that the witness's statements had sufficient indicia of reliability were not clearly erroneous. Porter v. State, 275 Ga. App. 513, 621 S.E.2d 523 (2005).

Admission of a first witness's statement and audiotaped interview under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule violated the confrontation clause, but the error was harmless as: (1) the jury was properly instructed on attempted impeachment; (2) the fact that a second witness told a police officer that the second witness knew nothing about the motel murder was not inconsistent with the second witness's testimony that the defendant said the defendant had killed a person; (3) although a third witness testified that the events related in the third witness's videotaped interview were fabricated, there was considerable reason not to credit that portion of the third witness's testimony; (4) additional evidence demonstrated the defendant's guilt and corroborated the evidence that was the subject of the attempted impeachment; and (5) the defendant's claim that the jury could have taken the first witness's audiotape as corroboration of the "impeached" testimony was rejected. Richard v. State, 281 Ga. 401, 637 S.E.2d 406 (2006).

Testimony of defendant's mother. — Even assuming the statements of the defendant's mother were admissible under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b), the statements' exclusion was harmless error as the statements were cumulative of other evidence admitted at trial, making it highly probable that the statements' exclusion did not affect the verdict. Nix v. State, 280 Ga. 141, 625 S.E.2d 746 (2006).

Statements attributed to defendant's family members. — Because the trial court properly found that testimony tending to show that the defendant's daughter possessed the methamphetamine the defendant was charged with possessing was hearsay, and testimony from the defendant's grandson was irrelevant, the defendant's conviction for possession was affirmed on appeal. Corbin v. State, 287 Ga. App. 194, 651 S.E.2d 101 (2007).

Third party statements of guilt not admissible in favor of accused. — Statements by a third party to the effect that the third party, and not the accused, was the actual perpetrator of the offense, are not admissible in favor of the accused upon the accused's trial. Bryant v. State, 197 Ga. 641, 30 S.E.2d 259 (1944); Hornbuckle v. State, 76 Ga. App. 111, 45 S.E.2d 98 (1947); Little v. Synchroncombe, 227 Ga. 311, 180 S.E.2d 541 (1971).

In a trial for larceny where the prosecution was relying upon the recent possession of the stolen property in the defendant to establish the crime and the evidence disclosed that on each occasion when the defendant was seen with the property another person not charged with the property's theft was also with the property, testimony of witnesses on behalf of defendant to the effect that the witnesses had heard such other person make statements claiming the property, the property's possession and the right to so possess the property, was properly excluded as hearsay. Hornbuckle v. State, 76 Ga. App. 111, 45 S.E.2d 98 (1947).

Since a co-indictee did not testify, the defendant's uncle's recitation of the co-indictee's purported confession would fall squarely within the hearsay rule (O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-1 and 24-3-52) and was not admissible pursuant to any hearsay exception. Gardner v. State, 263 Ga. 197, 429 S.E.2d 657 (1993).

Out-of-court statement of close friend of defendant was not admissible under the necessity exception since there was no indicia of reliability and the statement lacked any spontaneity or timeliness. Atwater v. State, 233 Ga. App. 339, 503 S.E.2d 919 (1998).

Employees' testimony in shoplifting prosecution of being instructed to "watch out for" defendants was relevant and material to show the conduct of the employees in watching defendants and calling the police, and was not inadmissible because it may have incidentally put defendant's character in issue. Jenkins v. State, 172 Ga. App. 715, 324 S.E.2d 491 (1984).

Statements of confidential informant. — When no evidence of a confidential informant's trustworthiness was established, and in light of the very circumstances surrounding the informant's cooperation with the police, the informant's statements did not constitute probative evidence of defendant's possession of narcotics under the res gestae doctrine because it could not be said that such statements were free from all suspicion of device, or even that the statements were spontaneous in nature. Hammond v. State, 220 Ga. App. 760, 470 S.E.2d 302 (1996).

Informant's written statement to an attorney made two weeks after defendant's arraignment was insufficiently trustworthy to be admissible under the "necessity" exception. Nelson v. State, 226 Ga. App. 93, 485 S.E.2d 582 (1997).

Defendant's probation was improperly revoked because the defendant's alleged trafficking in cocaine had not been established by a preponderance of the evidence as required by O.C.G.A. § 42-8-34.1(b). An informant's hearsay statements were not competent to show the defendant arranged a drug sale, and no evidence connected the defendant with cocaine found in a house where the informant said the sale was to occur. Brown v. State, 294 Ga. App. 1, 668 S.E.2d 490 (2008).

Testimony regarding statements by prior rape victims. — Police officer's testimony concerning statements made by defendant's prior rape victims was admissible as an exception to the general hearsay rule since defendant's guilty pleas to those prior offenses waived defendant's earlier opportunity to cross-examine the victims when the victims made the complaints against the defendant. Moore v. State, 207 Ga. App. 412, 427 S.E.2d 779 (1993).

Statements by deceased victim to lover. — In a prosecution for murder, it was error for the court to permit the introduction into evidence of statements made by the victim to her lover about the defendant (her husband) since they did not possess the requisite indicia of reliability; a married person's complaints about that person's spouse, made to one with whom the married person is conducting an adulterous affair, are subject to the possibility of exaggeration if not outright falsehood. Azizi v. State, 270 Ga. 709, 512 S.E.2d 622 (1999).

Trial court did not improperly allow the victim's girlfriend to testify about certain statements uttered by the victim concerning the defendant's personality and demeanor as: (1) the declarant-victim died and was thus unavailable; (2) the statements were relevant to the defendant's relationship with the victim, and the defendant's apparent motive, pattern of conduct, and opportunity to commit the crimes; and (3) the statements had particular guarantees of trustworthiness because of the close relationship between the victim and the defendant. Lyons v. State, 282 Ga. 588, 652 S.E.2d 525 (2007), overruled on other grounds, Garza v. State, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 865 (Ga. 2008).

Application and Examples (Cont'd)5. Criminal Cases (Cont'd)

Statement by deceased victim to fiancé. — Trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of the victim's fiancé that the victim had told her about his desire for a restraining order against the defendant and about a prior difficulty with the defendant earlier on the day of the shooting because the victim was unavailable due to his murder, the statements were relevant to material facts and more probative thereof than other available evidence, and the statements had particular guarantees of trustworthiness because the victim and the fiancé had been living together for over a year and had a very close relationship; in light of the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's involvement in the crimes, it was highly probable that the admission of the contested testimony did not contribute to the verdicts, and, therefore, any error in admitting the statements was not harmful. McIlwain v. State, No. S10A0068, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 318 (Apr. 19, 2010).

Victim's statements to a divorce attorney regarding the victim's spouse's violence were not admissible since there was insufficient indicia of reliability to admit the statements under the necessity exception. Dix v. State, 267 Ga. 429, 479 S.E.2d 739 (1997).

Admission of an audio tape of an out-of-court interview of the defendant's wife under the necessity exception to the bar against hearsay testimony, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b), violated the confrontation clause of U.S. Const., amend. 6 however, the content of the wife's speech was barely discernible on the tape, and, to the extent that the tape was audible, the wife's statements were cumulative of other testimony, so there was no reasonable possibility that the tape contributed to the convictions, and the error in admitting the tape was harmless. Daniels v. State, 280 Ga. 349, 628 S.E.2d 110 (2006).

Testimony regarding statement by defendant's former spouse. — Georgia Bureau of Investigation agent's testimony regarding a statement by defendant's former spouse implicating defendant in a killing was admissible as an exception to the general hearsay rule, since the former spouse remarried defendant before refusing to testify at defendant's trial, and there was a "necessity" that the finder of fact be acquainted with the statement of the only eyewitness to the homicide. Higgs v. State, 256 Ga. 606, 351 S.E.2d 448 (1987); Wallace v. State, 216 Ga. App. 718, 455 S.E.2d 615 (1995).

Testimony of mother of child-victim was not admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 as to talk uttered by the child in the child's sleep in trial for aggravated sodomy. Godfrey v. State, 258 Ga. 28, 365 S.E.2d 93 (1987). But see 187 Ga. App. 319, 370 S.E.2d 183 (1988) (on remand, holding such testimony admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1).

Testimony of supposed drug purchaser. — Officer's testimony that witness told the officer that defendant had sold the witness drugs was hearsay, which violated defendant's right to a fair trial; because evidence against defendant was not overwhelming, admission of the evidence was not harmless error. Welch v. State, 231 Ga. App. 74, 498 S.E.2d 555 (1998).

Investigator's testimony not original evidence of alibi. — Investigator's testimony that defendant gave a purported alibi was not original evidence as to the fact of alibi and insofar as it established the fact of alibi, the evidence did not derive any value from the witness, but derived its value solely on the veracity and competency of defendant who never testified. Therefore, although such evidence is not hearsay, it nevertheless does not qualify as even "slight" evidence of an affirmative defense so as to require a charge on alibi. Hartley v. State, 207 Ga. App. 683, 428 S.E.2d 683 (1993).

Investigator testifying as expert. — In an aggravated assault case, it was permissible for an investigator, testifying as an expert, to state that based on the investigator's experience, persons who suffered from cuts or stab wounds often did not remember being stabbed. This was a conclusion that was beyond the ken of the average layperson; even if the investigator's testimony was somewhat based upon hearsay, the opinion was mainly derived from the investigator's many years of professional experience. Jackson v. State, 291 Ga. App. 287, 661 S.E.2d 665 (2008).

Self-serving statement by nontestifying defendant. — Testimony that a burglary defendant had stated that the defendant was "looking for a place to sleep" was self-serving inadmissible hearsay; the statement could be construed to mean that the defendant did not have the intent to commit burglary, and the defendant had not testified. Griffith v. State, 286 Ga. App. 859, 650 S.E.2d 413 (2007).

Statement to show defendant's motive. — Evidence was properly admitted by the trial court in defendant's trial for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 since statements of a witness that another screamed for help when the witness saw the victim and defendant fighting were part of the res gestae exception to hearsay pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3. Statements by a witness that defendant was ordered to leave the premises were not hearsay under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1 because the statements were used to explain defendant's motive and conduct of remaining on the premises and waiting for the victim pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2, and statements regarding information from a police report which was not admitted into evidence were deemed harmless as cumulative. Regardless, there was sufficient evidence without the disputed evidentiary rulings to support defendant's conviction based on observations of several witnesses and the cuts on the victim's face and body. Kelley v. State, 260 Ga. App. 238, 581 S.E.2d 584 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting a victim's statements to the victim's close friends as to defendant's threats against the victim, defendant's physical and mental abuse, and other difficulties under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule as the victim was dead, the statements were relevant to defendant's intent, motive, and state of mind, and the statements had particularized guarantees of trustworthiness. Watson v. State, 278 Ga. 763, 604 S.E.2d 804 (2004).

Trial court did not err by allowing the victim's parent to testify that the victim told the parent that the defendant had threatened to kill the victim if the victim sought a divorce under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule as: (1) the victim was the declarant; (2) the victim was unavailable because the victim had been murdered; (3) the victim's statement was uniquely relevant to show the defendant's motive, intent, and bent of mind; and (4) the victim's statement was trustworthy because the victim made the statement while confiding in the victim's parent. Thomason v. State, 281 Ga. 429, 637 S.E.2d 639 (2006).

Prior inconsistent statement. — Given that a hearsay witness disavowed a prior inconsistent statement, the trial court did not err in admitting the statement as substantive evidence of the fact that defendant and a codefendant acted in concert to commit an armed robbery. Claritt v. State, 280 Ga. App. 384, 634 S.E.2d 81 (2006).

Certificate of drug analysis authorized under former O.C.G.A. § 35-3-16 did not fit within any statutorily recognized hearsay exception. Miller v. State, 266 Ga. 850, 472 S.E.2d 74 (1996).

Police reports. — In defendant's trial for multiple offenses, including possessing methamphetamine, the trial court properly refused to let defendant, who proceeded pro se, enter into evidence a police report concerning a drug raid because the report was offered for the truth of the matter asserted, namely, when the raid had occurred. Bridges v. State, 263 Ga. App. 849, 589 S.E.2d 616 (2003).

Defendant's claim that an investigator employed by the district attorney was bound by the ethical and legal standards that prohibited the district attorney from testifying before the grand jury was rejected as an agent could not delegate the agent's authority unless specifically empowered to do so and as the discretionary powers conferred upon public agents could not be delegated without authorization; further, an unlicensed individual could not practice law and a witness could not testify to hearsay other than in specified cases. Hall v. State, 273 Ga. App. 203, 614 S.E.2d 844 (2005).

Victim's statements to officers. — To the extent that evidence contested by defendant consisted of out-of-court statements that the victim made to officers during investigations of complaints made by the victim, it was inadmissible hearsay; however, a Crawford violation was harmless since the hearsay was cumulative of other admissible evidence, and since there was such additional admissible evidence, including the testimony of friends recounting what the victim said about the difficulties with defendant, which statements were admissible under the necessity exception, any error was harmless. Chapman v. State, 280 Ga. 560, 629 S.E.2d 220 (2006).

5. Criminal Cases (Cont'd)

Medical records. — Forensic pediatrician who examined a battered infant was properly allowed to testify about seizures noted in the baby's medical records, and about a radiologist's report that confirmed suspicions about the extent of an injury because the pediatrician's opinion was not based solely on those records, but also on an examination of the baby. Nichols v. State, 278 Ga. App. 46, 628 S.E.2d 131 (2006).

No error in excluding experts' affidavits. — Trial court did not err by denying a defendant's request to admit testimony regarding the contents of affidavits used, in part, by the defendant's expert witnesses as the basis for the experts' opinions regarding the defendant's mental status as, in applying O.C.G.A. § 24-9-67.1, the trial court first found that the facts contained in the disputed affidavits were otherwise inadmissible hearsay, as the facts rested on the veracity and competency of persons not in court and did not come within any statutorily-recognized hearsay exception. The trial court then balanced the probative value of the affidavits against the prejudicial effect, noting that the affidavits were originally submitted in the defendant's habeas proceeding, contained identical language thereby casting suspicion on the affidavits' trustworthiness, contained conclusory statements and irrelevant and prejudicial information related to the defendant's alleged alcohol and drug use and the crime of murder for which the defendant was convicted; and, therefore, the affidavits had little probative information and were cumulative of other evidence. Rogers v. State, 282 Ga. 659, 653 S.E.2d 31 (2007), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 1311, 128 S. Ct. 1882, 170 L. Ed. 2d 747; reh'g denied, U.S. , 128 S. Ct. 2988, 171 L. Ed. 2d 907 (2008).

Evidence lacked reliability. — Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by excluding from the evidence an out-of-court statement by one of the men convicted for the home invasion and a letter from another man who was convicted of the home invasion because the statement and the letter lacked any indicia of reliability. Thus, the defendant was not entitled to introduce the evidence under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b). Pope v. State, 266 Ga. App. 658, 598 S.E.2d 48 (2004).

Overwhelming evidence of guilt made deputy's improper testimony harmless. — With regard to charge of first-degree forgery and charge of identity fraud involving checks taken from the company checkbook of defendant's employer, deputy's improper hearsay testimony that driver's license number written on the checks matched defendant's driver's license number was harmless error given the overwhelming evidence of guilt, including all of the stolen checks having been made payable to defendant by someone other than employer, defendant's endorsement appearing on all of the checks, and defendant's image captured on a bank security camera cashing one check. Archer v. State, 291 Ga. App. 175, 661 S.E.2d 230 (2008).

Evidence admissible under necessity exception. — Hearsay statements were admissible under the necessity exception despite the fact that some of the statements were made during the pendency of separations or a divorce action; the statements were made over a 10-year period and many of the statements were not made during the separations or the divorce action. Watson v. State, 278 Ga. 763, 604 S.E.2d 804 (2004).

Any error in admitting a victim's statements to a deputy responding to a 9-1-1 call under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule was harmless as the hearsay portion of the deputy's testimony consisted of no more than two sentences, was cumulative of the other properly admitted evidence, and did not go to the core issue of the case. Watson v. State, 278 Ga. 763, 604 S.E.2d 804 (2004).

In a defendant's prosecution for malice murder and cruelty to children, testimony by the five-year-old victim's grandmother as to prior difficulties between the victim and the defendant, including a statement by the victim to the grandmother that the defendant had hit the victim in the stomach on the day prior to the fatal incident, was properly admitted under the necessity exception as the grandmother took care of the victim on a regular basis and was concerned for the victim's welfare. Wright v. State, 285 Ga. 57, 673 S.E.2d 249 (2009).

6. Deceased Persons

Materiality and probative value. — Death or unavailability of the declarant cannot alone satisfy the necessity component without allowing the exception to swallow the rule; additionally, the proponent of the evidence must show that the statement is relevant to a material fact and that the statement is more probative on that material fact than other evidence that may be procured and offered. Chapel v. State, 270 Ga. 151, 510 S.E.2d 802 (1998).

Declarations of persons since deceased must be trustworthy before the declarations are admissible under the rule of necessity, and self-serving declarations are not admissible. Chrysler Motors Corp. v. Davis, 226 Ga. 221, 173 S.E.2d 691 (1970).

Mere fact that a witness is dead does not render the declarations admissible, although, if in addition to the death of a witness there are circumstances which attribute verity to the witness's declarations, the hearsay rule may be relaxed to permit the admission of such declaration. Irby v. Brooks, 246 Ga. 794, 273 S.E.2d 183 (1980), overruled on other grounds, Swain v. Citizens & S. Bank, 258 Ga. 547, 372 S.E.2d 423 (1988).

Testimony by a friend of the victim, that the victim planned to meet with defendant, was not sufficiently trustworthy to be admissible under the "necessity" exception to the hearsay rule in light of the fact that the victim made a contradictory statement to the victim's son as to where the victim was going on the night the victim was killed. State v. Mallory, 261 Ga. 625, 409 S.E.2d 839 (1991). But see Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

Decedent's declaration, when coupled with circumstances which attribute verity to the decedent's declaration, is admissible. White v. White, 262 Ga. 168, 415 S.E.2d 467 (1992). But see Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

Wife's statements prior to her death respecting an alleged affair between the wife and her priest were not admissible under the necessity exception to hearsay rule or as a declaration against interest because there was no judiciousness of trustworthiness and the statements lacked reliability. Boehm v. Abi-Sarkis, 211 Ga. App. 181, 438 S.E.2d 410 (1993).

Mere fact that a witness is dead does not render the witness's declarations admissible, but if the statement was made in circumstances in which it is unlikely to have been untrue, it meets the threshold trustworthiness standard. Lewis v. Emory Univ., 235 Ga. App. 811, 509 S.E.2d 635 (1998).

When a witness who died prior to trial was the only person who had conducted a medical procedure on the deceased and was in the best position to know how easy the procedure was, and where there was no evidence that the witness's statements against the interests of the witness's employer, made to professional colleagues in the course of their professional work, were self-serving, calculated to benefit the deceased, or untruthful, the witness's statements were admissible to counter the recollections of others on the scene and of defendant's experts. Lewis v. Emory Univ., 235 Ga. App. 811, 509 S.E.2d 635 (1998).

Requirement of particularized guarantees of trustworthiness has not been met as to witnesses who had known the deceased victim for only a short time before the deceased began confiding in them about the problems in the marriage to defendant. Slakman v. State, 272 Ga. 662, 533 S.E.2d 383 (2000).

Fact that the statement of the deceased benefits the witness purporting to hear the statement and offering the statement as evidence is not a factor in determining the trustworthiness of the statement for admissibility purposes. Also, statements favorable to the interest of the declarant are not admissible in evidence as proof of the facts asserted, and the subsequent death of the declarant does not change this rule. Dodd v. Scott, 250 Ga. App. 32, 550 S.E.2d 444 (2001).

Trial court did not err in admitting a friend's testimony as to the statements the murder victim made to the friend about the murder victim's relationship with defendant and the way defendant treated the murder victim since sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness existed to warrant admission of that testimony; the evidence showed that the friend and the murder victim worked together for a year and that the murder victim confided in the friend on a daily basis about the details of the murder victim's relationship with defendant, and, thus, the testimony was admissible under the necessity exception to the rule prohibiting hearsay evidence because the declarant was deceased and the testimony was more probative on the issues of motive and intent than other evidence offered at trial. Brinson v. State, 276 Ga. 671, 581 S.E.2d 548 (2003).

Trial court did not err in admitting the testimony of a long-time friend of the deceased wife about prior difficulties between the deceased wife and defendant as such testimony was admissible under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule; the deceased wife was unavailable, the testimony contained particular guarantees of trustworthiness, and the testimony was relevant to the relationship between the deceased wife and defendant, and was more probative of that than other evidence that could be procured and offered. Rowe v. State, 276 Ga. 800, 582 S.E.2d 119 (2003).

Because the U.S. Supreme Court case of Crawford had not yet been decided when defendant's criminal trial was held, defendant's counsel could not have been deemed ineffective under U.S. Const., amend. 6 for failing to anticipate a change in the law and make such an argument with respect to the admissibility of a deceased witness's statement; rather, the statement was properly admitted under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b), as there was no indication that the statement was not accompanied by indicia of reliability, and in any event, admission thereof was harmless because the statement was cumulative of other evidence admitted in the trial. Redwine v. State, 280 Ga. 58, 623 S.E.2d 485 (2005).

Decedent's declarations are admissible if there are no other witnesses. — Declarations of a decedent, or where there is equivalent unavailability of the declarant, to whomsoever made are admissible in evidence if there are no other witnesses to the alleged occurrence. "Other witnesses" within the meaning of this rule would include eyewitnesses, whether favorable or unfavorable to the party offering the evidence, but would exclude those who merely testify that they did not see the alleged occurrence. Moore v. Atlanta Transit Sys., 105 Ga. App. 70, 123 S.E.2d 693 (1961). For comment, see 14 Mercer L. Rev. 445 (1963).

Statement of deceased victim admitted. — Statements made by a victim concerning a prior incident when the defendant allegedly kidnapped the victim, now not available due to her death allegedly due to the defendant, were admissible as trustworthy because the victim made the statements within hours of being released, and because the statements were made during the course of an official investigation. While the victim decided not to pursue charges, the victim never disavowed the statements, or claimed the statements were inaccurate or untruthful. McKissick v. State, 263 Ga. 188, 429 S.E.2d 655 (1993). But see Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

Statements made by a deceased victim to a sister in whom the victim placed great confidence and to whom the victim turned for help with the victim's problems were trustworthy. Thus the sister's hearsay testimony was admissible. Roper v. State, 263 Ga. 201, 429 S.E.2d 668 (1993). But see Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

Testimony by a police officer concerning statements made by a deceased victim to the officer for whom the victim had worked and to whom the victim had provided information about defendant were admissible. Hayes v. State, 265 Ga. 1, 453 S.E.2d 11 (1995). But see Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

Statements of a victim to the victim's father, boyfriend, and a close friend concerning defendant's threats on the victim's life were admissible. McGee v. State, 267 Ga. 560, 480 S.E.2d 577 (1997).

Decedent's declaration to decedent's spouse that the decedent had been dropped while in the hospital was admissible under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule. Lane v. Tift County Hosp. Auth., 228 Ga. App. 554, 492 S.E.2d 317 (1997).

Admission of victim's statement made two months before the victim's death was not error since it was established that the declarant was unavailable due to death; that the declarant's statement regarding gang membership was relevant to a material fact — the motive for the shooting; and that the most probative evidence of the declarant's gang membership was the declarant's admission of that fact. Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

Evidence of statements by a deceased victim to friends was properly admitted. Abraham v. State, 271 Ga. 309, 518 S.E.2d 894 (1999).

Testimony of the victim's sister as to the victim's statements to the sister was admissible under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule. Givens v. State, 273 Ga. 818, 546 S.E.2d 509 (2001).

Statements of the victim concerning prior difficulties between the victim and defendant that were made to investigating officers shortly after the events reported by the victim were admissible. Chapman v. State, 273 Ga. 865, 548 S.E.2d 278 (2001).

Although the statements were not dying declarations, statements by the murdered victim to the victim's friends regarding death threats made by the victim's spouse carried sufficient indicia of reliability to be admissible. Morris v. State, 275 Ga. 601, 571 S.E.2d 358 (2002).

Trial court did not err in allowing a deceased witness's sister to testify, pursuant to the necessity exception to the hearsay rule, regarding statements the decedent made to the sister prior to the murder, which implicated the defendant, as the decedent was unavailable, the statements were relevant to show motive, and the statements were trustworthy because the decedent was confiding in the sister regarding a fear of being associated with the robbery defendant committed. Grimes v. State, 280 Ga. 363, 628 S.E.2d 580 (2006).

When the deceased victim was unavailable, statements the victim made which were relevant to show motive for the defendant's fatal act, made shortly before the victim's death to one to whom no reason to lie or to misrepresent existed, were properly admitted, and not hearsay; moreover, as the defendant was found guilty of involuntary manslaughter rather than murder, the admission of this testimony appeared to have been harmless. Banegas v. State, 283 Ga. App. 346, 641 S.E.2d 593 (2007).

In felony murder and robbery convictions in connection with a fatal assault upon an elderly man, even if admission of the victim's statements to a police officer, made shortly after the victim was discovered, asserting that defendant had hurt the victim and taken the victim's pistol, keys, and car was erroneous, any error in admitting these statements under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule was harmless due to the overwhelming evidence of guilt and the fact that the statements made to the police echoed those made to relatives and neighbors. Treadwell v. State, 285 Ga. 736, 684 S.E.2d 244 (2009).

Statements admitted under necessity exception. — Pretrial written statement by a victim given to a police officer when the victim identified defendant in a photographic array was admissible under the necessity exception. Ingram v. State, 233 Ga. App. 356, 504 S.E.2d 254 (1998).

Trial court did not err when the court admitted statements under the necessity exception, which were made by a victim, who subsequently died, to the victim's son and a police deputy, to the effect that the victim thought defendant, the victim's youngest son, had committed the crime. Hill v. State, 258 Ga. App. 339, 574 S.E.2d 394 (2002).

Admission of statements made by the defendant's cousin prior to the cousin's murder were proper under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b) because the statements indicated that the cousin was going to tell the defendant to move out of a shared apartment and the statements were probative on the issues of the defendant's motive and intent; the statements were trustworthy because the statements were made to the cousin's family members, whom the cousin confided in. Jackson v. State, 284 Ga. 826, 672 S.E.2d 640 (2009).

Statements failed to meet necessity exception. — When the prosecution asked only how long each witness had known the murder victim and whether each witness was familiar with the relationship between defendant and the victim, there was no showing of the required particularized guarantees of trustworthiness to permit admission of the hearsay statements of the victim under the necessity exception of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b); there was no testimony about the nature of the relationships between the witnesses and the victim. Mote v. State, 277 Ga. 429, 588 S.E.2d 748 (2003), cert. denied, 541 U.S. 1066, 124 S. Ct. 2395, 158 L. Ed. 2d 968 (2004).

Trial court erroneously admitted an officer's testimony regarding a statement made by one of the victims who died of natural causes prior to trial as the admission violated the defendant's right to confrontation; moreover, because the appeals court could not hold that a reasonable probability existed that the decedent's statement did not contribute to the verdict as to a second count of armed robbery, the error was not harmless and both the defendant's armed robbery convictions were reversed. Gifford v. State, 287 Ga. App. 725, 652 S.E.2d 610 (2007).

In a will contest action, the trial court did not err by refusing the challenger's proffer of having a grandchild for the decedent testify that the decedent was unaware of a change in a medical appointment as the testimony did not fit the hearsay necessity exception. The trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by finding that the alleged statement to the grandchild, who certainly had an interest in seeing that the objector, the grandchild's parent, benefited from the admission of the testimony and, therefore, the testimony lacked sufficient trustworthiness. Horton v. Hendrix, 291 Ga. App. 416, 662 S.E.2d 227 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 780 (Ga. 2008).

Statements of deceased witness admitted. — Statements of deceased witness were properly admitted out of necessity under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1. Jackson v. State, 202 Ga. App. 582, 414 S.E.2d 905, cert. denied, 202 Ga. App. 906, 414 S.E.2d 905 (1992).

Statements of a deceased juvenile made to a police detective in the course of an official investigation were admissible under the "necessity" exception to the rule against the admission of hearsay. White v. State, 268 Ga. 28, 486 S.E.2d 338 (1997).

At defendant's trial for incest and child molestation, testimony from one of defendant's daughters, which was read from a transcript from a 1985 trial at which defendant was also convicted of child molestation, was hearsay evidence properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1 based on necessity since the daughter was now deceased; there were sufficient guarantees of trustworthiness in the daughter's testimony when it was made under oath during trial and the testimony was corroborated by her sister and medical records; and the testimony was clearly relevant to and more probative than other testimony the state could present on the issue of whether defendant sexually abused and committed incest with one of defendant's daughters when she reached a certain age when it demonstrated defendant's plan, scheme, bent of mind, and course of conduct, whereby defendant would subject defendant's daughters to the defendant's acts of sexual abuse. Booth v. State, 264 Ga. App. 393, 590 S.E.2d 789 (2003).

Decedent's declarations are admissible as to cause of injury. — When death has sealed the mouth of a witness, necessity would make admissible the witness's representations to the witness's physician as to the witness's injury and its cause; it being contended that such injury was the cause of the witness's death, and there being no other witness thereto except the deceased. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Davis, 48 Ga. App. 742, 173 S.E. 471 (1934); Lathem v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co., 60 Ga. App. 523, 3 S.E.2d 916 (1939); City of Atlanta v. Crouch, 91 Ga. App. 38, 84 S.E.2d 475 (1954).

Post testamentary declarations to prove genuineness of will. — Post testamentary declarations, though the declarations may not be admissible, when standing alone, to prove or disprove the genuineness of the instrument offered for probate, are admissible in cases where the genuineness of the instrument has been assailed by other proper evidence, either to strengthen or weaken the assault. Rea v. Pursley, 170 Ga. 788, 154 S.E. 325 (1930); Heard v. Lovett, 273 Ga. 111, 538 S.E.2d 434 (2000).

Decedent's hearsay statements in support of change of beneficiary not admissible. — In an action involving the rights to proceeds of an accidental death insurance policy paid into the registry of the court by the decedent's insurer, the decedent's estate failed to create a genuine issue of material fact over whether the decedent did substantially all that the decedent could do to effect a change of beneficiary in favor of the decedent's children from a prior marriage, but could only produce hearsay evidence to support a change. Thus, the originally-designated beneficiary, the decedent's second ex-wife, was properly granted summary judgment as the sole beneficiary under the decedent's insurance policy. Stanton v. Fisher, 290 Ga. App. 274, 659 S.E.2d 692 (2008).

Decedent's declaration not admissible to show criminal defendant's motive or conduct. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1 and Momon v.

State, 249 Ga. 865, 294 S.E.2d 482 (1982) do not allow out-of-court statements made by the deceased to others to be used to ascertain the motive or the conduct of the accused. Jackson v. State, 256 Ga. 536, 350 S.E.2d 428 (1986).

Documentary evidence. — Former Georgia dead man's statute, which still applies to causes of action that arose before 1979, does not apply to documentary evidence. Thus, the rule does not affect the letters and other documents written by persons now deceased, but the rule does limit that to which affiants are competent to testify regarding statements made by defendant's agents that are now deceased. McLendon v. Georgia Kaolin Co., 782 F. Supp. 1548 (M.D. Ga. 1992).

Dual agency. — Former dead man's statute did not apply to dual agency, that is, the language in that statute referred to the agent or attorney of one of the parties to a transaction and not to the agents or attorneys of both parties. McLendon v. Georgia Kaolin Co., 782 F. Supp. 1548 (M.D. Ga. 1992).

7. Evidence from Other Trials

Transcript of the testimony of certain witnesses in another trial would not be admissible in a prosecution for perjury alleged to have been committed in such trial, to prove the truth of their testimony, since as such, it would be purely hearsay. Clackum v. State, 55 Ga. App. 44, 189 S.E. 397 (1936).

Uncertified document purportedly originating from Department of Homeland Security. — In a deprivation proceeding, it was error to admit a faxed copy of a document purportedly originating from the United States Department of Homeland Security that stated that an investigation had been initiated to determine whether the parent in question was subject to deportation. In the absence of any relevant witness testimony or documentary evidence properly certifying the record, it consisted entirely of hearsay, which lacked probative value even in a dispositional hearing. In the Interest of A. R., 296 Ga. App. 62, 673 S.E.2d 586 (2009).

8. Letters

Letter is hearsay when author not before court. — When the author of a letter is not before the court and available for cross-examination, the letter itself is incompetent as hearsay. Page v. State, 237 Ga. 20, 227 S.E.2d 8 (1976).

Letters at trial are inadmissible hearsay when their value depends upon the credibility of an out-of-court asserter, the author of the letters. Newport Timber Corp. v. Floyd, 247 Ga. 535, 277 S.E.2d 646 (1981).

Letter improperly admitted. — Admission of letter received by defendant, which was not in any way an utterance of any agent or attorney for plaintiff, was improperly admitted in evidence over objection that it was hearsay. Everitt v. Harris, 67 Ga. App. 64, 19 S.E.2d 545 (1942).

Letter properly excluded. — Trial court properly excluded a letter allegedly written by defendant's accomplice, confessing to a burglary the letter failed to fall within the necessity exception codified in O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(b) since: (1) the only evidence that the letter was written by the accomplice and was mailed and received by defendant came from the accomplice's own testimony; (2) no independent witness authenticated the letter; (3) there was no reason to conclude that the letter's contents were reliable as the accomplice and defendant were indicted for the same crime, were lovers, and the accomplice could be motivated to lie by the accomplice's feelings for defendant; (4) the fact that the accomplice refused to testify was inconsistent with a letter in which the accomplice confessed to the crime; and (5) the letter was inconsistent with the facts as a woman's menstrual pad was found in the male victim's trash can, and defendant had possession of at least one of the items stolen in the burglary. Holmes v. State, 265 Ga. App. 409, 593 S.E.2d 932 (2004).

9. Reputation

Public opinion, as to a person's insanity, is hearsay evidence. Foster v. Brooks, 6 Ga. 287 (1849).

Reputation of ownership is hearsay. — Evidence that a place has the "reputation" of belonging to a party is hearsay and inadmissible in evidence, and is without probative value when admitted without objection. Burke v. State, 54 Ga. App. 225, 187 S.E. 614 (1936).

10. Rumors

Rumors from unknown source are hearsay. — Trial court properly refused to allow a witness for the state to testify as to a rumor the witness heard from an unknown source on the grounds that it was inadmissible hearsay. Plemons v. State, 155 Ga. App. 447, 270 S.E.2d 836 (1980), overruled on other grounds, Barnes v. State, 157 Ga. App. 582, 277 S.E.2d 916 (1981).

11. Statements by PhysiciansOpinion as to cause of injury not hearsay.

— When solely on the basis of one's first-hand observation, a doctor testified that, in the doctor's opinion, the wound was made with a knife-like object, such testimony was not based upon hearsay. Bray v. State, 151 Ga. App. 428, 260 S.E.2d 383 (1979).

Opinion of unidentified doctor. — Hearsay evidence of the opinion as to the plaintiff's condition expressed by an alleged and otherwise unidentified doctor who came upon the scene of an automobile collision is inadmissible, there being no showing of the qualifications of the doctor, nor is it admissible in this case under the res gestae rule. Camp v. Ledford, 103 Ga. App. 197, 119 S.E.2d 54 (1961).

Doctor's testimony improperly admitted.

— In a personal injury case, the court erred in permitting a doctor, a witness for the plaintiff, to testify over objections of the defendants as to certain statements made to the doctor by the plaintiff and also to opinions formed from statements made to the doctor by the plaintiff because this testimony was hearsay and inadmissible. Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Clinard, 93 Ga. App. 64, 90 S.E.2d 923 (1955).

In a medical malpractice suit, the testimony of two witnesses that the plaintiff's mother did not go to the hospital because her doctor told her not to do so, neither of which witnesses heard the actual conversation, was hearsay, incompetent, and inadmissible, considering that the testimony of the mother had already been admitted to explain her conduct. Highsmith v. Fillingim, 171 Ga. App. 548, 320 S.E.2d 391 (1984).

12. Hearsay Found

Opinion as to reason for death. — In an action seeking to prevent a husband from receiving benefits under his wife's life insurance policy and from inheriting her estate on grounds that he allegedly killed his wife, the detective's testimony that an IRS agent said that in the agent's opinion her death was related to a federal tax fraud investigation and attorney's testimony that the IRS agent told the detective that the federal government was concerned that her death was linked to the investigation, were inadmissible hearsay. A memorandum in which the detective wrote that IRS agents stated it was their opinion that she died as a result of a conspiracy involving two corporations was also hearsay. Krause v. Vance, 207 Ga. App. 615, 428 S.E.2d 595 (1993).

Anonymous statement. — Trial court erred in admitting the testimony of a witness who stated that after the shooting and while talking to police officers investigating the crimes, the witness heard a member of the crowd which had gathered around the victim's residence yell at the witness to tell police that defendant was the shooter. Lindsey v. State, 271 Ga. 657, 522 S.E.2d 459 (1999).

While the trial court erred in admitting hearsay testimony regarding: (1) "leaders of the community" informing police that defendant had been selling drugs; (2) people fearing defendant and being unwilling to cooperate with police; (3) police using a drug dog to search defendant's car based on information they received about defendant transporting drugs; and (4) one of the confidential informants being unable to testify due to the informant's being sick on the day of trial, this error was harmless in light of the overwhelming evidence of defendant's guilt. Banks v. State, 270 Ga. App. 221, 606 S.E.2d 34 (2004).

Investigating officer's statement inadmissible. — In a prosecution for simple battery, the testimony of the investigating officer as to a statement by one codefendant was not admissible when two additional adult eyewitnesses were present at the defendants' home on the night of the incident. Harrison v. State, 238 Ga. App. 485, 518 S.E.2d 755 (1999).

Police investigator's hearsay statements admissible. — Because defendant was provided a full opportunity for confrontation regarding the victim's prior out-of-court statements, the trial court did not err in admitting a police investigator's hearsay evidence. Gartrell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 726, 613 S.E.2d 226 (2005).

Detective's statement meant to bolster witness testimony. — Trial court erred in permitting the detective to testify about what five witnesses told the detective, after the five witnesses testified against defendant, and in then comparing their statements to what defendant had said on the same subject in defendant's statements to police, which demonstrated inconsistencies between defendant's statements and those made by the five witnesses; the statements of the five witnesses were prior consistent statements that were inadmissible hearsay because they were offered solely to bolster their testimony in the eyes of the jury since the veracity of their testimony had not been challenged when they testified earlier in the case before the detective testified. Baugh v. State, 276 Ga. 736, 585 S.E.2d 616 (2003).

Exclusion of videotape of defendant's statement. — Trial court did not err in excluding a videotape of a statement defendant gave to a detective at the time of defendant's arrest as the statement was not offered to rebut a charge of recent fabrication, improper influence, or improper motive and was pure hearsay. Watson v. State, 278 Ga. 763, 604 S.E.2d 804 (2004).

Evidence of 9-1-1 call. — In a DUI case, it was error for the trial court to overrule the defendant's objection to a police officer's testimony as to what a 9-1-1 caller had said to the officer, but the error was harmless; the hearsay was cumulative because the officer's testimony that the defendant was asleep behind the wheel mirrored that of the caller. Hopkins v. State, 283 Ga. App. 654, 642 S.E.2d 356 (2007).

Contract issues. — Partial summary judgment pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 9-11-56 was properly granted to a labor supplier in a construction company's counterclaim alleging tortious interference with its contractual relations, based on an allegedly illegal lien filed by the supplier against a property, since no factual basis was found for the counterclaim and, accordingly, it was dismissed; it was noted that the affidavit of the administrative manager of the company contained irrelevant matter which was properly excluded under O.C.G.A. § 24-2-1, as it related to the supplier's failure to sign a lien waiver and it had no logical bearing to the material fact in issue and, further, it was found to be inadmissible hearsay under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1(a). Langley v. Nat'l Labor Group, Inc., 262 Ga. App. 749, 586 S.E.2d 418 (2003).

Trial court properly struck a paragraph in an estate executrix's affidavit in opposition to the decedent's nephew's motion for summary judgment, arising from an action regarding estate assets and joint venture agreements, as the executrix's assertions regarding a handwritten note by the husband constituted parol evidence which could not be used to alter the meaning of the unambiguous language of the agreements, and necessity was not shown for admission of the hearsay evidence, pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 13-2-2(1), 24-3-1(b), 24-6-1, and 24-6-2; accordingly, the handwritten notation that the properties at issue were to be sold for "market value" could not change the contractual language that indicated that the properties would be sold for a predetermined price. Zaglin v. Atlanta Army Navy Store, Inc., 275 Ga. App. 855, 622 S.E.2d 73 (2005).

Statement from insured on critical issues. — In an insurance case in which a jury found in favor of an insurer, which had denied property insurance coverage after a house fire to two insureds based on suspected arson, for retrial purposes, it was error to allow the insurer to elicit hearsay testimony from one of the insureds on the critical issue of whether the exterior doors of the insureds' home were locked when the firefighters arrived because the testimony was elicited to prove that the exterior doors were locked at the time of the fire. Bantz v. Allstate Ins. Co., 263 Ga. App. 855, 589 S.E.2d 621 (2003).

When an account statement summarized the invoices therein, but also listed a fee for which no supporting business record was presented, that entry was hearsay and could not be considered in determining the amount owed by the defendant. Walter R. Thomas Assocs. v. Media Dynamite, Inc., 284 Ga. App. 413, 643 S.E.2d 883 (2007).

Accident reconstruction expert report. — In a negligence action, based on a husband's visit to the accident scene where the wife was injured, despite having no formal training in accident reconstruction, the husband could testify as to the personal knowledge gained from that excursion; but, an accident reconstruction expert's report, which both parties referred to in the narrative portion of the police report, was inadmissible hearsay under the circumstances presented. Morton v. Horace Mann Ins. Co., 282 Ga. App. 734, 639 S.E.2d 352 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 201 (Ga. 2007).

Summary of a summary of a detailed report regarding a pesticide chemical was hearsay evidence and should not have been admitted in a trial filed by a personal injury plaintiff as portions of a laboratory report that contained the opinions or conclusions of a third party not before the court were inadmissible until a proper foundation was laid from the person who entered such opinions or conclusions and that person had to qualify as an expert and relate the facts upon which the entry was based; hence, the trial court also erred in allowing a defense witness to testify as to the report who was not qualified as an expert by the court. Chancey v. Peachtree Pest Control Co., 288 Ga. App. 767, 655 S.E.2d 228 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 459 (Ga. 2008).

Proof of agency. — Since there was no evidence that a principal authorized someone to act as the principal's agent, agency could not have been proven by declarations of the alleged agent, and a summary judgment affidavit describing statements made by a payee's attorney which had allegedly accelerated a note was properly excluded since the only evidence that the attorney was the payee's agent was the affidavit itself. McManus v. Turner, 266 Ga. App. 5, 596 S.E.2d 201 (2004).

Objections

1. Specificity of Objections

General rule requires that an objection to testimony point out in detail why the testimony is subject to the objection made. Jones v. State, 154 Ga. App. 806, 270 S.E.2d 201 (1980).

When general objection fails. — When an objection is made to evidence as a whole or en bloc, a part of which is not subject to the objection, the entire general objection fails. Jones v. State, 154 Ga. App. 806, 270 S.E.2d 201 (1980).

2. Admission over Objection

Illegal admission over objection requires new trial. — If, by the introduction of hearsay evidence, it is probable that the jury might have been led to believe that the jury could consider it as sufficient to establish the fact stated, then if that fact be material, and timely objection be urged, a new trial should result. Glisson v. State, 57 Ga. App. 169, 194 S.E. 877 (1938).

Illegal admission over proper objection of hearsay evidence not embraced within any of the exceptions, relating to a vital issue, as to which the other evidence is in conflict, which admission is prejudicial to the losing party, is cause for a new trial. Fuller v. State, 196 Ga. 237, 26 S.E.2d 281 (1943).

Inadmissible hearsay which is received over objection does not require a new trial if it appears that the evidence could not have affected the verdict because other evidence by a witness with immediate and personal knowledge is sufficient to establish the fact in question. Glass v. State, 235 Ga. 17, 218 S.E.2d 776 (1975).

Necessity exception satisfied to warrant admission of hearsay. — With regard to a defendant's convictions for malice murder and other crimes, the trial court did not err in admitting hearsay testimony of a witness who testified about prior difficulties between the defendant and the victim, over the hearsay objection of trial counsel, under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule; considering the totality of the circumstances, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in permitting the testimony under the necessity exception since the witness in question testified that the victim and the witness were roommates for a while, were teammates on a college track team, and had become close enough in the course of their friendship to have shared intimate details of their lives and relationships, including the witness's observations of bruises on the victim, which the victim told the witness were inflicted by the defendant. Culmer v. State, 282 Ga. 330, 647 S.E.2d 30 (2007).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Computer print-outs. — Although computer print-out sheets are generally classified as hearsay and to be admissible into evidence, computer print-outs must fall within an exception to the well-known hearsay rule, subject to the discretion of the court, computer print-out sheets or records stored in an electronic computer may be admissible into evidence when such are permanent records made in the regular course of business. 1973 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 73-91.

General Consideration

Jury instructions. — When there is no request to charge the purpose for which testimony can be considered under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2, failure to so instruct the jury does not constitute reversible error. Payne v. State, 163 Ga. App. 276, 293 S.E.2d 483 (1982).

Constitutionality

Sixth amendment right to confrontation is not denied by this statute. Kelly v. State, 241 Ga. 190, 243 S.E.2d 857 (1978); Harrell v. State, 241 Ga. 181, 243 S.E.2d 890 (1978); Anderson v. State, 247 Ga. 397, 276 S.E.2d 603 (1981) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2).

Constitutional rights not violated. — Appellant's constitutional right of cross-examination and confrontation of witnesses under U.S. Const., amend. 6 and former Code 1933, §§ 2-103, 2-105, and 2-109 (see Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Paras. I, XI, and XIV) was not violated when the court allowed as evidence the recorded radio voice transmission of the deceased victim made while proceeding to the scene of the homicide, because it was allowed only for the purpose of explaining conduct to the satisfaction of the jury and not for the purpose of proving any fact. Callahan v. State, 229 Ga. 737, 194 S.E.2d 431 (1972).

Construction

Statute is not materially different from general rule that a declaration made in connection with and as an explanation of an act is admissible as res gestae of the act. It is one of the instances when a statement standing alone would be inadmissible as hearsay, and yet be admissible when closely connected with other evidence competent in itself. Barber v. Seaboard Coast Line R.R., 372 F. Supp. 1232 (S.D. Ga. 1973), aff'd sub nom. Fullford v. Seaboard Coast Line R.R., 488 F.2d 1056 (5th Cir. 1974).

Statute is extremely broad. Dowdy v. State, 152 Ga. App. 145, 262 S.E.2d 511 (1979).

Application must be closely guarded. — Statute embodies an exception to the general rule that hearsay evidence is inadmissible, and being an exception, the application of this rule must be carefully guarded. Standard Sur. & Cas. Co. v. Johnson, 74 Ga. App. 823, 41 S.E.2d 576 (1947).

Introduction of prejudicial evidence not prohibited. — Kelly v. State, 82 Ga. 441, 9 S.E. 171 (1889) does not hold, and Arnold v. State, 236 Ga. 534, 224 S.E.2d 386 (1976) should not be read to rule, that this statute will not allow introduction of prejudicial evidence. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 391 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2).

Conduct

Words constituting conduct. — Words may constitute conduct and when that conduct is otherwise relevant in the case, the fact that the person used these words may be proved, notwithstanding the ordinary rule against the admission of hearsay. Fitzgerald v. State, 10 Ga. App. 70, 72 S.E. 541 (1911).

Conduct must be material in investigation. — Hearsay testimony, in order to become original evidence explaining conduct, must be with reference to some person whose conduct is material in the investigation. This rule is not a license to introduce any and all evidence because the evidence explains the conduct of a person whose conduct is entirely foreign to the issue or issues in the case. Bennett v. State, 49 Ga. App. 804, 176 S.E. 148 (1934).

Supreme Court of Georgia overrules Perry v. State — Supreme Court of Georgia overrules Perry v. State, 255 Ga. 490, 339 S.E.2d 922 (1986), to the extent it holds that a victim's conversations with a witness are admissible to explain the defendant's conduct under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 even if the conversations are unknown to the defendant. Moreover, to the extent Perry held that the victim's conduct was a matter concerning which the truth had to be found and that the victim's statements were admissible to explain that conduct, it was also overruled. Character v. State, 285 Ga. 112, 674 S.E.2d 280 (2009).

Conduct found to be relevant. — Trial court properly allowed a plaintiff to testify regarding the reason plaintiff had not returned to see the doctor for treatment since shortly after the collision at issue because the plaintiff's conduct in ceasing to seek treatment for plaintiff's injuries was relevant to an issue being tried. Lloyd v. Tyson, 195 Ga. App. 48, 392 S.E.2d 551 (1990).

Testimony by an officer and agent of the successor legal entity regarding the merger was relevant and material to explain the course of conduct and corporate intent of the successor corporation after the merger and how the official came to have custody of the records. NationsBank v. Tucker, 231 Ga. App. 622, 500 S.E.2d 378 (1998).

Consistent statements of victim admissible as original evidence. — When the victim of a crime has already testified as to the details of the crime under oath and subject to cross-examination and is available to be recalled to testify further, and the victim's veracity is at issue, the testimony of another as to consistent statements made by the victim to that person out of court is admissible over a hearsay objection as original evidence to explain the victim's conduct after learning of the crime. Brannon v. State, 176 Ga. App. 781, 337 S.E.2d 782 (1985).

Child molestation case and statements of babysitter. — Trial court did not err in admitting the hearsay testimony of a witness concerning statements made by another child who was not the victim in this case, over the defendant's objection since the child hearsay statute is not limited to the out-of-court statements of the actual victim in the case. Tatum v. State, 203 Ga. App. 892, 418 S.E.2d 152 (1992).

Motive

Motive or conduct explained by facts. —

When information received is a fact showing motives or explaining conduct, the information ceases to be hearsay evidence and becomes admissible. Lyman v. State, 69 Ga. 404 (1882).

When a defendant was charged with selling cocaine, the trial court did not err in allowing the arresting officer's testimony that another suspect informed the officer that the defendant would be able to supply the officer with cocaine; the testimony explained the circumstances leading to defendant's arrest. Frazier v. State, 195 Ga. App. 599, 394 S.E.2d 396 (1990).

Evidence was properly admitted by the trial court in defendant's trial for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 after statements of a witness that another screamed for help when the witness saw the victim and defendant fighting were part of the res gestae exception to hearsay pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3. Statements by a witness that defendant was ordered to leave the premises were not hearsay under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1 because the statements were used to explain defendant's motive and conduct of remaining on the premises and waiting for the victim pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2, and statements regarding information from a police report which was not admitted into evidence were deemed harmless as cumulative. Regardless, there was sufficient evidence without the disputed evidentiary rulings to support defendant's conviction based on observations of several witnesses and the cuts on the victim's face and body. Kelley v. State, 260 Ga. App. 238, 581 S.E.2d 584 (2003).

Evidence competent to prove motive may also be used to disprove motive. — When evidence tends to describe a particular motive for testimony of a witness, it is competent to disprove the existence of such motive, and hearsay may be admitted for this purpose. Smith v. State, 7 Ga. App. 252, 66 S.E. 556 (1909).

Testimony from other trial to show motive. — Testimony of a victim given at the prior trial of a coindictor was admissible for the purpose of showing the motive for the crimes against the victim. Waldrip v. State, 267 Ga. 739, 482 S.E.2d 299 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 917, 118 S. Ct. 305, 139 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1997).

Admissibility

1. In General

Trial court must be vested with considerable discretion in determining admissibility of testimony of collateral matters. Yale & Towne, Inc. v. Sharpe, 118 Ga. App. 480, 164 S.E.2d 318 (1968).

Hearsay when admissible derives its competency from necessity of case. Todd v. State, 200 Ga. 582, 37 S.E.2d 779 (1946); Price v. Whitley Constr. Co., 91 Ga. App. 257, 85 S.E.2d 528 (1954).

When evidence not admissible. — While hearsay evidence is admissible under some circumstances to show motive, it is not admissible to evidence the truth of the matters contained in the hearsay testimony. Rogers v. State, 224 Ga. 436, 162 S.E.2d 411 (1968).

Relevancy. — When, in a legal investigation, conduct and motives of an actor are matters concerning which the truth must be found (i.e., are relevant to issues on trial), then information, conversations, letters, and replies, and similar evidence known to the actor are admissible to explain the actor's conduct; but if conduct and motives of actor are not matters concerning which the truth must be found (i.e., are irrelevant to the issues of trial) then the information, etc., on which the actor acted shall not be admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2. Momon v. State, 249 Ga. 865, 294 S.E.2d 482 (1982); Teague v. State, 252 Ga. 534, 314 S.E.2d 910 (1984); Bryant v. Carver State Bank, 207 Ga. App. 659, 428 S.E.2d 621 (1993); Jackson v. Dunkin' Donuts, Inc., 211 Ga. App. 596, 440 S.E.2d 56 (1994).

Admissibility of evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 is not a determination based only on the evidence's relevancy to explain conduct: the conduct to be explained must itself be a relevant issue in the case. Noles v. State, 172 Ga. App. 228, 322 S.E.2d 910 (1984).

When testimony regarding whether any of the plaintiff's healthcare providers had instructed plaintiff not to work after plaintiff's injuries was offered to explain why plaintiff did not return to work, it was relevant to whether plaintiff's lost income was attributable to plaintiff's injuries, and therefore admissible as original evidence, not hearsay. Harrison v. Jenkins, 235 Ga. App. 665, 510 S.E.2d 345 (1998).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in excluding a letter offered as evidence by the defendant as the appeals court could not see how the defendant's reliance on the letter could have justified or explained the defendant's evasiveness towards an officer lawfully investigating a loud noise complaint at the defendant's residence. Williams v. State, 289 Ga. App. 402, 657 S.E.2d 556 (2008).

Explanation of officer's motive. — Defendant was not entitled to present testimony under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 of an investigating officer, which indicated that an acquaintance of the victim said that the acquaintance was not present at the scene of the crime but that a third person told the acquaintance what happened, to explain the officer's conduct and motives with regard to the officer's lack of further investigation into potentially exculpatory evidence as the motives of the officer were not relevant to any issue in the defendant's prosecution for felony murder based on arson in the first degree. Vega v. State, 285 Ga. 32, 673 S.E.2d 223 (2009).

What would otherwise be hearsay testimony was properly elicited by the state to explain a narcotics investigator's conduct and to ascertain the investigator's motives because the defendant was challenging the motives of the narcotics investigator and arguing that the investigator was not acting in good faith as part of defendant's entrapment defense. Martinez v. State, No. A09A1687, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 316 (Mar. 26, 2010).

Testimony admissible to explain conduct. See Athena Prods., Ltd. v. Geographics, Inc., 168 Ga. App. 828, 310 S.E.2d 547 (1983); Thomas v. State, 169 Ga. App. 119, 312 S.E.2d 373 (1983).

Testimony admitted for limited purpose of explaining witness's conduct. — See Davis v. State, 168 Ga. App. 272, 308 S.E.2d 602 (1983); Hampton v. State, 272 Ga. 284, 527 S.E.2d 872 (2000).

Fact that a statement may be properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 does not overcome other objections such as impermissibly placing character in evidence. Echols v. State, 174 Ga. App. 829, 331 S.E.2d 619 (1985).

Admission of cumulative hearsay testimony is not harmful error. — Although certain portions of a police officer's testimony were erroneously admitted as being within the purview of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2, when the hearsay testimony is merely cumulative, the admission of the testimony does not constitute harmful error requiring the reversal of the defendant's convictions. Simmons v. State, 174 Ga. App. 906, 331 S.E.2d 923 (1985).

2. Original Evidence

Proof of statements which are merely part of surrounding circumstances of an occurrence, not offered to prove the fact asserted in the statement, is original evidence, not an exception to hearsay. Atlanta Gas Light Co. v. Slaton, 117 Ga. App. 317, 160 S.E.2d 414 (1968).

Because the circumstances of the defendant's arrest would have been virtually inapplicable without the investigating officer's testimony regarding the arrest, and the officer's testimony concerned narcotics activity in the area and not the defendant's role in the activity, admission of the testimony was not erroneous, and if any error resulted by the trial court's admission, it was highly improbable that the error contributed to the verdict. Fortson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 120, 640 S.E.2d 693 (2006).

When evidence is part of res gestae and admissible as original evidence to fix the locus or explain the conduct of parties in reference to an occurrence under investigation it should not be excluded under the hearsay rule. Ellis v. Southern Ry., 96 Ga. App. 687, 101 S.E.2d 230 (1957).

Evidence of a victim's statement to the police, although not properly admitted as a prior inconsistent statement due to the failure to lay a proper foundation under O.C.G.A. § 24-9-83, was properly admitted as part of the res gestae under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3 because the victim's description of a distinctive jacket worn by one of the individuals who took a pickup truck was used by the police to search the defendant's residence; because the statement was used to explain the police's conduct, it could also be admitted as original evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2. Stubbs v. State, 293 Ga. App. 692, 667 S.E.2d 905 (2008).

Testimony as to identification. — Testimony by police officer that another officer in the officer's unit knew defendant by a nickname was not hearsay but was original evidence explaining the circumstances that led to an undercover operation involving defendant. Kendrick v. State, 224 Ga. App. 72, 479 S.E.2d 464 (1996).

Method of proving general reputation, reputed ownership, public rumor, general notoriety, and the like is by testimony of known facts which becomes original evidence and is not hearsay. Caldwell v. Gregory, 120 Ga. App. 536, 171 S.E.2d 571 (1969).

For purpose of identifying location of time or as explanatory of conduct, hearsay is admissible. Ellis v. Southern Ry., 96 Ga. App. 687, 101 S.E.2d 230 (1957).

3. Self-Serving Declarations

Taint of self-serving declarations not removed by statute. — Statute provides for the admissibility of certain types of hearsay evidence, in certain situations, and does not remove the taint of self-serving declarations. Smith v. State, 144 Ga. App. 294, 241 S.E.2d 14 (1977).

Self-serving declarations are admissible if part of conversation. — Hearsay rule as to self-serving declarations does not apply when: (1) made in the presence of the opposite party; or (2) the declaration are part of a conversation of which some other part has already been permitted in evidence. Rozier v. State, 124 Ga. App. 481, 184 S.E.2d 203 (1971).

Inadmissible self-serving declarations. — Self-serving declarations, when made by the accused either before or after the time of the commission of the alleged offense, are not admissible. Phipps v. State, 203 Ga. App. 128, 416 S.E.2d 319, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 907, 416 S.E.2d 319 (1992).

4. Evidentiary Value

Evidentiary value of testimony admitted depends not on the credibility of the out-of-court declarant, but on the credibility of the witness on the stand who is reporting the statement for the purpose of explaining the witness's conduct and who is under oath, subject to full cross-examination, and present for the jury to observe the witness's demeanor while testifying in regard to the statement. Harrell v. State, 241 Ga. 181, 243 S.E.2d 890 (1978).

Investigator's testimony not original evidence of alibi. — Investigator's testimony that defendant gave a purported alibi was not original evidence as to the fact of alibi and insofar as the testimony established the fact of alibi, the evidence did not derive any value from the witness, but derived value solely on the veracity and competency of defendant who never testified. Therefore, although such evidence is not hearsay, it nevertheless does not qualify as even "slight" evidence of an affirmative defense so as to require a charge on alibi. Hartley v. State, 207 Ga. App. 683, 428 S.E.2d 683 (1993).

Application and Examples1. Alimony and Separate Maintenance

In suit for alimony involving an issue as to conduct of the wife in abandoning the defendant, plaintiff may testify as to what a certain person told her to explain her conduct in leaving the defendant. Moss v. Moss, 147 Ga. 311, 93 S.E. 875 (1917).

Action for separate maintenance. — When, on redirect examination, grantor's wife in an action for separate maintenance was asked if she had followed her attorney's advice in not asking that a guardian be appointed, such testimony was not hearsay but original testimony to explain conduct. Joiner v. Joiner, 225 Ga. 699, 171 S.E.2d 297 (1969).

2. Arrests

Hearsay statements may be used to explain arrests. — A hearsay statement, when not admitted to prove the truth of the matter asserted, but rather to explain why an investigating officer arrested the defendant, is admissible. Davis v. State, 242 Ga. 901, 252 S.E.2d 443 (1979), sentence vacated, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980); Jones v. State, 247 Ga. 268, 275 S.E.2d 67, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 817, 102 S. Ct. 94, 70 L. Ed. 2d 86 (1981); Montgomery v. State, 249 Ga. App. 777, 549 S.E.2d 463 (2001).

Detective's actions leading up to arrest may be relevant to the issue at trial because it was necessary to explain why police units were mobilized to converge on a particular car at a particular address shortly after a robbery. Rhine v. State, 176 Ga. App. 171, 335 S.E.2d 422 (1985).

While the statement of an out-of-court declarant would not have been admissible as evidence of defendant's guilt of the offense charged, it was nevertheless relevant and admissible to establish the events leading to the arrest of the defendant. Thompson v. State, 210 Ga. App. 655, 436 S.E.2d 799 (1993).

Fact that an investigator's testimony that the investigator believed the victim had been sexually abused was hearsay did not render the testimony inadmissible, since the testimony was in furtherance of the investigation leading to defendant's arrest. Odom v. State, 243 Ga. App. 227, 531 S.E.2d 207 (2000).

Incidental showing of other crimes is not grounds for exclusion. — When evidence is relevant for the purpose of showing the circumstances of the arrest, it will not be excluded because the evidence incidentally shows the commission of another crime. Newman v. State, 239 Ga. 329, 236 S.E.2d 673 (1977).

When statements admissible to explain officer's conduct or motive. — While out-of-court statements may be admissible to explain the conduct or motive of a law enforcement officer, the conduct must involve matters concerning which the truth must be found (i.e. are relevant to the issues on trial), such as the facts and circumstances surrounding the arrest of a defendant. Ivester v. State, 252 Ga. 333, 313 S.E.2d 674 (1984).

Admission of hearsay testimony to explain officers' conduct was harmless error. — Error in admitting hearsay testimony for the purpose of explaining police officers' conduct did not warrant a new trial since the testimony did not concern defendant, and was cumulative in light of testimony concerning a confidential informant. Zachery v. State, 276 Ga. App. 688, 624 S.E.2d 265 (2005).

Defendant's statements may be used to explain actions of arresting officers. — When evidence of apprehended burglar's statement to the police was given to explain the conduct of the several police officers in arresting the defendant, the statement was admissible as original evidence. Terrell v. State, 138 Ga. App. 74, 225 S.E.2d 470 (1976).

Although statement by one co-conspirator to the sheriff was inadmissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5 because the conspiracy had terminated, the statement was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 as original evidence to explain the sheriff's subsequent conduct in proceeding to the road behind the store to arrest the other co-conspirator. Henderson v. State, 161 Ga. App. 211, 288 S.E.2d 284 (1982).

Citizen's tip was substantively admissible as original evidence to explain an officer's conduct in going to a certain location and in briefly detaining defendant, specifically, for further investigation. Brown v. State, 245 Ga. App. 149, 537 S.E.2d 421 (2000).

Testimony regarding an anonymous call to special drug agent advising that defendant was at a certain location, wearing described clothing, and in possession of drugs was admissible as explaining police conduct and not for the truth of the matters asserted. Reed v. State, 222 Ga. App. 376, 474 S.E.2d 264 (1996).

Police officer's testimony as to an unidentified call the officer received regarding a group of males and drug dealing was relevant and admissible to establish events leading to defendant's arrest. Hagood v. State, 228 Ga. App. 693, 492 S.E.2d 606 (1997).

2. Arrests (Cont'd)

Reasons for arrest properly admitted. — Testimony of police officers with reference to the information officers had about the robbery of the taxicab driver was properly admitted, over the objection that the testimony was hearsay, to explain the conduct and motives of the officers in being on the lookout for the taxicab and the officers' arrest of the defendants when found in possession of the taxicab. Phillips v. State, 206 Ga. 418, 57 S.E.2d 555 (1950).

Statement made at time of arrest part of res gestae. — When suspect's brother led officers to suspect's darkened room and made statement "don't do it, don't do it," before apparently wrestling a loaded, cocked pistol from the suspect, such statement was part of the res gestae of the arrest and was properly admitted into evidence. Scott v. State, 172 Ga. App. 725, 324 S.E.2d 565 (1984).

Statement of defendant's spouse to enter home. — It was not error to admit the officers' testimony that when the officers arrived at the residence the defendant's spouse threw keys at the officers and stated "go on in if you want to get shot," which explained why the officers entered the house to make the arrest with guns drawn. Ivester v. State, 252 Ga. 333, 313 S.E.2d 674 (1984).

3. Conversations

Conversations are admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 when the conversations are facts explaining conduct and ascertaining motives. Sanborn v. State, 159 Ga. App. 608, 284 S.E.2d 110 (1981).

When nature and character of conversation is both relevant and necessary in order to explain conduct, such as a subsequent investigation by the witness, the conversation will be admitted as original evidence. Todd v. State, 200 Ga. 582, 37 S.E.2d 779 (1946); Nissen v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 90 Ga. App. 175, 82 S.E.2d 253 (1954).

Better practice is not to admit exact words used. — If the fact that a conversation was had is all that is relevant or needed as an inducement to explain conduct, it is more regular to admit only the fact that a conversation occurred, without going into the particulars of what was said. Todd v. State, 200 Ga. 582, 37 S.E.2d 779 (1946).

Although the better practice is to bring out the fact of the conversation without relating the exact words used, when the details are given, there is no reversible error unless the words are prejudicial. Arnold v. State, 236 Ga. 534, 224 S.E.2d 386 (1976); Williams v. State, 156 Ga. App. 481, 274 S.E.2d 826 (1980); Webb v. State, 156 Ga. App. 623, 275 S.E.2d 707 (1980).

When a defendant charged with selling cocaine and trafficking in cocaine testified freely that the defendant had agreed to be a "middleman" for drug transactions, the trial court properly did not allow the defendant to recount the exact conversation; since the defendant's admitted motive was to make money, the exclusion of testimony about the defendant's conversations could not have been harmful. Boatwright v. State, 195 Ga. App. 440, 393 S.E.2d 707 (1990), aff'd, 260 Ga. 534, 397 S.E.2d 689 (1990).

Testimony as to content of phone conversation allowed. — Witness for the state was permitted to testify as to the content of a telephone conversation the witness had with the individual to whom defendant allegedly sold drugs since the substance of the conversation was that the individual volunteered to act as an undercover agent for the witness by making drug purchases. Quick v. State, 139 Ga. App. 440, 228 S.E.2d 592 (1976).

Because testimony about what an unidentified speaker said over the telephone was clearly relevant to explain defendant's conduct in failing to return uniforms, as required by contract, this evidence was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2. DI Uniform Servs., Inc. v. United Water Unlimited Atlanta, LLC, 254 Ga. App. 317, 562 S.E.2d 260 (2002).

Telephone messages. — As telephone messages made following conversations between a party opponent and a testifying witness noted the contents of a conversation, not an act, transaction, occurrence, or event, the business records exception to the hearsay rule was inapplicable; for the contents of the party's telephone conversations to be admissible, the party would have to be given the opportunity to cross-examine the employees to whom the witness spoke with regard to the potential for misrepresenting the statements. Bailey v. Edmundson, 280

Testimony as to argument between victim and defendant. — Testimony as to an argument between the victim and defendant was admissible to show the state of mind and ill feelings between the victim and defendant 17 days prior to the victim's death. Buttles v. State, 229 Ga. App. 300, 494 S.E.2d 73 (1997).

Showing date of and reason for conduct. — When a parent related the conversation in which the parent's child had reported molestation, the evidence proffered related to the date of the offense and explained the reason for a visit to the doctor, and was therefore admissible. Taylor v. State, 176 Ga. App. 567, 336 S.E.2d 832 (1985).

Showing circumstances surrounding arrest. — When defendant's questioning of officer on cross-examination made the circumstances surrounding defendant's arrest relevant and in need of explanation, the officer's testimony explaining the circumstances leading to the defendant's arrest was authorized as original evidence. Chunn v. State, 210 Ga. App. 209, 435 S.E.2d 728 (1993).

Conversation with witness at scene of crime admissible. — When defense questioned officer as to why fingerprints and blood samples were not taken in a motel room, the officer could testify as to statements of defendant's girlfriend at the scene that the fight between defendant and the victims took place outside the room. Holmes v. State, 266 Ga. 530, 468 S.E.2d 357 (1996).

Conversation between detectives admissible. — In prosecution for armed robbery and possession of firearm during commission of felony, a conversation between two detectives of different counties offered to explain the manner of linking up the money bag discovered in the defendant's trailer with the robbery was admissible in evidence. Witt v. State, 157 Ga. App. 564, 278 S.E.2d 145 (1981).

Statement made to accomplice. — Trial court did not err in admitting testimony of defendant's accomplice in another crime that defendant threatened to kill the accomplice when defendant got out of jail since the state offered the testimony to explain why the accomplice delayed in contacting the police after the accomplice learned of defendant's role in a killing and to deflect any negative inferences with respect to the accomplice's motive in testifying against defendant. Collins v. State, 273 Ga. 93, 538 S.E.2d 47 (2000).

Explanation of investigation not hearsay. — Police detective's explanation of the detective's investigation in which the detective recounted statements the victim and others had given the detective were conversations which occurred in the course of a legal investigation that explained conduct and as such were not hearsay and were admissible. Green v. State, 223 Ga. App. 467, 477 S.E.2d 895 (1996).

Police radio dispatcher's response to officer's query regarding the identity of a suspect was not admissible as original evidence; however, the admission was harmless error since the evidence was merely cumulative and did not contribute to the verdict. Thompson v. State, 201 Ga. App. 646, 411 S.E.2d 886 (1991).

Exclusion of police supervisor's remarks as to officers motive and conduct. — Erroneous exclusion of a police supervisor's remarks relating to the conduct and motive of an investigating officer in not charging plaintiff with contributing to an accident was not reversible error since exclusion of the exact content of the conversation between the officer and the officer's supervisor did not prevent defendants from adequately explaining the officer's conduct. City of Monroe v. Jordan, 201 Ga. App. 332, 411 S.E.2d 511 (1991).

In a medical malpractice suit, the testimony of two witnesses that the plaintiff's parent did not go to the hospital because plaintiff's doctor told plaintiff not to do so, neither of which witnesses heard the actual conversation, was hearsay, incompetent, and inadmissible considering that the testimony of the mother had already been admitted to explain her conduct. Highsmith v. Fillingim, 171 Ga. App. 548, 320 S.E.2d 391 (1984).

Conversation between conspirators. — Even though a conspirator may have terminated participation in the conspiracy when, at the request of the police, the coconspirator voluntarily placed a recorded call to another conspirator, statements made by the latter implicating the defendant in murder and armed robbery were admissible since the second conspirator was still conspiring to conceal the crime, and statements of the former, offered for the limited purpose of putting the second coconspirator's responses in context, were admissible as original evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2. Bundrage v. State, 265 Ga. 813, 462 S.E.2d 719 (1995).

Harmless error in not admitting conversations. — Exclusion of wife's testimony about conversations with her husband was in error, but the error was harmless since the evidence would not have been sufficient to sustain a verdict in the wife's favor. Powell v. Alan Young Homes, Inc., 251 Ga. App. 72, 554 S.E.2d 186 (2001).

Conversation between babysitter and victim's brother. — Testimony from a child sex offense victim's babysitter regarding a statement made to the babysitter by the victim's brother that the defendant had been in the same room as the victim was proper under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 because the statement was relevant to show why the babysitter asked the victim what had transpired between defendant and the victim as defendant was not allowed to be with the victim in an unsupervised situation pursuant to a term of probation and defendant claimed to have been set up by the babysitter and the victim's mother. Davenport v. State, 278 Ga. App. 16, 628 S.E.2d 120 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

4. Deceased Persons

Testimony of third parties as to conversations with deceased. — Trial court did not err in not permitting a witness to testify to a conversation had between a witness and the daughter-in-law of the deceased in which the daughter-in-law recounted a conversation between herself and the deceased, since that conversation could not be taken to have influenced the conduct of the witness, but rather the deceased, and therefore, proof of the conversation should be made by the daughter-in-law. Todd v. State, 200 Ga. 582, 37 S.E.2d 779 (1946).

When witnesses testified as to a conversation between the deceased and the defendant, the witnesses were third parties not interested in the suit, and as such the witnesses' testimony was admissible to explain the conduct or ascertain the motive of the deceased. On the other hand, the testimony of the defendant was properly excluded because the defendant was a party to the suit and the defendant could not testify in the defendant's own favor as to transactions or communications had with the deceased. Youngblood v. Ruis, 96 Ga. App. 290, 99 S.E.2d 714 (1957).

In trial of husband for the murder of his wife, testimony of witnesses that murder victim had told the witnesses she was seeking a divorce because of the husband's physical abuse of her concerned the victim's conduct and therefore was not admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule to explain the husband's conduct. Dover v. State, 250 Ga. 209, 296 S.E.2d 710 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1221, 103 S. Ct. 1228, 75 L. Ed. 2d 462 (1983).

Testimony of witnesses regarding conversations they had with the deceased victim about the victim's prior difficulties with defendant was inadmissible as original evidence since none of the witnesses had heard the disagreements or observed defendant's actions which the deceased described to the witnesses. Slakman v. State, 272 Ga. 662, 533 S.E.2d 383 (2000).

Statement by deceased victim to sister admissible. — Statements made by a deceased victim to a sister in whom the victim placed great confidence and to whom the victim turned for help with the victim's problems were trustworthy. The sister's hearsay testimony was admissible. Roper v. State, 263 Ga. 201, 429 S.E.2d 668 (1993). But see Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

Statement made by deceased mother to her son was admissible. — Mother's statement to the son that the retirement benefits would continue to be paid to their account after the mother's death was admissible as original evidence of the son's conduct and motives in a retirement system's suit seeking to recover retirement benefits erroneously made to the account after the mother's death. Applebury v. Teachers' Ret. Sys., 275 Ga. App. 194, 620 S.E.2d 452 (2005).

Threats made by deceased victim admissible. — Testimony about prior threats made against defendant by the deceased victim should not have been excluded; however, the trial court did not commit reversible error because there was ample other evidence that the victim was a violent person who had threatened defendant. Sturkey v. State, 271 Ga. 572, 522 S.E.2d 463 (1999).

Documentary evidence. — Former Georgia dead man's statute, which still applies to causes of action that arose before 1979, does not apply to documentary evidence. Thus, the rule does not affect the letters and other documents written by persons now deceased, but the rule does limit that to which affiants are competent to testify regarding statements made by defendant's agents that are now deceased. McLendon v. Georgia Kaolin Co., 782 F. Supp. 1548 (M.D. Ga. 1992).

In a will contest in which it was disputed whether the decedent was married by common law to the putative widower, medical records referring to the widower as the decedent's husband, which were admitted to explain the conduct of the widower and the decedent, which was relevant to whether they held themselves out as husband and wife, were original evidence, rather than hearsay, under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2. In re Estate of Love, 274 Ga. App. 316, 618 S.E.2d 97 (2005).

5. Declarations

Husband and wife. — In a divorce action the declarations of the wife, when in the act of leaving her husband's house and taking certain articles of household furniture with her, made in the presence of his two sons and others, are admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing and explaining her motive and conduct at the time, although her husband was not present. Odom v. Odom, 36 Ga. 286 (1867), overruled on other grounds, Wise v. Wise, 156 Ga. 477, 119 S.E. 418 (1923).

Declarations of purchaser of goods on credit. — Declarations of a purchaser of goods on credit, who made to the seller certain misrepresentations to obtain the goods, are admissible on the trial of an issue as to whether the return of the goods was an illegal preference. Silvey & Co. v. Tift, 123 Ga. 804, 51 S.E. 748, 1 L.R.A. (n.s.) 386 (1905).

Declarations of person afterwards slain, explanatory of the person's conduct, are admissible on trial for murder. Shirley v. State, 168 Ga. 344, 148 S.E. 91 (1929).

Statements made by a grantee to the effect that the grantor was incapable of transacting business, even if not admissible to prove the grantor's lack of mental capacity, are admissible to show that the grantee had notice and knowledge of the grantor brother's condition, and also to explain the grantee's conduct and, as such, are not hearsay. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 242 Ga. 158, 249 S.E.2d 530 (1978).

9-1-1 call. — Trial court erred in permitting a police officer to testify regarding the statements of a 9-1-1 caller as it was not necessary for the officer to relate to jurors the caller's exact words, specifically, that a white woman who appeared to be drunk was trying to drive over a curb, as it was sufficient for the officer to explain that the officer was responding to a 9-1-1 dispatch; but, the error was harmless, as the improperly admitted hearsay was cumulative of other testimony establishing the defendant's guilt. Moore v. State, 281 Ga. App. 141, 635 S.E.2d 408 (2006).

6. Deeds

Evidence to show intention of maker of deed. — Declarations and documents tending to show the intention of the maker of a deed are admissible when the solvency of the maker at the time of executing the deed and the maker's reasons for such execution are at issue. Cohen v. Parish, 105 Ga. 339, 31 S.E. 205 (1898).

Deed properly admitted to show decedent's motive for gift. — Testimony which was not introduced into evidence for the purpose of establishing the fact that the deed had been made, but for the purpose of explaining the motive behind decedent's gift was properly admitted as original evidence. Stevens v. Way, 167 Ga. App. 688, 307 S.E.2d 507 (1983).

Documents held properly admitted solely for the purpose of explaining party's conduct. B & L Serv. Co. v. Gerson, 167 Ga. App. 679, 307 S.E.2d 262 (1983).

7. Evidence of Other Transactions

Frequently state of mind accompanying doing of an act is illustrated by other acts of a similar nature done by the defendant in such a way as to indicate a general practice or course of conduct, or as to display motive, knowledge, intent, good faith, bad faith, and a variety of other such things. The relevancy being patent, and other methods of proof being difficult or inadequate, the weight of expediency is in favor of admitting the proof of these other acts, though the acts themselves constitute crimes. Humphries v. State, 154 Ga. App. 596, 269 S.E.2d 90 (1980).

Use of hearsay testimony to establish evidence of similar crimes is not authorized by any exception. Hart v. State, 174 Ga. App. 134, 329 S.E.2d 178 (1985).

Officer's testimony of conversation with defendant was not relevant to explain officer's conduct. — It was error to admit an officer's testimony that the officer told the defendant that the officer had received complaints that the defendant was selling methamphetamine; the hearsay improperly placed the defendant's character into evidence, was not relevant to explain the officer's conduct under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2, was not cumulative, and was extremely prejudicial. Doyal v. State, 287 Ga. App. 667, 653 S.E.2d 52 (2007).

Evidence incidentally showing commission of other crimes will not be excluded if relevant. — If evidence is relevant for the purpose of showing flight, it will not be excluded because the evidence incidentally shows the commission of other crimes. McClung v. State, 206 Ga. 421, 57 S.E.2d 559 (1950).

Proof of former crimes must show connection and tend to prove crime charged. — Evidence of similar independent crimes committed by a defendant is admissible if there is sufficient similarity or connection between the independent crime and the offense charged so that proof of the former tends to prove the latter. Lee v. State, 154 Ga. App. 562, 269 S.E.2d 65 (1980).

Evidence concerning independent crime may be admitted for purpose of showing identity, motive, plan, scheme, bent of mind, and course of conduct. Lee v. State, 154 Ga. App. 562, 269 S.E.2d 65 (1980).

When evidence of other crimes admissible. — Evidence of other crimes is admissible when the extraneous crime forms a part of the res gestae; or is one of a system of mutually dependent crimes; or is evidence of guilty knowledge; or may bear upon the identity of the accused, or articles connected with the offense; or is evidence of prior attempts by the accused to commit the same crime upon the victim of the offense for which one stands charged; or when it tends to prove intent, motive, scheme, or the like, when such element enters into the offense. Chambers v. State, 154 Ga. App. 620, 269 S.E.2d 42 (1980).

Evidence of other crimes is admissible if it shows prior attempts by the accused to commit the same crime upon the victim of the offense for which the accused stands charged as tending to prove malice, intent, or motive. Haygood v. State, 154 Ga. App. 633, 269 S.E.2d 480 (1980).

Evidence admissible to show motive for commission of crime. — While evidence tending to show the existence of the accused's malus animus toward the deceased, or a motive for the commission of the crime charged, is admissible in a prosecution for homicide, it is essential that the facts on which the motive is assigned shall be within the knowledge of the person accused. Spradlin v. State, 88 Ga. App. 230, 76 S.E.2d 435 (1953), later appeal, Spradlin v. State, 90 Ga. App. 77, 82 S.E.2d 238 (1954).

Conduct in other transactions held irrelevant. — While there may be a logical connection between prior transactions and that involved in the case in the minds of defendants, statutory and case law clearly declare evidence of conduct in other transactions to be irrelevant. Security Life Ins. Co. v. Newsome, 122 Ga. App. 137, 176 S.E.2d 463 (1970).

Within court's discretion to exclude evidence of similar transactions. — In the event previous acts similar to those involved in the case should fall within one of the exceptions to the general rule of inadmissibility, it is still within the discretion of the trial court to exclude evidence of these acts because of remoteness in time or prejudicial effect. Security Life Ins. Co. v. Newsome, 122 Ga. App. 137, 176 S.E.2d 463 (1970).

Why property was examined. — Testimony of a witness that the witness had heard that the prosecutor lost certain clothing was not inadmissible as hearsay, when offered solely for the purpose of showing why the witness had carefully examined the property found in the possession of the defendant.

Stafford v. State, 121 Ga. 169, 48 S.E. 903 (1904).

No error found in admission of evidence of prior incidents. — When the defendant is charged with aggravated assault it is not reversible error for the trial court to allow the state to introduce evidence of prior incidents when the defendant was discharging firearms if the trial court allows admission for the sole purpose of showing intent and bent of mind, and when the court states that it should not be considered in determining the guilt or innocence of the defendant. Clary v. State, 151 Ga. App. 301, 259 S.E.2d 697 (1979).

Trial court does not err in admitting evidence of a previous difficulty between a defendant and victim which illustrates the state of feeling between them. Jones v. State, 246 Ga. 109, 269 S.E.2d 6 (1980).

When the defendant is charged with aggravated assault with intent to rape it is not reversible error for the trial court to allow the state to introduce evidence of prior similar incidents if the trial court allows admission for the limited purposes of showing defendant's modus operandi, bent of mind, and lustful disposition. Mims v. State, 191 Ga. App. 628, 382 S.E.2d 414 (1989).

Harmless error. — It was harmless error once a trial court admitted, over defendant's objection, hearsay statements of the defendant's girlfriend because the statements were offered only in conjunction with a similar transaction, and did not contribute to the judgment because the state's testimony more than sufficed to establish the defendant's identity as the attacker. Johnson v. State, 236 Ga. App. 252, 511 S.E.2d 603 (1999), aff'd, 272 Ga. 254, 526 S.E.2d 549 (2000).

Testimony about pretrial statements given by an accomplice. — Trial court committed reversible error in allowing the prosecution to elicit testimony about pretrial statements given by the accomplice concerning five homicides in which the accomplice and persons other than defendant were involved. The case may be retried on the evidence. Booker v. State, 242 Ga. App. 80, 528 S.E.2d 849 (2000).

8. Informants

Testimony of conversations with informants is admissible as original evidence to explain the conduct of a detective in meeting with a defendant and entering into a drug transaction with the defendant. Bennett v. State, 153 Ga. App. 21, 264 S.E.2d 516 (1980).

Testimony of a drug agent that a confidential informant identified defendant to the agent at the time of a drug purchase was admissible to explain the agent's conduct in making the purchase. Key v. State, 214 Ga. App. 338, 447 S.E.2d 697 (1994).

Testimony of conversation with informant not admissible. — Trial court's admission of a police officer's testimony as to what a confidential informant told the officer regarding defendant's participation in a drug deal was improper for purposes of showing the officer's explanation for the officer's conduct pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2; however, such error did not mandate reversal of defendant's convictions because it was not found to be harmful in that the evidence against defendant was overwhelming and it was found to be highly probable that the testimony did not contribute to the verdict. Collins v. State, 263 Ga. App. 601, 588 S.E.2d 799 (2003).

An investigating detective's testimony regarding what an informant told the detective constituted inadmissible hearsay and was not admissible as original evidence explaining law enforcement's motives and conduct under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2. Kimble v. State, 301 Ga. App. 237, 687 S.E.2d 242 (2009).

Exception to the hearsay rule applies to information received from confidential informants. Rogers v. State, 167 Ga. App. 770, 307 S.E.2d 685 (1983); Goldsby v. State, 186 Ga. App. 180, 367 S.E.2d 84 (1988).

9. Writings

Genuineness of writing must be proved. — Writing, alleged to be in the handwriting or signature of a party, is inadmissible unless the writing is proved or acknowledged to be genuine; the genuineness of the writing, however, may be proved by circumstantial evidence. State v. Smith, 246 Ga. 129, 269 S.E.2d 21 (1980).

Secondary evidence of lost letter was not hearsay but was original evidence which might explain conduct of alleged accomplice and ascertain the accomplice's motives in implicating defendant in the offense.

Application and Examples (Cont'd)9. Writings (Cont'd)

Mulkey v. State, 155 Ga. App. 304, 270 S.E.2d 816 (1980).

Memorandum used in making alleged contract. — It was held not to be improper to admit in evidence a part of the history of events leading up to the making of an alleged contract, a written memorandum drawn from the tax-books of a certain county by the chairman of the board of equalizers purporting to show certain tax returns. Roberts v. Allen, 31 Ga. App. 660, 122 S.E. 86, cert. denied, 31 Ga. App. 812 (1924).

Claim letter required by the department of transportation as part of the department's contract with a contractor was admissible as original evidence and as a business record. DOT v. Dalton Paving & Constr., Inc., 227 Ga. App. 207, 489 S.E.2d 329 (1997).

Memorandum found on person of deceased was held admissible on trial for murder as original evidence. Etheridge v. State, 163 Ga. 186, 136 S.E. 72 (1926).

Evidence as to nature of letter properly admitted. — When a letter written by the defendant to the prosecutor was introduced in evidence, it was not error to ask the defendant what kind of letter defendant had written, to which defendant answered that it was for information as the thrust of the question was to establish the defendant's motive in writing the letter rather than the truth of the letter's contents. Lancette v. State, 151 Ga. App. 740, 261 S.E.2d 405 (1979).

Writing of persons not involved in case held inadmissible. — Statute is a qualification of the hearsay rule but when the letters and other documents were, in part, communications between strangers to the case, not between parties to the case or persons for whose statements the parties might be legally responsible, it is apparent that none of the documents were admissible. Knudsen v. Duffee-Freeman, Inc., 95 Ga. App. 872, 99 S.E.2d 370 (1957).

Letters properly introduced as evidence of reason for bringing lawsuit. — When, in declaratory judgment actions seeking clarification of lessors' obligations under certain leases, letters written subsequent to the execution of the leases by lessees advised lessors of the legislative abolition of the federally controlled peanut acreage allocations and their opinion as to the effect this would have on the lease agreements, these letters did not attempt to vary the terms of the agreements, but merely stated the basis for bringing the lawsuits. As such the letters were relevant and admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 as facts to explain conduct and ascertain motive. Cook Farms, Inc. v. Bostwick, 165 Ga. 692, 302 S.E.2d 574 (1983).

Letters evidencing attempts to resolve dispute before suit filed properly admitted. — In a couple's suit for the negligent construction of a swimming pool brought against a contractor, the trial court did not err by admitting two letters into evidence from the contractor's attorney to the couple as the letters were not offered for the truth of specific matters contained in the letters but were offered to show that the couple had attempted to contact the contractor about the problems with the pool installed and to show that those attempts occurred prior to the filing of the lawsuit. Further, the letters were admissible to establish the couple's attempts to mitigate the damages by giving the contractor the opportunity to correct the problems that the negligent construction had caused and to prove the contractor's motive and intent. Dave Lucas Co. v. Lewis, 293 Ga. App. 288, 666 S.E.2d 576 (2008).

Unsigned note properly admitted to explain investigating officer's conduct. — In prosecution for failure to perform duty upon striking an unattended vehicle, an unsigned note placed on a damaged automobile was properly admitted to explain the conduct of an investigating officer. Johnson v. State, 168 Ga. App. 686, 310 S.E.2d 249 (1983).

Report of an expert expressing the expert's opinion as to the result of a scientific experiment is not admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 to explain conduct or motive when the foundation for admission of that opinion is not properly laid. Tucker v. State, 249 Ga. 323, 290 S.E.2d 97 (1982).

10. Negotiations

Testimony of plaintiff that his wife told him that the defendant's wife said to her that the defendant was angry and "not to mention" the rent in question was admissible in explanation of the plaintiff's reason for not asking the defendant for the rent in a settlement between them. Burgamy v. Holton, 22 Ga. App. 723, 97 S.E. 199 (1918).

Antecedent negotiations culminating in contract. — If a contract was admissible as original evidence on proof of the contract's execution and of knowledge thereof by the defendant prior to the defendant's purchase of the property, it was not error to admit testimony in relation to antecedent negotiations which culminated in the contract. Collier v. Moore, 31 Ga. App. 227, 120 S.E. 441 (1923).

Negotiations concerning property settlement. — In suit by attorneys for reasonable value of services rendered in connection with defendant's divorce, testimony as to what husband said during negotiations concerning a property settlement, although hearsay, was admissible to establish not the truth of the statements, but the factum of husband's having made the statements during the negotiations, illustrating his attitude and the difficulty which confronted the plaintiffs in the performance of the task of reaching a property settlement. Beard v. Westmoreland, 90 Ga. App. 632, 84 S.E.2d 93 (1954).

11. Presence at Particular Place

Presence at place of accident. — In proceedings under Workers' Compensation Act, hearsay testimony is admissible to explain the conduct of the deceased in going to the place of injury, the deceased's presence at the place where the accident occurred, and the deceased's purpose in being there. Fitzgerald Motor Co. v. Ross, 94 Ga. App. 636, 95 S.E.2d 721 (1956).

Defendant's presence at place of crime. — Admission in evidence, in a rape trial, of statements made by the accused immediately before the crime was committed, tending to prove that the accused was present at the place and at the time the crime was committed was not error especially since the accused in the accused's statement admitted the accused was at the place of the crime and had a physical difficulty with the victim. Sims v. State, 195 Ga. 485, 25 S.E.2d 1 (1943).

Victim's presence at place of homicide. — When one contention of the defendant was that the person slain went to the place of the homicide for the purpose of having a difficulty with the defendant, it was not hearsay to allow the mother of the deceased to testify that she had asked her son to do something for her, the performance of which would require the deceased to go to the place where the homicide occurred. Harper v. State, 129 Ga. 770, 59 S.E. 792 (1907), aff'd, 131 Ga. 771, 63 S.E. 339 (1909); Ricketson v. State, 134 Ga. 306, 67 S.E. 881 (1910).

Evidence of a message received by the deceased, which purported to come from the accused, requesting the deceased to come to the place of business of the accused, was properly admitted under the rule that information received which shows motive or explains conduct is admissible in evidence, not as hearsay, but as original evidence. Duren v. State, 158 Ga. 735, 124 S.E. 343 (1924).

Ordinarily the reason of the deceased for seeking the defendant or the deceased's purpose in going to the scene of a homicide expressed to another, but not communicated to the defendant, is hearsay and not admissible to explain the conduct of the deceased. Clarke v. State, 221 Ga. 206, 144 S.E.2d 90 (1965).

Testimony in regard to the acts and doings of the murder victim is original evidence. Pinion v. State, 225 Ga. 36, 165 S.E.2d 708 (1969).

Testimony of counsel as to whereabouts of witness. — It was held in view that counsel should not have been allowed to testify as to what was told counsel concerning the whereabouts of a witness, by a telephone operator, who was in turn told the same by the mother of the witness as this was hearsay; though if the telephone operator had been testifying as to information the operator got from the mother of the witness, this would not have been hearsay and would have been competent and admissible. Estill v. Citizens & S. Bank, 153 Ga. 618, 113 S.E. 552 (1922).

No error found in admission of testimony as to why witness went to place. — It was not error to admit the answer of a witness for the state to a question as to why the witness was sent and why the witness went to the place. Stevens v. State, 77 Ga. 310, 2 S.E. 684 (1886); Hall v. State, 22 Ga. App. 112, 95 S.E. 936 (1918).

When testimony objected to as hearsay was testimony as to why a witness went to a particular booth in the witness's restaurant to require certain persons, including the defendant, to stop creating a disturbance in the witness's place of business, and since the testimony alleged to be hearsay was merely that a guest asked the witness to request the defendant and others to cease and desist their loud talking and cursing, which the witness testified the witness found when called to the witness's attention, the trial court may allow it in evidence solely as an exception to the hearsay rule to explain the witness's conduct. Oliver v. State, 123 Ga. App. 666, 182 S.E.2d 191 (1971).

Employees' testimony in shoplifting prosecution of being instructed to "watch out for" defendants was relevant and material to show the conduct of the employees in watching defendants and calling the police and was not inadmissible because it may have incidentally put defendant's character in issue. Jenkins v. State, 172 Ga. App. 715, 324 S.E.2d 491 (1984).

Prison warden's hearsay testimony to effect that drugs would be smuggled into facility by a person masquerading as a law enforcement official supposedly visiting an inmate was admissible to explain warden's conduct in calling in an outside agency to establish a surveillance team to observe comings and goings at the prison. Brownlee v. State, 173 Ga. App. 138, 325 S.E.2d 815 (1984).

12. Relationships

There is a distinction between bare assertions or denials of legal relationship by parties to it as opposed to such statements by outsiders. In the first instance the presumption of personal knowledge is strong, and the statement is more like a summary of many facts and the personal understanding of one's status vis-a-vis another, than a conclusion of law. This is particularly true when the negation of the relationship is the issue. On the other hand, the existence of the relationship is not within the personal knowledge of an outsider. What the outsider may know are certain facts which might lead to that conclusion. Phillips v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Div., 148 Ga. App. 351, 251 S.E.2d 180 (1978).

Establishment of marital relationship. —

When equivocal conduct such as cohabitation is relied upon as a circumstance material to the issue to prove marriage, declaration of one of the parties since deceased, made pending the period of cohabitation, disaffirming the marriage are admissible. Drawdy v. Hesters, 130 Ga. 161, 60 S.E. 451 (1908).

When the issue at trial was whether plaintiff, who was seeking year's support, was married by common law to deceased and was, therefore, his widow upon his death, information for an obituary that was supplied to the newspaper by the funeral home director, who testified that the director was also responsible for the information on the death certificate showing that plaintiff was not his widow, was not objectionable as hearsay but was admissible for impeachment purposes. Murray v. Clayton, 151 Ga. App. 720, 261 S.E.2d 455 (1979).

13. Safety Instructions

Evidence of safety instruction received by plaintiff was admissible to explain plaintiff's conduct in dismounting while leaving the motor running in the plaintiff's truck. Yale & Towne, Inc. v. Sharpe, 118 Ga. App. 480, 164 S.E.2d 318 (1968).

14. Searches

Why search was made. — When it is material to explain how or why a search for property was made, it is competent to show that this was done in consequence of information received; but statements conveying such information are not admissible affirmative proof of the facts contained in the statements. Cody v. State, 124 Ga. 446, 52 S.E. 750 (1905); Forbes v. State, 51 Ga. App. 465, 180 S.E. 914 (1935).

Subsequent searches. — When, in prosecution for burglary, police officer testified that woman arrested with defendant told the officer that other property taken during the burglary was at the house of defendant's mother, such testimony was admissible not as hearsay but as original evidence to explain the officer's subsequent search of the house. Moore v. State, 155 Ga. App. 721, 272 S.E.2d 575 (1980).

15. Testimony of Law Enforcement Officers

Chain of custody relevancy. — It was not error to allow the jury to see the accused's name written on the outside of an envelope which contained suspected cocaine. The mere fact the printed name of accused appeared on the envelope was in and of itself relevant to the issue of chain of custody; without regard to proof that the accused was in fact the "owner" of the contents of the envelope. Morgan v. State, 204 Ga. App. 178, 419 S.E.2d 313 (1992).

By virtue of this statute, an investigating officer is permitted to explain the officer's conduct. White v. State, 231 Ga. 290, 201 S.E.2d 436 (1973); Howard v. State, 144 Ga. App. 208, 240 S.E.2d 908 (1977); Mitchell v. State, 169 Ga. App. 630, 314 S.E.2d 468 (1984); Storey v. State, 205 Ga. App. 610, 422 S.E.2d 879 (1992), cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 901, 422 S.E.2d 879 (1992) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2).

Explaining conduct of officer admissible. — When a police officer presented testimony that the officer took the victim to the hospital for a vaginal and rectal examination after she told the officer she had been raped and sodomized, such testimony was admissible to explain the officer's conduct. Ellis v. State, 181 Ga. App. 630, 353 S.E.2d 822 (1987).

Allowing the state to elicit testimony from an investigating officer and an informant to the effect that defendant was a known drug dealer was not reversible error since the testimony was received with a limiting instruction that the testimony was to be considered only to explain the officer's conduct and not as substantive proof of defendant's guilt, and it was highly probable that the testimony did not contribute to the verdict. Osborne v. State, 193 Ga. App. 276, 387 S.E.2d 383 (1989).

Conversations had in the course of a legal investigation may be admitted as original evidence to explain the conduct of a law enforcement official provided the conduct involves a matter relevant to the issue on trial. Matthews v. State, 194 Ga. App. 386, 390 S.E.2d 873 (1990); Evans v. State, 201 Ga. App. 20, 410 S.E.2d 146 (1991).

There was no error in the admission of the statements of a concerned citizen since the only purpose of the statement was to explain the conduct of an officer in proceeding to an intersection and approaching defendant. Testimony of the arresting officer with reference to the legal investigation and circumstances surrounding the arrest is authorized as original evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2. Aaron v. State, 203 Ga. App. 658, 418 S.E.2d 66, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 902, 418 S.E.2d 66 (1992).

Testimony of a police officer as to information given to the officer by the victim was inadmissible as original evidence to explain the officer's conduct in investigating a robbery, but was admissible as a hearsay exception, because the victim was present at trial and could be cross-examined, and as a prior consistent statement. Perkins v. State, 226 Ga. App. 613, 487 S.E.2d 365 (1997).

Officer's testimony that a detective interviewing a codefendant recommended that the officer search defendant's pockets was admissible to explain the officer's conduct in searching defendant's pockets. Jones v. State, 226 Ga. App. 619, 487 S.E.2d 371 (1997); State v. Ledford, 247 Ga. App. 412, 543 S.E.2d 107 (2000).

Testimony of detective, that a canvass of the area where the shooting took place resulted in police learning the defendant was a possible suspect, was inadmissible because the conduct of the officer was not a relevant issue. Weems v. State, 269 Ga. 577, 501 S.E.2d 806 (1998).

In establishing that a defendant obstructed police officers, the state was required to prove that they were acting in the lawful discharge of their official duties at the time of the obstruction, the state thus needed the arresting officer to testify about the information the officer received from another officer to explain the officer's conduct in stopping defendant; accordingly, the testimony was admissible as original evidence to explain that the officers were lawfully discharging the officers' official duties. Penland v. State, 258 Ga. App. 659, 574 S.E.2d 880 (2002).

Because the trial court did not commit reversible error when the court permitted a police officer to explain the officer's conduct under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2, defendant failed to show that counsel's failure to object constituted ineffective assistance. Harris v. State, 279 Ga. 522, 615 S.E.2d 532 (2005).

Explaining conduct of officer inadmissible. — After investigating officer was allowed to recount that when the officer asked other prisoners whether the prisoners had seen or heard anything happen in the drunk tank, no one responded, the testimony served to explain the conduct of the investigating officer but this specific conduct was not relevant to the issue at trial and thus the admission of the testimony was error. Nevertheless, the error was harmless. Griffin v. State, 170 Ga. App. 287, 316 S.E.2d 797 (1984).

Since the conduct of the investigating officer was not relevant to any issue in a murder trial, the trial court abused the court's discretion by allowing the officer to testify to a statement made by an individual who had seen the defendant and the victim together. Miller v. State, 260 Ga. 191, 391 S.E.2d 642 (1990), overruled on other grounds, Woodard v. State, 269 Ga. 317, 496 S.E.2d 896 (1998).

Trial court erred in permitting an investigator to recount the investigator's conversations with witnesses and other persons on the basis that it explained the investigator's conduct in investigating defendant as a suspect in the case. Brinson v. State, 268 Ga. 227, 486 S.E.2d 830 (1997); Jones v. State, 272 Ga. 154, 527 S.E.2d 543 (2000).

In a prosecution for driving under the influence, the trial court erred in allowing, as an explanation of conduct, a police officer's testimony that a witness told the officer defendant was the driver of the truck. Arnold v. State, 228 Ga. App. 137, 491 S.E.2d 205 (1997).

Testimony of police officer regarding the statement of a second officer, who had implemented defendant's secondary detention at a roadblock, was not admissible as probative evidence of articulable suspicion on the second officer's part under the "explanation of conduct" exception to the hearsay rule. State v. Fischer, 230 Ga. App. 613, 497 S.E.2d 79 (1998).

Investigator's testimony that a fireman, salvage yard owner, and insurance adjuster had informed the investigator that no gun was found, was not admissible to show the officer's conduct because the "conduct" of an investigations officer will rarely need to be explained. Robbins v. State, 269 Ga. 500, 499 S.E.2d 323 (1998).

Testimony of a detective that explained the detective's conduct in the course of an investigation of a robbery was admissible for that purpose. Madison v. State, 238 Ga. App. 589, 519 S.E.2d 698 (1999).

Testimony of arresting officer that explained the officer's conduct in arresting defendant was not admissible to explain the officer's conduct. Brown v. State, 274 Ga. 31, 549 S.E.2d 107 (2001).

Hearsay evidence from anonymous callers inadmissible to explain officer's conduct. — Under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2, it was error to admit evidence of hearsay information provided by anonymous callers in order to explain police conduct. DeLoatch v. State, 296 Ga. App. 65, 673 S.E.2d 576 (2009).

Investigation and circumstances of arrest. — Investigators may not testify to the fruits of their investigations without regard for the hearsay rule; rather such witnesses are bound by that rule and must testify from their own first-hand knowledge alone. Jones v. State, 247 Ga. 268, 275 S.E.2d 67, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 817, 102 S. Ct. 94, 70 L. Ed. 2d 85 (1981).

When an investigating officer's statement explains the events leading up to and surrounding an arrest, such evidence is being offered for a permissible purpose, and is admissible. In re K.D.J., 246 Ga. App. 500, 540 S.E.2d 682 (2000).

Detective could not testify from a colleague's notes regarding the colleague's interview with defendant since the detective had no first-hand knowledge of what was said, and there was no necessity to explain any conduct of the detective in response to the notes. Dukes v. State, 224 Ga. App. 305, 480 S.E.2d 340 (1997).

Testimony not admissible as evidence of guilt. — Testimony is admissible as original evidence to explain conduct of the investigating officer, not as original evidence of the defendant's guilt. Germany v. State, 235 Ga. 836, 221 S.E.2d 817 (1976); Williams v. State, 156 Ga. App. 481, 274 S.E.2d 826 (1980).

Hearsay testimony to explain the conduct of an investigating officer is original evidence to explain the officer's conduct but not original evidence as to the defendant's guilt. Latimore v. State, 170 Ga. App. 848, 318 S.E.2d 722 (1984); Patterson v. State, 210 Ga. App. 735, 437 S.E.2d 602 (1993).

Eyewitness's identification. — Police officer's testimony as to an eyewitness's identification is not hearsay and is admissible to establish the fact that an identification was made. Momon v. State, 161 Ga. App. 629, 288 S.E.2d 767, aff'd, 249 Ga. 865, 294 S.E.2d 482 (1982); White v. State, 244 Ga. App. 54, 537 S.E.2d 364 (2000), aff'd, 273 Ga. 787, 546 S.E.2d 514 (2001).

In the absence of some other viable hearsay exception, such as "necessity" or "res gestae," a law enforcement officer may not testify to a pretrial identification of the accused unless the person who actually made the identification testifies at trial and is subject to cross-examination, and such testimony is not automatically admissible as original evidence to explain the officer's conduct. White v. State, 273 Ga. 787, 546 S.E.2d 514 (2001).

Law enforcement officer is permitted to testify to a vocal fact of identification witnessed by the officer without its being subject to a hearsay objection. Woodard v. State, 175 Ga. App. 449, 333 S.E.2d 645 (1985).

Testimony as to investigation and arrest showing knowledge of rights. — Testimony of an arresting officer in response to queries concerning the officer's investigation and whether defendant understood defendant's Miranda rights, that defendant stated that defendant had been on a chain gang before and understood defendant's rights, is authorized as original evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2. Moses v. State, 166 Ga. App. 425, 304 S.E.2d 528 (1983).

State*, 167 Ga. App. 378, 306 S.E.2d 417 (1983).

Explanation for arrest. — Evidence of an investigating officer's conversation is admissible when it involves information upon which the officer acted in charging the defendant with a crime. Little v. State, 167 Ga. App. 880, 307 S.E.2d 761 (1983).

Trial court may allow a police officer to testify about the content of a conversation the officer had with the victim at the scene of a crime when the conversation was sufficient to confirm the officer's belief that a crime had been committed and authorized the officer's action of detaining the defendant. Morton v. State, 168 Ga. App. 18, 308 S.E.2d 41 (1983).

Investigating officer's testimony that rape victim told the officer that defendant raped her was admissible since the conversation the officer had with the victim was sufficient to authorize the officer's action of arresting defendant. Miller v. State, 194 Ga. App. 533, 390 S.E.2d 901 (1990).

Testimony given by a detective at a motion to suppress hearing concerned an on-the-scene investigation which led to defendant's apprehension and arrest was admissible as original evidence to explain the detective's conduct in arresting the defendant. McCloud v. State, 210 Ga. App. 69, 435 S.E.2d 281 (1993); Posey v. State, 215 Ga. App. 565, 451 S.E.2d 463 (1994).

Rackley*, 177 Ga. App. 734, 341 S.E.2d 231 (1986).

State*, 160 Ga. App. 109, 286 S.E.2d 759 (1981).

Testimony admissible to explain officer's conduct in returning to accident scene. See Allen v. Brookshire, 169 Ga. App. 391, 312 S.E.2d 862 (1984).

Application and Examples (Cont'd)
15. Testimony of Law Enforcement Officers (Cont'd)

Testimony as to other suspects. — Trial court did not err in not allowing defense counsel to question police officers concerning information received about other suspects during the steps of their investigation since the court did allow counsel to ask the officers whom the officers interviewed as suspects, and defendant subpoenaed one of the suspects to testify at trial. Renner v. State, 260 Ga. 515, 397 S.E.2d 683 (1990).

Testimony harmful if character placed in issue. — An investigator's hearsay explanation of the investigator's basis for obtaining a search warrant based on accusations by an unidentified informant did not meet the criteria required and was not harmless. The allegations of an unrelated drug deal where a car allegedly driven by the defendant at another time had been seized clearly placed defendant's character in issue. Lowe v. State, 208 Ga. App. 49, 430 S.E.2d 169 (1993), overruled on other grounds, Kelly v. State, 212 Ga. App. 278, 442 S.E.2d 462 (1994).

Testimony inadmissible to explain officer's reason for making arrest. — When defendant's arrest was not an issue in trial, the arresting officer's testimony as to what defendant's wife said leading to arrest was not admissible. Glass v. State, 171 Ga. App. 156, 319 S.E.2d 60 (1984).

Grant of immunity. — Trial court correctly allowed a sheriff, following a cross-examination that put in issue the question whether the sheriff might have tampered with a key witness for the prosecution and might have acted improperly in recommending that the witness be granted immunity, to explain that, before the sheriff recommended immunity, the sheriff required the witness to give a complete statement of the events surrounding the offense subject to a polygraph examination. Cromer v. State, 253 Ga. 352, 320 S.E.2d 751 (1984).

In the following cases, testimony of police officers was properly admitted. — See Caraway v. State, 72 Ga. App. 504, 34 S.E.2d 303 (1945) (rape and child abuse investigation); Marshman v. State, 88 Ga. App. 250, 76 S.E.2d 443 (1953) (lottery prosecution); Campbell v. State, 90 Ga. App. 1, 81 S.E.2d 880 (1954) (conversation with defendant's employer); Coleman v. State, 124 Ga. App. 313, 183 S.E.2d 608 (1971) (appearance at scene of alleged crime); Lingerfelt v. State, 231 Ga. 354, 201 S.E.2d 445 (1973) (conversation with victim prior to death); Zilinson v. State, 234 Ga. 535, 216 S.E.2d 830 (1975), overruled by Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006) (conduct of photographic lineup); Truman v. State, 144 Ga. App. 461, 241 S.E.2d 579 (1978) (victim's identification of defendant); Williams v. State, 244 Ga. 485, 260 S.E.2d 879 (1979) (felony-murder prosecution); Cosby v. State, 151 Ga. App. 676, 261 S.E.2d 424 (1979) (investigation of burglary); Gibson v. State, 160 Ga. 16. Examples Not Within Rule

Ownership of clothing. — When a person testifies that certain articles of clothing exhibited to the person are similar to those worn by a suspect in a murder case, whom the accused is attempting to identify as the guilty party, it is proper to exclude hearsay testimony identifying the ownership of the clothing as being that of the suspect; this evidence does not come within the exception to the hearsay evidence rule. Bryant v. State, 197 Ga. 641, 30 S.E.2d 259 (1944).

Testimony of arresting officer as to statements made to the officer by a cab driver, in the presence of the accused, regarding the activities of the accused, while a passenger during the night after the crime was committed, was hearsay, not being original evidence, nor an exception to the hearsay rule. Rosborough v. State, 209 Ga. 362, 72 S.E.2d 717 (1952).

Questions propounded by counsel were not proper under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 since the questions simply did not constitute an attempt to ascertain an explanation of the witness's course of conduct. Jones v. State, 247 Ga. 268, 275 S.E.2d 67, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 817, 102 S. Ct. 94, 70 L. Ed. 2d 85 (1981).

Evidence of defendant's character. — Testimony which places defendant's character in evidence without defendant having first done so personally cannot be admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2. Anderson v. State, 252 Ga. 103, 312 S.E.2d 113 (1984).

Victim's reputation for violence. — Murder victim's reputation for violence may be offered by the accused upon making a prima facie showing that the victim was the aggressor and was assaulting the accused, who acted to defend oneself. Woods v. State, 269 Ga. 60, 495 S.E.2d 282 (1998).

Evidence that a murder charge against a witness had been dropped after the witness took a lie detector test was inadmissible since the defense did not place the state's conduct in dismissing the murder charge in issue. Furthermore, the admission constituted harmful error because it created an inference that the witness had passed the polygraph examination and bolstered the credibility of the witness. Wilson v. State, 254 Ga. 473, 330 S.E.2d 364 (1985).

Murder defendant's testimony that victim had knifed another person. — Although murder defendant's testimony that the victim had knifed another person would have been admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 as an attempt to explain the murder as the result of the defendant's reasonable fear of the victim, the testimony was properly excluded as an attempt to prove the victim's character by a specific act. Echols v. State, 174 Ga. App. 829, 331 S.E.2d 619 (1985).

Affidavits of conversations from third parties. — In an action by lessors against guarantors, the affidavit of an attorney representing the guarantors, recalling a conversation the attorney had with an officer of the lessee, was not admissible because the affidavit's evidentiary value depended on the credibility of the affiant, not on the credibility of the attorney. Athens Int'l, Inc. v. Venture Capital Properties, Inc., 230 Ga. App. 286, 495 S.E.2d 900 (1998).

Uncommunicated threat of victim. — Although evidence of a death threat against a defendant may fall within the exception under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 when offered, not for the truth of the matter asserted, but to show the victim's state of mind, this hearsay exception did not apply since the evidence did not support defendant's contention that the uncommunicated threat showed the victim's state of mind. Massey v. State, 272 Ga. 50, 525 S.E.2d 694 (2000).

Prior difficulty evidence. — Supreme Court of Georgia overrules Perry v. State, 255 Ga. 490, 339 S.E.2d 922 (1986), to the extent it holds that a victim's conversations with a witness are admissible to explain the defendant's conduct under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2 even if they are unknown to the defendant. Moreover, to the extent Perry held that the victim's conduct was a matter concerning which the truth had to be found and that the victim's statements were admissible to explain that conduct, it was also overruled. Character v. State, 285 Ga. 112, 674 S.E.2d 280 (2009).

With regard to two defendants' convictions for malice murder, aggravated assault, and other crimes, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by allowing the admission of prior difficulty evidence and concluding that those statements were admissible under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule because the statements, which involved the aggravated assault victim testifying about one defendant robbing one of the murder victims of money won in a dice game and that the same defendant had tried to start an argument with the aggravated assault victim at a nightclub the same night the crimes took place, were not testimonial since the statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted. Further, even if the statements were not admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2, the trial court properly admitted the statements under the necessity exception to the hearsay rule as the aggravated assault victim and the murder victim at issue were long-time friends who placed great confidence in each other and it was established that the murder victim confided in the aggravated assault victim in times of trouble. Character v. State, 285 Ga. 112, 674 S.E.2d 280 (2009).

General Consideration

Prerequisites to admission. — To bring a declaration within the exception of the res gestae, the declaration must grow out of the main fact; the declaration must serve to illustrate the fact, and the declaration must be made contemporaneously with the fact. When these things are true of declarations, the declarations are provable, not as the testimony of the declarant, but as partaking of the nature of facts. Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615 (1852).

Declarations of a party to be admitted as part of the res gestae must be at the time of the transaction the declarations are intended to explain, must be calculated to unfold its nature and quality, and must harmonize with it. Standard Oil Co. v. Reagan, 15 Ga. App. 571, 84 S.E. 69 (1915); Wallace v. State, 151 Ga. App. 177, 259 S.E.2d 172 (1979).

To satisfy the standards of this statute, the exclamation must be contemporaneous, voluntary, and made at a time which indicates the lack of deliberation and deception. Gaines v. State, 232 Ga. 727, 208 S.E.2d 798 (1974) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3).

Construction with Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.3. — Proper res gestae evidence was admissible without having to follow the rules regarding prior similar transactions as nothing in Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.3(E) was intended to prohibit the state from introducing evidence of similar transactions or occurrences which were immediately related in time and place to the charge being tried, as part of a single, continuous transaction.

When an act is material, declarations accompanying the act are admissible as part of the res gestae. Atlanta & W. Point R.R. v. Truitt, 65 Ga. App. 320, 16 S.E.2d 273 (1941).

Admitted as material facts. — Declarations as parts of the res gestae, made at the time of the transaction, are regarded as verbal acts, indicating a present purpose and intention, and are therefore admitted in proof like any other material facts. Jones v. State, 62 Ga. App. 734, 9 S.E.2d 707 (1940).

Self-serving declarations. — Declarations made by a party in the party's own favor, to be admissible as part of the res gestae, must be such as are contemplated by statute. Rutland v. Hathorn, 36 Ga. 380 (1867) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3).

Burden on person seeking to introduce res gestae evidence. — It is incumbent on a party seeking to introduce hearsay evidence, as part of the res gestae to prove that the declarations testified to were so nearly connected with the transaction under investigation, in point of time, as to be free from any suspicion of device or afterthought. Taylor v. State, 120 Ga. 857, 48 S.E. 361 (1904); Pool v. Warren County, 123 Ga. 205, 51 S.E. 328 (1905); Smith v. State, 10 Ga. App. 840, 74 S.E. 447 (1912).

Four current generally prevalent exceptions that used to fall under the label "res gestae" are declarations of present bodily condition, declarations of present mental state or emotion, excited utterances, and present sense impressions. Collins v. Francis, 728 F.2d 1322 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 963, 105 S. Ct. 361, 83 L. Ed. 2d 297 (1984).

Denying defendant opportunity to impeach statements of child sodomy victim was harmless error since the child's declaration was not the sole evidence of the crime and the evidence did not show that the child had any measure of dealings with members of the community at large which would subject the child to the formation of public opinion about the child's veracity. Brantley v. State, 177 Ga. App. 13, 338 S.E.2d 694 (1985).

Res Gestae Defined

It is impossible to define res gestae so as to adequately cover all the various and different uses to which it is put. Walker v. State, 137 Ga. 398, 73 S.E. 368 (1912).

Idea of res gestae presupposes a main fact, or principal transaction. Townsend v. State, 127 Ga. App. 797, 195 S.E.2d 474 (1972).

What is res gestae of a given transaction must depend upon its own peculiarities of character and circumstances. Standard Oil Co. v. Reagan, 15 Ga. App. 571, 84 S.E. 69 (1915); Wallace v. State, 151 Ga. App. 171, 259 S.E.2d 172 (1979).

Res gestae are events speaking for themselves, through the instinctive words and acts of participants, but are not the words and acts of participants when narrating the events. Jones v. State, 62 Ga. App. 734, 9 S.E.2d 707 (1940).

Res gestae refers to oral declarations of a spontaneous nature which would otherwise be inadmissible hearsay evidence. Fountain v. State, 136 Ga. App. 229, 220 S.E.2d 705 (1975).

Witnesses' testimony regarding what the girls said defendant told the girls to do was not impermissible "double hearsay", as defendant's directions to the girls about what the defendant wanted the girls to do were an integral part of the defendant's offenses and were thus admissible as part of res gestae. Gibby v. State, 213 Ga. App. 20, 443 S.E.2d 852 (1994).

Res gestae is not limited to the codal restriction of "declarations." Townsend v. State, 127 Ga. App. 797, 195 S.E.2d 474 (1972).

It also includes circumstances and acts. — Acts and circumstances forming a part of the continuation of the main transaction are admissible as res gestae. Floyd v. State, 143 Ga. 286, 84 S.E. 971 (1915); Black v. State, 154 Ga. App. 441, 268 S.E.2d 724 (1980).

Circumstances, acts, and declarations growing out of main fact, and contemporaneous with the main fact, and which serve to illustrate its character, are part of res gestae.

Res Gestae Defined (Cont'd)

Standard Oil Co. v. Reagan, 15 Ga. App. 571, 84 S.E. 69 (1915); Waller v. State, 80 Ga. App. 488, 56 S.E.2d 491 (1949); Townsend v. State, 127 Ga. App. 797, 195 S.E.2d 474 (1972).

Rape conviction was upheld on appeal as the defendant was not entitled to a new trial based on defense counsel's failure to object to certain testimony from the victim about the defendant's history of selling drugs and failure to subpoena certain medical records; moreover, the defendant was properly denied a mistrial as the trial court issued a curative instruction regarding the alleged improper character evidence admitted, and thereafter polled the jury to ensure that jurors would in fact disregard that evidence. Mitchell v. State, 287 Ga. App. 517, 651 S.E.2d 821 (2007).

Because the state was entitled to present evidence of the entire res gestae of the crime, other criminal acts committed by defendant on the same night as a robbery were relevant under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3 to show defendant's frame of mind in the time period immediately preceding and following the crimes. Waters v. State, 294 Ga. App. 442, 669 S.E.2d 450 (2008).

Time Requirements

Verbal act doctrine. — Part of this statute which admits "declarations accompanying an act" in evidence as a part of the res gestae is but a codification of the principal of the "verbal act doctrine." Glens Falls Indem. Co. v. Gottlieb, 80 Ga. App. 634, 56 S.E.2d 799 (1949) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3).

Statements must be part of occurrence. — Test of determining whether statements are a part of the res gestae is: were the declarations a part of the occurrence to which they relate, or were the declarations a mere narrative concerning something which had fully taken place, and had therefore become a thing of the past. Hunter v. State, 147 Ga. 823, 95 S.E. 668 (1918); Hodge v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 57 Ga. App. 403, 195 S.E. 765 (1938); Berry v. Dinsmore, 115 Ga. App. 256, 154 S.E.2d 653 (1967); Augusta Coach Co. v. Lee, 115 Ga. App. 511, 154 S.E.2d 680 (1967); Clark v. State, 142 Ga. App. 851, 237 S.E.2d 459 (1977); Wallace v. State, 151 Ga. App. 171, 259 S.E.2d 172 (1979); Doughty v.

Trial court did not err in admitting, pursuant to the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule, the testimony of a police officer about the victim's oral statement to the officer and the victim's written statement that the victim made a few moments after making the oral statement, as both statements by the victim were made at a time when the victim was still under the influence of defendant's kidnapping of the victim and the victim's children; indeed, at the time the victim made the statements, the victim was still visibly shaken, and the victim's face was red, puffy, and swollen. White v. State, 265 Ga. App. 117, 592 S.E.2d 905 (2004).

Res gestae must be contemporaneous with main transaction. — Declarations to be a part of the res gestae must be contemporaneous with the main fact the declarations are intended to explain. If the declarations are made after the transaction, and therefore not contemporaneous with it, such declarations are a mere narrative of the past occurrence. Thomas v. State, 67 Ga. 460 (1881); Sullivan v. State, 101 Ga. 800, 29 S.E. 16 (1897).

Res gestae of a transaction is what is done during the progress of the transaction, or so nearly upon the actual occurrence as fairly to be treated as contemporaneous with the transaction. Hall v. State, 48 Ga. 607 (1873); Lyles v. State, 130 Ga. 294, 60 S.E. 578 (1908); Walker v. State, 137 Ga. 398, 73 S.E. 368 (1912); Hunter v. State, 147 Ga. 823, 95 S.E. 668 (1918).

Testimony of a police officer regarding an eyewitness statement to the police at the scene that the defendant was driving in the left lane and that the plaintiff drove into the side of the truck after "not really stopping" in the median was admissible as part of the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule. Cleveland v. Bryant, 236 Ga. App. 459, 512 S.E.2d 360 (1999).

Res gestae need not be precisely concurrent in time. — Declarations, to be a part of the res gestae must be contemporaneous with the main fact, but to be contemporaneous, the declarations are not required to be precisely concurrent in point of time. Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615 (1852).

Declarations to be part of the res gestae need not be precisely concurrent in point of time, if the declarations spring out of the transaction and are made so near to it as to preclude reasonably the idea of deliberation. Walker v. State, 139 Ga. 398, 73 S.E. 368 (1912).

Declarations, to be a part of the res gestae, must be contemporaneous with the main fact but need not be precisely concurrent in point of time; it is sufficient if such declarations spring out of the transaction, if the declarations elucidate the transaction, if voluntary and if made at such time as reasonably to exclude the idea of design. Brown v. City of Fitzgerald, 177 Ga. App. 859, 341 S.E.2d 476 (1986).

Occurrence not necessarily limited in time. — Main fact or transaction from which the res gestae springs is not necessarily limited as to time; it may be a length of time in the action. Townsend v. State, 127 Ga. App. 797, 195 S.E.2d 474 (1972).

Admissible as part of continuous transaction. — Evidence relating to an attempted cocaine deal that failed to materialize was admissible since the attempted deal was part of a continuous transaction. Brewer v. State, 224 Ga. App. 656, 481 S.E.2d 608 (1997).

Narratives of past occurrences are not admissible. — Principal point to be observed in all cases is whether the declarations offered in proof were contemporaneous with the main fact under consideration; for if the declarations are merely the narrative of a past occurrence, the declarations cannot be received in evidence. Bulter v. Stewart, 112 Ga. App. 293, 145 S.E.2d 47 (1965).

No precise point of time can be fixed, a priori, when the res gestae ends. — Each case turns on its own circumstances. Indeed, the inquiry is rather into events, than into the precise time which has elapsed. Hall v. State, 48 Ga. 607 (1873); Lyles v. State, 130 Ga. 294, 60 S.E. 578 (1908); Walker v. State, 137 Ga. 398, 73 S.E. 368 (1912); Hunter v. State, 147 Ga. 823, 95 S.E. 668 (1918); O'Neal v. State, 172 Ga. 526, 158 S.E. 51 (1931); Dye v. State, 218 Ga. 330, 127 S.E.2d 674 (1962); Bunn v. State, 144 Ga. App. 879, 243 S.E.2d 105 (1978); Wallace v. State, 151 Ga. App. 171, 259 S.E.2d 172 (1979).

Mere question of lapse of time not controlling. — In determining whether declarations should be received as a part of the res gestae of an occurrence, the mere question of the lapse of time is not controlling. Berry v. Dinsmore, 115 Ga. App. 256, 154 S.E.2d 653 (1967); Augusta Coach Co. v. Lee, 115 Ga. App. 511, 154 S.E.2d 689 (1967).

Ultimate test is spontaneity and logical relation to main event. — Ultimate test of whether a statement is part of the res gestae is the statement's spontaneity and logical relation to the main event, that is, if it is a natural and probable consequence from the act contemporaneous with the main fact, but it need not be precisely concurrent in point of time. C.A.J. v. State, 127 Ga. App. 813, 195 S.E.2d 225 (1973).

When declarations must be regarded as contemporaneous. — If the declarations appear to spring out of the transaction, if the declarations elucidate the transaction, if the declarations are voluntary and spontaneous, and if the declarations are made at a time so near to the transaction as reasonably to preclude the idea of deliberate design, then are the declarations to be regarded as contemporaneous. Southern Ry. v. Brown, 126 Ga. 1, 54 S.E. 911 (1906); Standard Oil Co. v. Reagan, 15 Ga. App. 571, 84 S.E. 69 (1915); Hodge v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 57 Ga. App. 403, 195 S.E. 765 (1938); Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. App. 472, 56 S.E.2d 305 (1949); Clark v. State, 142 Ga. App. 851, 237 S.E.2d 459 (1977); Wallace v. State, 151 Ga. App. 171, 259 S.E.2d 172 (1979).

Statements made indefinite time after main fact are not res gestae. — Sayings are not admissible as a part of the res gestae if it appears from the evidence that the statements were uttered at an indefinite time after the happening of the thing to which the statements relate. Sims v. Macon & W.R.R., 28 Ga. 93 (1859).

Trial court did not err by excluding testimony of a disabled child's mother that the child told the mother that a special education paraprofessional had sexually molested the child because the plaintiffs were unable to establish when the statements were made in relation to the alleged event. Harper v. Patterson, 270 Ga. App. 437, 606 S.E.2d 887 (2004).

Statements three-and-one-half hours after incident inadmissible. — Statements to a police officer by the victim in a prosecution for battery which were made three-and-one-half hours after the incident and which bore no mark of spontaneity or other such state of mind undeniably free of conscious device or afterthought were not part of the res gestae; as pure hearsay, the statements were inadmissible since the state did not show "necessity," to wit, that the declarant was unavailable and that it made reasonable efforts to secure the presence of the declarant. Wilbourne v. State, 214 Ga. App. 371, 448 S.E.2d 37 (1994).

Statements hours after incident admissible. — Two statements made by defendant's wife, one four hours after the incident and the second four hours later, were part of the res gestae since the statements were made while she was still laboring under the excitement and strain of the event. Park v. State, 230 Ga. App. 274, 495 S.E.2d 886 (1998).

Statements at scene of arrest. — Statement made by the passenger in an automobile driven by defendant charged with driving under the influence of alcohol that defendant had consumed more alcohol than the passenger had, made after defendant was arrested and the police were inquiring about the passenger's ability to drive defendant's vehicle away from the scene, was not part of the res gestae of the act concerning which the statement was made. Priebe v. State, 250 Ga. App. 725, 553 S.E.2d 5 (2001).

Spontaneity

Spontaneous declaration doctrine. — That part of this statute which admits declarations so nearly connected with the act as to be free from all suspicion of device or afterthought in evidence is but a statement of the spontaneous declaration doctrine which is an exception to the rule against hearsay. Glens Falls Indem. Co. v. Gottlieb, 80 Ga. App. 634, 56 S.E.2d 799 (1949) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3).

When the statement of a passenger in an accident victim's car was made almost immediately after the crash as a spontaneous reaction to a startling event, rather than as a result of reflective thought, the testifying as to that statement by a third party was precisely the kind of excited utterance contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3, and was admissible as part of the res gestae. Copeland v. State, 235 Ga. App. 682, 510 S.E.2d 124 (1998).

Declarations must be free from suspicion of device or afterthought. — Proximity of time in which declarations were made to the main transaction is not the only test of their admissibility as part of the res gestae, but the declarations must also be free from all suspicion of device or afterthought. Augusta & Summerville R.R. v. Randall, 79 Ga. 304, 4 S.E. 674 (1887); Savannah, Fla. & W. Ry. v. Holland, 82 Ga. 257, 10 S.E. 200, 14 Am. St. R. 158 (1889); Shapiro Packing Co. v. Landrum, 109 Ga. App. 519, 136 S.E.2d 446 (1964).

Trial court did not err in admitting testimony about statements defendant and defendant's cousin made to a witness at the time of the theft as defendant's arguments that admission of such evidence should not have been allowed because the statements were not "free from all suspicion of device or afterthought" lacked merit since O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3 referred to the statement at the time it was made, and not to the witness's testimony relating what was said. Wilson v. State, 258 Ga. App. 166, 573 S.E.2d 432 (2002).

Narrative recollections inadmissible. — Only the spontaneous declarations which spring out of the event are admissible. Narrative statements of the history of the event, made after the declarant has had time to reflect on the occurrence, are not admissible. Williams v. State, 144 Ga. App. 130, 240 S.E.2d 890 (1977).

Victim's narrative statement given to a police officer at a police station did not qualify as res gestae. Cartwright v. State, 242 Ga. App. 825, 531 S.E.2d 399 (2000).

Narratives must be closely scrutinized. — When a statement is narrative rather than exclamatory, the circumstances must be closely scrutinized because a narrative is generally the result of afterthought. Clark v. State, 142 Ga. App. 851, 237 S.E.2d 459 (1977).

Mere fact that the statement was elicited by an inquiry does not necessarily deprive the statement of its spontaneity prerequisite for admission. United Motor Freight Term. Co. v. Hixon, 77 Ga. App. 506, 48 S.E.2d 769 (1948).

Although statements lacked spontaneity because the statements were made in answer to a question, this fact alone will not render the statements inadmissible as part of the res gestae. Thomas v. State, 242 Ga. 712, 251 S.E.2d 294 (1978).

Excited utterance. — Witness's testimony that the brother of a juvenile defendant told the witness, "My brother just shot someone," was not inadmissible hearsay; as the brother testified that the brother had not made such a statement, the testimony was admissible as an inconsistent statement, and it was also admissible as an excited utterance, as the statement was made by the brother after receiving a startling text message. In the Interest of B.S., 284 Ga. App. 680, 644 S.E.2d 527 (2007).

Statements by bystanders that a defendant threw something as the defendant fled from the police were admissible under the excited utterance/res gestae exception to the hearsay rule as the statements were made during a sufficiently startling event—the defendant running by the defendant as the police were in pursuit—and the statements were made without premeditation or afterthought but with sufficient personal knowledge. Williams v. State, 292 Ga. App. 892, 666 S.E.2d 18 (2008).

Declarant

Declarant need not be party to suit. — It is not required that the res gestae statement be excluded solely because the declarant is not a party to the suit or because the declaration was not made between a witness and a party. Piedmont Life Ins. Co. v. Lea, 140 Ga. App. 400, 231 S.E.2d 147 (1976).

Former Code 1933, §§ 38-305 and 38-414 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-3 and 24-3-52) were applicable only when there was testimony by a third party as to a declaration, admission, or confession of a conspirator and had no application when no such testimony was offered, but the accomplice merely testified against the defendant on the trial of the case. Banks v. State, 113 Ga. App. 661, 149 S.E.2d 415 (1966).

No unavailability requirement. — Trial court did not err in admitting the victim's oral statement to a police officer, through the police officer's testimony, or the victim's written statement made a few moments after the victim made the oral statement to the police officer pursuant to the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule as the statements were made while the victim was still under the influence of defendant's criminal act; also, the state was not required to show that the declarant was unavailable before the statements could be admitted. White v. State, 265 Ga. App. 117, 592 S.E.2d 905 (2004).

Death of the person making the statements which form a part of the res gestae is no ground for the statements exclusion from evidence. Augusta Factory v. Barnes, 72 Ga. 217, 53 Am. R. 838 (1884); Callahan v. State, 229 Ga. 737, 194 S.E.2d 431 (1972).

Declarant not in control of faculties. — It is not error to admit the declarations of a victim who is not a person in control of the victim's faculties, even when such declarations and the victim's accompanying physical actions display severe disorientation, as well as confusion as to where the victim was, what was happening, and who was around the victim. Andrews v. State, 249 Ga. 223, 290 S.E.2d 71 (1982).

Discretion of Court

Admission is discretionary because no rule applicable in all cases. — No definition of res gestae can be found so comprehensive as to embrace all cases. Hence, it is left to the sound discretion of the courts what the court shall admit to the jury along with the main facts as part of the res gestae. Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615 (1852); Augusta & Summerville R.R. v. Randall, 79 Ga. 304, 4 S.E. 674 (1887); Southern Ry. v. Brown, 126 Ga. 1, 54 S.E. 911 (1906); Standard Oil Co. v. Reagan, 15 Ga. App. 571, 84 S.E. 69 (1915); Townsend v. State, 127 Ga. App. 797, 195 S.E.2d 474 (1972); Henry v. State, 176 Ga. App. 462, 336 S.E.2d 588 (1985).

Admissibility of declarations as res gestae testimony does not depend upon any arbitrary time or general rule for all cases, but is left to the sound discretion of court in determining from the time, circumstances, and statements in question, whether declarations meet requirements of being free from all suspicion of device or afterthought. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. App. 472, 56 S.E.2d 305 (1949); Wallace v. State, 151 Ga. App. 171, 259 S.E.2d 172 (1979); South Ga. Brokers, Inc. v. Fidelity Bankers Life Ins. Co., 153 Ga. App. 503, 265 S.E.2d 815 (1980).

Admissibility of declarations as part of the res gestae is left to the sound discretion of the trial court, considering the time, circumstances, and statements in question. Ward v.

State, 186 Ga. App. 503, 368 S.E.2d 139 (1988); Shortes v. State, 193 Ga. App. 859, 389 S.E.2d 354 (1989), cert. denied, 193 Ga. App. 911, 389 S.E.2d 354 (1989).

Statute concerns merely the admissibility of evidence, which is a question for the court, the weight to be given which is for the jury. Tiller v. State, 196 Ga. 508, 26 S.E.2d 883 (1943); Townsend v. State, 127 Ga. App. 797, 195 S.E.2d 474 (1972) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3).

Whether statements claimed to be a part of the res gestae are really such is a question of law to be determined by the court. Shapiro Packing Co. v. Landrum, 109 Ga. App. 519, 136 S.E.2d 446 (1964).

Determination of res gestae within court's sound discretion. — Question of a given declaration's being a part of the res gestae is for the determination of the trial court and within the court's sound discretion. Augusta Coach Co. v. Lee, 115 Ga. App. 511, 154 S.E.2d 689 (1967); Thomas v. State, 242 Ga. 712, 251 S.E.2d 294 (1978).

In a wrongful interference with business relations and slander suit, a trial court properly excluded evidence sought to be introduced by the suing insurance company that customers canceled policies because of misrepresentations made by the defending insurance company since the suing company and one of the company's agents failed to show, inter alia, that any purported statement by one of many policyholders located in 23 states over an extended period of time was contemporaneous with a main fact, which in the case, would have been any alleged tortious statement by an agent of the defending insurance company. Am. Southern Ins. Group, Inc. v. Goldstein, 291 Ga. App. 1, 660 S.E.2d 810 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 680 (Ga. 2008).

With regard to defendant's conviction for armed robbery and other crimes, the trial court properly allowed an officer to testify to what an adult in an apartment kitchen saw as the immediacy and urgency of the statement by the upset adult, who had just witnessed several men enter another apartment, made to the officer approaching the scene within minutes of the emergency call, authorized the trial court in the court's discretion to admit the statement as res gestae. Jennings v.

Courts must be allowed some latitude. — What is the res gestae of a given transaction must depend upon the transaction's own peculiarities of character and circumstances; courts must be allowed some latitude in this matter. Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. App. 472, 56 S.E.2d 305 (1949).

Trial judge's determination not disturbed unless clearly erroneous. — Trial judge's determination that evidence is admissible as part of the res gestae will not be disturbed unless the determination is clearly erroneous. Robinson v. State, 197 Ga. App. 600, 399 S.E.2d 94 (1990).

Burglary conviction was upheld on appeal as: (1) sufficient evidence was presented that the defendant entered the victim's home without permission with the intent to commit a theft therein; and (2) the state properly presented res gestae evidence, even if such improperly placed the defendant's character in evidence. Meyers v. State, 281 Ga. App. 670, 637 S.E.2d 78 (2006).

Application and Examples1. Accounts

Settlements of accounts. — What parties say at the time of making up a settlement of accounts between the parties, as to the amount due from the one to the other, is a part of the res gestae, and admissible in evidence. Buttram v. Jackson, 32 Ga. 409 (1861).

2. Agents

Statements of agent are admissible against the agent's principal. — Statements of the defendant's agent to the plaintiff in the course of a business transaction are admissible in behalf of the defendant as a part of the res gestae. Jones v. Norris N. Smith Co., 31 Ga. App. 383, 120 S.E. 804 (1923).

Agency must be established independently. — Where extraneous circumstances, independently of and without regard to the declarations of the alleged agent personally, clearly tend to establish the fact of agency, the agent's declarations may be admitted and considered as a part of the res gestae of the transaction; but the declarations of an alleged agent, when standing alone, are never admissible to prove agency. Waddington v. Stores Mut. Protective Ass'n, 52 Ga. App. 331, 183 S.E. 143 (1935).

3. Assignments

Declarations of an assignor, made after the execution of the deed of assignment, were inadmissible for the purpose of annulling the assignment or of recovering property embraced in the deed because such declarations did not accompany the making of the deed, or were so nearly connected therewith as to form part of the res gestae. Wright v. Zeigler Bros., 70 Ga. 501 (1883).

4. Bystanders

An exclamation of a bystander which merely expresses an opinion or conclusion is inadmissible as res gestae. South Ga. Broker, Inc. v. Fidelity Bankers Life Ins. Co., 153 Ga. App. 503, 265 S.E.2d 815 (1980).

Accident witness's statement admissible. — Statement of unidentified declarant fell within res gestae exception since three witnesses to an accident overheard the declarant state within 15 minutes of the event, that defendant was involved and was wearing a flowered shirt because the declaration was the natural result of the incident and clarified the incident, was voluntary and spontaneous and was made at a time so close to the incident that the idea of any deliberate design was reasonably precluded. Williams v. Melton, 733 F.2d 1492 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1073, 105 S. Ct. 567, 83 L. Ed. 2d 508 (1984).

Statement a witness heard bystander make at the scene of the crime, after the crime occurred, is not part of the res gestae. Jones v. State, 167 Ga. App. 847, 307 S.E.2d 735 (1983).

Statements of bystanders held admissible as res gestae in the following cases. — See New Winder Lumber Co. v. Payne, 40 Ga. App. 188, 149 S.E. 85 (1929); Bridges v. State, 242 Ga. 251, 248 S.E.2d 647 (1978); Ewald v. State, 156 Ga. App. 68, 274 S.E.2d 31 (1980); Super Disc. Mkts., Inc. v. Coney, 210 Ga. App. 659, 436 S.E.2d 803 (1993); Gilbert v. State, 241 Ga. App. 57, 526 S.E.2d 88 (1999); Espy v. State, 246 Ga. App. 1, 539 S.E.2d 513 (2000); Couch v. State, 246 Ga. App. 106, 539 S.E.2d 609 (2000).

In a speeding and eluding prosecution, under the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3, an officer was properly allowed to testify that a bystander had asked the officer whether the officer was searching for a blue sports car and then pointed to a direction. Since no testimonial statement was involved, the defendant's rights to confrontation as interpreted by Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36 (2004), were not violated. Segel v. State, 293 Ga. App. 506, 667 S.E.2d 670 (2008).

Statement of witness to murder properly admitted. — Hearsay statement of a witness to a murder was properly admitted as an excited utterance under circumstances in which, when police arrived at the crime scene police saw the witness standing over the victim, sufficiently upset that the witness could not speak, and minutes later, the witness, who was described as still visibly distraught, upset, cursing, crying, almost like the witness was in shock, told an investigator the witness was in the witness's kitchen when the witness saw the two defendants outside with the victim with the victim's hands up in the air, heard gunshots and fell to the ground, and when the witness stood up, the witness saw the defendants running around the building; the witness's aunt, the victim's girlfriend, testified that when she arrived at the crime scene shortly after the shootings she saw the witness standing near the victim crying profusely, and, when she asked the witness what happened, the witness identified the defendants as the shooters and said that the defendants ran to the apartment of an individual associated with the defendants. Daniel v. State, 285 Ga. 406, 677 S.E.2d 120 (2009).

Statements by bystanders held inadmissible as res gestae in the following cases. — See Everready Cab Co. v. Wilhite, 66 Ga. App. 815, 19 S.E.2d 343 (1942) (statement made prior to accident); Camp v. Ledford, 103 Ga. App. 197, 119 S.E.2d 54 (1961) (unidentified doctor at scene of accident).

9-1-1 call by victim's child. — Admission of a 9-1-1 call placed by the child of a battery victim was proper because, among other reasons, the call was placed moments after the child had witnessed the attack, and was thus part of the res gestae. Kuykendoll v. State, 278 Ga. App. 369, 629 S.E.2d 32 (2006).

influence of alcohol to the extent of being a less safe driver in violation of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(a)(1), admission of a recording of a 9-1-1 call made by a caller who was following the defendant's vehicle was proper. Admission of the call did not violate the confrontation clause of the sixth amendment because the call's primary purpose was to prevent immediate harm to the public, not to establish evidentiary facts for a future prosecution, and the call was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3 because the caller had not deliberated about the statement and had personal knowledge of what the caller described to the 9-1-1 operator. Key v. State, 289 Ga. App. 317, 657 S.E.2d 273 (2008).

9-1-1 calls by bystanders admissible. — Allowing a jury to hear an audiotape of two 9-1-1 calls made by bystanders to report a shooting was proper because, inter alia, the calls were placed within a short time after the shooting, and the callers had no opportunity to deliberate about their statements or be influenced by others; thus, the evidence was admissible under the O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3 res gestae exception to the hearsay rule. Glover v. State, 285 Ga. 461, 678 S.E.2d 476 (2009).

5. Children

Child's statements admissible though not competent witness. — Even though a child may be too young to be a competent witness this does not preclude admission of the child's declaration as part of the res gestae, if otherwise admissible. Williams v. State, 144 Ga. App. 130, 240 S.E.2d 890 (1977).

Standing alone, the fact that a declarant is a child of tender years cannot be said to free the statements from the suspicion of device or afterthought. Hight v. Butler, 230 Ga. 533, 198 S.E.2d 169 (1973); Stamper v. State, 235 Ga. 165, 219 S.E.2d 140 (1975).

Age may be taken into consideration. — Fact that the declarant is a child of tender years may be taken into consideration in determining whether, under the res gestae rule, the declarant's declarations are so free from the suspicion of afterthought as to be admissible in evidence. Berry v. State, 9 Ga. App. 868, 72 S.E. 433 (1911).

Child victim's responses to medical questions admissible. — Testimony of a doctor who related a child victim's responses to medical questions for purposes of diagnosis and treatment was admissible under the exception to the hearsay rule provided by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3 since where the responses were given within a matter of minutes after the patient was taken to the hospital. Allen v. State, 174 Ga. App. 206, 329 S.E.2d 586 (1985).

Statements made several days after incident not admissible. — When statements by a victim of cruelty to children were made several days after the incident and the child had several opportunities to report the incidents outside the presence of the child's parents and the reports were made over a period of several days in response to specific questions and there was no medically acceptable testimony that the child was laboring under some disability and the statements were narrative in form rather than spontaneously given, such statements lacked contemporaneity and spontaneity to such a degree as to be extremely suspect and therefore in violation of the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule. Allen v. State, 174 Ga. App. 206, 329 S.E.2d 586 (1985).

Statements to parent in evening after afternoon molestation admissible. — When eight-year-old victim, who was allegedly molested in the afternoon, did not return to the victim's own home until that evening, after the victim's parent had returned from a doctor's appointment, and reported the act of molestation to the victim's parent at that time, which was the victim's first opportunity to do so since leaving the custody of defendant, the parent's testimony concerning the child's statements was admissible under the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule. Moseley v. State, 179 Ga. App. 698, 347 S.E.2d 686 (1986).

Statements by child to parent nearly twenty-four hours after molestation were admissible. Millwood v. State, 174 Ga. App. 113, 329 S.E.2d 273 (1985).

Statement by child to police approximately one year after the alleged molestation was not contemporaneous, was not spontaneous, but was in response to questioning of the police, and thus not a part of the res gestae. Lynn v. State, 181 Ga. App. 461, 352 S.E.2d 602 (1986).

Statements by children held admissible as res gestae in the following cases. — See Ferguson v. Columbus & Rome Ry., 75 Ga. 637 (1885) (cause of injury); Johnson v. State, 142 Ga. App. 560, 236 S.E.2d 552 (1977) (relating details of child molestation).

In the sexual molestation case, the trial court did not err in allowing into evidence the out-of-court statements of the sexual abuse victim's younger sibling who witnessed the molestation; the sibling's statements to the parent were made almost immediately after the defendant molested the victim and were made without premeditation or afterthought pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3. Mikell v. State, 281 Ga. App. 739, 637 S.E.2d 142 (2006).

6. Criminal Law — Defendants

All circumstances of crime making up res gestae may be proved. Duffy v. State, 146 Ga. App. 400, 246 S.E.2d 420 (1978).

Statement must be connected with crime. — Statement made by the accused was not admissible as part of the res gestae since while the statement was made "soon" after the shooting but it did not appear that it was so nearly connected with the homicide as to be "free from all suspicion of device or afterthought." Ingram v. State, 43 Ga. App. 218, 158 S.E. 529 (1931).

Testimony should not have been admitted as part of the res gestae in a charge of two counts of aggravated assault arising from an altercation with the owners of a towing business since the testimony encompassed defendant's behavior during the receipt of medical treatment at some unspecified time after the commission of the charged crimes and did not involve any statements defendant made concerning the assault or any continuation of the defendant's actions at the scene of the crime. Heflin v. State, 204 Ga. App. 161, 418 S.E.2d 770 (1992).

Remark made by one perpetrator to the other as the perpetrators fled from the liquor store where one of the perpetrators had shot the store owner to the van the perpetrators were going to steal to make the perpetrators' getaway was admissible as part of the res gestae. Tesfaye v. State, 275 Ga. 439, 569 S.E.2d 849 (2002).

Evidence that a witness taught defendant how to make methamphetamine was properly admitted at defendant's trial for possession and trafficking the drug because the evidence was part of the main transaction of conspiracy to manufacture methamphetamine and was admitted as part of the res gestae; therefore, there was no error on the part of the trial court by not requiring the state to have complied with the notice and hearing requirements of Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.1 and Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 31.3. Goldsby v. State, 273 Ga. App. 523, 615 S.E.2d 592 (2005).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel as: (1) a hearsay objection to statements the defendant made during an argument and to testimony that the defendant stated that the defendant should have killed the other witnesses would have been futile as the statements were not offered for the truth of the matter asserted; (2) a hearsay objection to a witness's testimony as to the defendant's statements during a van ride would also have been futile as the statements were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3; and (3) counsel's strategic decision to attack certain testimony through cross-examination was not ineffective assistance of counsel. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. 229, 637 S.E.2d 393 (2006).

Trial court properly held that the events leading up to the assault on the victim served to illustrate the defendant's motive in participating with a cohort to steal money from the victim; moreover, even if the defendant reiterated an objection at trial, the statements uttered by the defendant were so connected with the commission of the offense to be admissible. White v. State, 282 Ga. App. 286, 638 S.E.2d 426 (2006).

Coconspirator's statements admissible. — Coconspirator's statements implicating defendant in a conspiracy to kill defendant's spouse were admissible as part of res gestae where made while the coconspirator was exercising control over the victims, and thus during the enterprise. Walker v. State, 213 Ga. App. 407, 444 S.E.2d 824 (1994).

Bruton objection was properly overruled as the codefendant's statement that the codefendant would check with defendant regarding the victim's participation was part of the res gestae, rather than a confession or a statement. Ford v. State, 274 Ga. App. 695, 617 S.E.2d 262 (2005).

Informant's comments. — Comments which an informant made on tape shortly after defendant sold drugs to the informant and left the informant's car were part of the res gestae, and the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by admitting the comments during defendant's trial on charges that defendant sold cocaine. Lyons v. State, 266 Ga. App. 89, 596 S.E.2d 226 (2004).

Declaration held not admissible in favor of accused. — Declaration of another person that the person alone committed the crime for which the defendant was on trial, the declarant not naming the person whom declarant had killed, and it not being shown whether the declarant's declaration was made before or after the crime was committed, or, if after, how long after, was not admissible in evidence in favor of the accused, and as a part of the res gestae. Johnson v. State, 188 Ga. 662, 4 S.E.2d 813 (1939).

Admission of absent codefendant disallowed. — Informant was not allowed to relate what a codefendant said during the course of the crime, nor could the defendant offer testimony regarding what the defendant's absent codefendant told others about the defendant's role in the crime because admission of such declarations would allow a person to subvert the ends of justice by admitting the crime to others and then absenting oneself from the jurisdiction of the court. Roberts v. State, 208 Ga. App. 64, 430 S.E.2d 175 (1993).

Admission of victim's recollection of attacker's statements. — Rape victim's testimony that her attacker stated he was running from the law, had been drinking, was on drugs really bad, and needed money for gas was not impermissible character evidence and was admissible as res gestae. Hardegee v. State, 230 Ga. App. 111, 495 S.E.2d 347 (1998).

Third party overheard on 9-1-1 call. — Because no evidence existed by which the trial court could assess the personal knowledge of the speaker overheard on a 9-1-1 call, who was not the caller, or the reliability of the statement generally, and the evidence against the defendant was less than overwhelming, the trial court's decision to admit the statement under the res gestae exception was clearly erroneous; moreover, given that the jury sent a note to the trial court requesting to hear the recording again, stating that it was "vital" to their deliberations, it was clear that what was said on the recording figured importantly in the jury's deliberations. Orr v. State, 281 Ga. 112, 636 S.E.2d 505 (2006).

Statements by defendants held admissible as res gestae in the following cases. — See Thomas v. State, 27 Ga. 287 (1859) (declaration that shooting was in self-defense); Caito v. State, 130 Ga. App. 831, 204 S.E.2d 765 (1974) (statement that "you got me"); Collins v. State, 243 Ga. 291, 253 S.E.2d 729 (1979), vacated, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980) (bragging of participation in murder).

Defendant could not raise an objection to the admission of defendant's spontaneous statement to police officers executing a search warrant that "you've got me" for the first time on appeal absent plain error. There was no plain error in admitting the statement because: (1) defendant was being detained under O.C.G.A. § 17-5-28, and was not under arrest; (2) defendant was not being interrogated, making Miranda warnings not required; (3) defense counsel cross-examined the officers on the statement; (4) the statement was admissible as a spontaneous statement; and (5) the statement was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3 as a part of the res gestae. Zackery v. State, 262 Ga. App. 646, 586 S.E.2d 346 (2003).

Evidence that the defendant was a drug dealer and gave the police a false name when questioned after the alleged crime was committed was admissible as relevant and part of the res gestae as the former was incidental to and followed directly from the defendant's participation in the sale of marijuana to the victim, and the latter was part of what transpired shortly after the commission of the victim's murder; moreover, this was true even if the defendant's character was incidentally placed in issue. Roberts v. State, 282 Ga. 548, 651 S.E.2d 689 (2007).

In a defendant's prosecution for, inter alia, felony murder, the introduction of a second inmate's statement that the defendant and the second inmate did not mean to kill a third inmate did not violate the defendant's sixth amendment confrontation rights because the voluntary statement, which was made shortly after the third inmate was found in the defendant's cell, was admissible pursuant to the res gestae exception to the rule against hearsay under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3. Butler v. State, 284 Ga. 620, 669 S.E.2d 118 (2008).

Witness statements about another's cry for help admissible. — Evidence was properly admitted by the trial court in defendant's trial for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 since statements of a witness that another screamed for help when the witness saw the victim and defendant fighting were part of the res gestae exception to hearsay pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3. Statements by a witness that defendant was ordered to leave the premises were not hearsay under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1 because the statements were used to explain defendant's motive and conduct of remaining on the premises and waiting for the victim pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2, and statements regarding information from a police report which was not admitted into evidence were deemed harmless as cumulative. Regardless, there was sufficient evidence without the disputed evidentiary rulings to support defendant's conviction based on observations of several witnesses and the cuts on the victim's face and body. Kelley v. State, 260 Ga. App. 238, 581 S.E.2d 584 (2003).

Statement by defendant to father was narrative. — Defendant's statements to law enforcement and to a college intern shortly after the shooting were properly excluded by the trial court. Defendant's statements in the patrol car were not free from all suspicion of device or afterthought because defendant advised a female caller that the defendant could not talk because the defendant was in the back of a patrol car, and asked the caller not to call the defendant back, and defendant's recounting of recent events to the defendant's father was a narrative and not part of the res gestae. Crane v. State, 300 Ga. App. 450, 685 S.E.2d 314 (2009).

Surveillance videotape reflecting circumstances leading up to defendant's arrest was admissible as res gestae. — Because a department store videotape of defendant's spouse stealing items of merchandise from the store was made contemporaneously to the charged crime, which involved defendant leaving the store with merchandise in the defendant's cart for which the defendant had not paid, and because it provided context for the circumstances surrounding defendant's arrest, it was admissible as part of the res gestae of the crime under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3. Wright v. State, 301 Ga. App. 178, 687 S.E.2d 195 (2009).

7. Criminal Law — Investigating Officers

Statements made about a fight. — Statements made to a magistrate about a fight by one of the participants on the same day of the fight, and a short distance from the scene, were held to be not admissible as a part of the res gestae. Cherry v. McCall, 23 Ga. 193 (1857).

Admission of police officer's testimony regarding the substance of what someone told the officer who had moved out of town at the time of trial and was not called as a witness was in error, since this testimony was hearsay and came under no exception to the hearsay rule. Liu's Enters. Corp. v. Li, 204 Ga. App. 397, 419 S.E.2d 511 (1992).

Statement made to an officer after an arrest concerning a course of conduct by the person arrested is not a part of the res gestae but a narrative of events. Jones v. State, 62 Ga. App. 734, 9 S.E.2d 707 (1940).

Statement made to officer at time of arrest. — When the stipulated facts showed the trustworthiness of statement made at time of arrest in that defendant's nephew informed officer that defendant had been operating a motorcycle soon after the occurrence of the contested driving offense; the statement was sufficiently contemporaneous to be a part of the res gestae and was therefore admissible. Jarrett v. State, 265 Ga. 28, 453 S.E.2d 461 (1995).

Statements taken at scene of accident. — Statements made to an investigating officer not more than 20 to 30 minutes after an automobile collision may be allowed as testimony. Land v. McClure, 135 Ga. App. 243, 217 S.E.2d 600 (1975).

Trial court did not err in overruling the defendant's hearsay objections to the testimony of a co-indictee's girlfriend that he told her by phone that the defendant was shooting at the victim and to the testimony of the responding police officer and another person that the victim's fiancée, right after the shooting while she was upset and crying, identified the defendant as the shooter because the statements were admissible as part of the res gestae of the crime; both of the declarants testified at trial and were subject to questioning by the defense, and the declarants made the statements either during the shooting or immediately thereafter when crying and upset. McIlwain v. State, No. S10A0068, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 318 (Apr. 19, 2010).

Observations by officer held admissible.

— Testimony of an officer that the officer noticed bruises on the rape victim's neck is admissible. Zilinmon v. State, 234 Ga. 535, 216 S.E.2d 830 (1975), overruled on other grounds by Drinkard v. Walker, 281 Ga. 211, 636 S.E.2d 530 (2006).

Telephone calls received by officer.

— With regard to a defendant's conviction for possessing cocaine, the trial court did not err by admitting evidence of telephone conversations between a deputy and unknown callers which occurred during the time the deputy was serving a temporary protective order and warrant for a probation violation on the defendant at the defendant's apartment because the telephone conversations occurred contemporaneously with the seizure of the drugs found in the apartment and tended to indicate that the drugs had not been brought to the apartment by a casual guest, but belonged to someone who was receiving calls about the drugs at the apartment. Stewart v. State, 285 Ga. App. 760, 647 S.E.2d 411 (2007).

Statement admissible despite misidentification. — Statement given to a police officer shortly after a stabbing incident was admissible, and the fact that the witness may have misidentified the suspect did not render the statement inadmissible. Taylor v. State, 226 Ga. App. 339, 486 S.E.2d 601 (1997).

Statement by victim to officer minutes after crime. — Trial court did not improperly rely on hearsay in determining whether reasonable suspicions existed to detain defendant as the burglary victim's description of the perpetrator of the burglary to the police officer did not go to the issue of whether defendant was guilty or innocent, but instead went to whether reasonable suspicion existed to perform a Terry detention;

moreover, the burglary victim's description given on the scene to the officer only minutes after the perpetrator fled was admissible under the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule. Spear v. State, 259 Ga. App. 803, 578 S.E.2d 504 (2003).

Witness's out-of-court statement to officer admissible. — Police officer's testimony as to out-of-court statements made by a witness that the witness had hidden in a closet while defendant fired shots through the wall and closet door was admissible as part of the res gestae. Morris v. State, 228 Ga. App. 90, 491 S.E.2d 190 (1997).

8. Criminal Law — Other Crimes

Evidence of other crimes is admissible when the extraneous crime forms a part of the res gestae. Bradley v. State, 154 Ga. App. 333, 268 S.E.2d 388 (1980); Chambers v. State, 154 Ga. App. 620, 269 S.E.2d 42 (1980).

Generally, in the prosecution for a particular offense, evidence of another distinct crime, wholly independent from that which the accused is on trial, is inadmissible, but if the allegedly separate offense was a part of the same incident for which the accused is being tried and forms a part of the res gestae, the evidence is admissible, and the fact that such part of the res gestae incidentally placed defendant's character in issue does not render the evidence inadmissible. Yarbrough v. State, 186 Ga. App. 845, 368 S.E.2d 802 (1988).

Fact that relevant evidence may indicate a crime or incidentally place a defendant's character in issue does not render the evidence inadmissible. Martin v. State, 219 Ga. App. 277, 464 S.E.2d 872 (1995); Larkin v. State, 230 Ga. App. 129, 495 S.E.2d 605 (1998).

Prosecutor's reference to other crime proper. — Trial court's denial of defendant's motion for mistrial for an argument made during an opening statement to the jury that the prosecutor expected the evidence to show "defendant was asking for cocaine, said, 'Where is the cocaine ...,'" was not error although the defendant had not been charged with any offense involving drugs as the state is entitled to inform the jury of all the circumstances surrounding the commission of the crime or crimes charged, even though it may have incidentally placed the defendant's character in evidence. Houston v. State, 187 Ga. App. 335, 370 S.E.2d 178 (1988).

Statements are a part of the res gestae and are admissible as such, notwithstanding the fact the statements may show other criminal conduct on the part of the one who made the statement. Potts v. State, 241 Ga. 67, 243 S.E.2d 510 (1978), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 876, 110 S. Ct. 214, 107 L. Ed. 2d 166 (1989); Lord v. State, 156 Ga. App. 492, 274 S.E.2d 641 (1980), rev'd on other grounds, Potts v. Zant, 734 F.2d 526 (11th Cir. 1984).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion in limine to exclude evidence of the defendant's probation status, and the underlying probation offense, as that evidence was properly admitted as part of the res gestae since the conduct of the officer flowed very directly from the statements made during the consensual encounter. Hampton v. State, 287 Ga. App. 896, 652 S.E.2d 915 (2007).

Statement was admissible as part of res gestae, even if statement incidentally placed defendant's character in evidence. — Defendant's claim that defendant's character was impermissibly placed in issue when a similar transaction witness testified that immediately after defendant had raped the witness, the defendant lay beside the victim and told the victim that "he had done that to five other women" was rejected as defendant failed to object to the testimony until after the jury was charged; moreover, had defendant raised a timely objection, the testimony still would have been admissible as part of the res gestae, even if the testimony incidentally placed defendant's character in evidence. Harden v. State, 272 Ga. App. 559, 612 S.E.2d 877 (2005).

Uncharged crimes that occurred at same time as charged offenses. — Victim's testimony about seeing the defendant and the codefendant rob another person was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3 as part of the res gestae of the armed robbery and aggravated assault against the victim as the other act occurred in the same place and during the same time that the defendant and codefendant were committing the crimes against the victim. Herieia v. State, 297 Ga. App. 872, 678 S.E.2d 548 (2009).

Offenses independent from prosecution. — Generally, in the prosecution for a particular offense, evidence of another offense wholly independent from the one being prosecuted is inadmissible. But, if the statement by the defendant forms a part of the same transaction of the one being prosecuted, it is a part of the res gestae and is admissible. The fact that it shows another crime and incidentally places the defendant's character in issue does not render the statement inadmissible. Mosley v. State, 150 Ga. App. 802, 258 S.E.2d 608 (1979).

Because facts surrounding the defendant's commission of a prior crime were similar enough to the charged crimes evidence of the prior crime was properly admitted despite the defendant's hearsay claim since, the state established that it was introducing the evidence for an appropriate purpose, there was sufficient similarity between the independent offense and the crime charged, and proof of the former tended to show the latter. Kimbrough v. State, 281 Ga. 885, 644 S.E.2d 125 (2007).

9. Criminal Law — Victims

Declarations as natural consequence of crime are admissible. — Victim's declarations, made shortly after the commission of the crime and as a natural consequence thereof, were admissible in evidence as part of the res gestae. Horn v. State, 140 Ga. App. 592, 231 S.E.2d 414 (1976).

Statements made during rape. — In a rape prosecution, statements the victim made to defendant and defendant's codefendant while the crime was in progress were admissible because the statements were part of the res gestae of the crime. Cole v. State, 279 Ga. App. 219, 630 S.E.2d 817 (2006).

Statements within minutes of crime. — Testimony as to statements of a victim of armed robbery made within a few minutes after the incident was admissible. Perkins v. State, 226 Ga. App. 613, 487 S.E.2d 365 (1997).

Absent victim's statements to the officer who first responded to the emergency call and the victim's first conversation with a detective at the hospital shortly after commission of the crime were admissible as part of the res gestae. Jay v. State, 232 Ga. App. 661, 503 S.E.2d 563 (1998).

Trial court did not err in admitting the statements the domestic violence victim made to the police officer at the crime scene as the statements were made an hour or less after the officer arrived at the scene and while the victim was still under the effects of the crimes; accordingly, the statements were admissible as part of res gestae. Mize v. State, 262 Ga. App. 486, 585 S.E.2d 913 (2003).

Trial counsel's failure to object to admission of the victim's statement to the witness that victim and defendant had just had sex, in a case in which defendant was being prosecuted for child molestation and statutory rape did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel, as the victim made the statement to the witness moments after the sex occurred, and, thus, the statement was admissible as res gestae evidence. Drummond v. State, 275 Ga. App. 86, 619 S.E.2d 784 (2005).

Victim's statement made within minutes of a crime to an officer was admissible as part of the res gestae, under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3, including the fact that the victim recognized one of the perpetrators of the crime as the defendant. Inman v. State, 281 Ga. 67, 635 S.E.2d 125 (2006), cert. denied, U.S. , 128 S. Ct. 42; 169 L. Ed. 2d 40 (2007).

Murder victim's statements to neighbors, paramedics, and an officer identifying the defendant as the shooter were nontestimonial as the statements were made while the incident was still ongoing and the perpetrator was at large. Thus, the confrontation clause was not implicated, and the admission of the statements under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3, the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule, did not violate the defendant's sixth amendment rights. Thomas v. State, 284 Ga. 540, 668 S.E.2d 711 (2008).

An armed robbery defendant's counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the testimony of the detective as to what the victim and a witness said when the detective arrived at the bank, seven minutes after the robbery. There was no showing that the statements were made as the result of any afterthought; they were therefore admissible as res gestae under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3. Collier v. State, No. A09A1764, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 292 (Mar. 23, 2010).

Statement shortly after crime occurred. — Trial court was not clearly erroneous in admitting testimony as to a statement made by an earlier victim as to a sexual assault by defendant under the res gestae exception; the statement was made shortly after the crime occurred when the victim was still upset and shaking. Leaptrot v. State, 272 Ga. App. 587, 612 S.E.2d 887 (2005).

Defendant's claim that trial counsel was ineffective for allowing the prosecutor to "elicit extensive hearsay" regarding what the victim told a friend about the rape was rejected as counsel made a hearsay objection to the testimony which was sustained in part; the trial court permitted the victim's outcry witness to testify about what the victim said because those statements were made immediately after the rape and, therefore, constituted admissible res gestae evidence. Powell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 628, 612 S.E.2d 916 (2005).

Trial court properly admitted the excited utterances of an armed robbery victim as part of the res gestae free from all suspicion of device or afterthought; moreover, Crawford did not apply as the statements were not made to a police officer during a subsequent investigation of the crime, nor were the statements made to an officer or 9-1-1 operator for the purpose of proving a fact regarding some past event. Fields v. State, 283 Ga. App. 208, 641 S.E.2d 218 (2007).

Statements within hours of crime. — Evidence showed that the victim's statements were all consistent and delivered within a few hours of the time the victim said the victim escaped captivity; trial court did not err in concluding that the statements were free from suspicion of device or afterthought so as to allow the statements' admission as an exception to the hearsay exclusion. Underwood v. State, 250 Ga. App. 764, 552 S.E.2d 915 (2001).

Statements made by a child victim within hours of an alleged sexual assault were made at a time so nearly connected with the incident so as to be free from all suspicion, device, or afterthought, and hence, were admissible as part of res gestae. Freeman v. State, 282 Ga. App. 185, 638 S.E.2d 358 (2006).

Victim's on-the-scene description admissible. — There was no error in allowing the investigating officer to relate for the jury the distraught victim's on-the-scene description of the attack upon the victim, including the victim's description of the assailant, even though this evidence was more narrative than exclamatory. McKinney v. State, 218 Ga. App. 633, 463 S.E.2d 136 (1995); Basu v. State, 228 Ga. App. 591, 492 S.E.2d 329 (1997).

When an outcry is communicated to witnesses immediately after a victim locates the witnesses, which is within one hour after the offense, these declarations, made so shortly after the commission of the crime, constitute part of the res gestae. Tucker v. State, 243 Ga. 683, 256 S.E.2d 365 (1979).

Robbery victim's statements to the arresting officer and emergency room physician identifying the victim's assailant as the victim's great grandson were so closely connected to the offense as to be inherently reliable, particularly in light of the victim's refusal to testify once the victim realized the penal consequences to the defendant. Jenkins v. State, 232 Ga. App. 395, 501 S.E.2d 891 (1998).

Conversations before crime not part of res gestae. — Testimony concerning a conversation between deceased victim and a murder suspect occurring some hours before the murder was not part of the res gestae because it did not lead to the murder, and was in no way connected with the murder. Mitchell v. State, 71 Ga. 128 (1883).

Statements preceding crime. — Statement from deceased child declarant that there was no need for the child's mother to call the school and confirm that the child arrived safely on the day the child disappeared was not part of the res gestae as it was not made contemporaneously with, or in relation to, the commission of the crimes for which defendant was being tried; appellate court believed that the statement was merely intended to demonstrate the child's nature and trusting disposition. Head v. State, 276 Ga. 131, 575 S.E.2d 883 (2003).

Audiotape of 9-1-1 calls. — In a prosecution for rape, kidnapping, assault, and sodomy, it was not error to allow the state to play a 9-1-1 audiotape of calls made by the victim and witnesses during the attack. Moore v. State, 217 Ga. App. 207, 456 S.E.2d 708 (1995).

When defendant kidnapped the victim in front of the victim's children, the victim and the children were part of res gestae since the victim's statements were made while the incident was in progress, one of the children was on the telephone with the 9-1-1 operator recounting the altercation as the altercation occurred, and a policeman found the children distraught and holding makeshift weapons; as the statements sprang out of the incident, the statements were admissible. Jackson v. State, 255 Ga. App. 279, 564 S.E.2d 865 (2002).

When a tape of a 9-1-1 call was made contemporaneous with the call, the content of the call showed that the call was contemporaneous with the burglary at issue, the 9-1-1 operator testified that the tape was a fair and accurate depiction of the actual conversation, the caller's statements were made while the incident was actually in progress, and the statements were made without premeditation or afterthought, a trial court correctly allowed admission of the tape as part of the res gestae of the burglary. Sweney v. State, 265 Ga. App. 21, 593 S.E.2d 12 (2003).

Defendant's motion in limine to exclude evidence of a 9-1-1 call and the defendant's motion for a directed verdict were properly denied as the 9-1-1 call was not testimonial since the call was not premeditated and was made to prevent or stop a crime; under Georgia law, the 9-1-1 statements were admissible as part of the res gestae or as an excited utterance and the confrontation clause and Crawford v. Washington, 541 U. S. 36 (2004), were inapplicable. Kimbrell v. State, 280 Ga. App. 867, 635 S.E.2d 237 (2006).

Recording of victim's radio transmission. — Recorded radio voice transmission of the deceased victim made while proceeding to the scene of the homicide is admissible as forming part of the res gestae. The victim's voice transmission made while proceeding to the scene together with the events occurring there only moments later constituted the transaction under investigation. The death of the person making such statement is no ground for the statement's exclusion. Callahan v. State, 229 Ga. 737, 194 S.E.2d 431 (1972).

Victim's taped interview. — Absent victim's taped interview made 18 or 19 hours after the incident was not part of the res gestae but, because it was cumulative of other testimony, admission of the statement was not reversible error. Jay v. State, 232 Ga. App. 661, 503 S.E.2d 563 (1998).

9. Criminal Law — Victims (Cont'd)

Statements by assault victims held admissible as res gestae in the following cases. — See Life & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Lingerfelt, 100 Ga. App. 482, 111 S.E.2d 730 (1959) (statement made within 10 minutes of assault); Barker v. State, 144 Ga. App. 339, 241 S.E.2d 11 (1977) (statement shortly after assault); Nasworthy v. State, 169 Ga. App. 603, 314 S.E.2d 446 (1984) (testimony of ex-spouse and child); Robinson v. State, 197 Ga. App. 600, 399 S.E.2d 94 (1990) (victim's identification of attacker to adult child).

Evidence that the victim heard an unidentified female voice scream defendant's name, tell the defendant "don't do it," and tell defendant that the defendant was going to kill the victim, as a gun was cocked and fired at the victim, was admissible under the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule. Sharif v. State, 272 Ga. App. 660, 613 S.E.2d 176 (2005).

Nurse's testimony that a victim told the nurse that the victim was attacked by the victim's roommate while the victims was sleeping was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3 because of the victim's physical and emotional condition when the victim made the statements and because the statements were made immediately after the attack; further, the correctional officers had testified that defendant was the aggressor in the affray and that the victim appeared to have been asleep at the inception of the incident, so the hearsay testimony given by the nurse was cumulative of other evidence. Brown v. State, 273 Ga. App. 88, 614 S.E.2d 187 (2005).

Statements by child molestation victim. — Testimony by two witnesses regarding statements made by one of the victims about seeing the defendants engaged in sex was admissible as res gestae evidence. Grimsley v. State, 233 Ga. App. 781, 505 S.E.2d 522 (1998).

Statements by child molestation victim made to mother several hours after event admissible. — See Kilgore v. State, 177 Ga. App. 656, 340 S.E.2d 640 (1986).

Statements by victim of child molestation made to teacher some hours after the event was admissible. Samples v. State, 169 Ga. App. 605, 314 S.E.2d 448 (1984).

Statements by child molestation victim about battery on grandmother. — Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for mistrial after one of the child victims testified that defendant battered the child's grandmother shortly after the grandmother stumbled upon defendant molesting that child as the evidence supported a finding that this battering was part of the res gestae of the child molestation crime. Prather v. State, 279 Ga. App. 552, 631 S.E.2d 758 (2006).

Witness's testimony concerning victim's recital to the witness of facts of an alleged rape some 12 hours after the offense was not admissible as an outcry — i.e., as part of the res gestae — but was admissible for the purpose of establishing that the prosecutor had complained that a rape had occurred. Barnes v. State, 171 Ga. App. 478, 320 S.E.2d 597 (1984).

Victim's parent's testimony about phone call following rape. — Victim's parent's testimony as to the daughter's telephone call to the parent after the rape was admissible as res gestae. Howard v. State, 228 Ga. App. 784, 492 S.E.2d 759 (1997).

Victim's statement following phone call. — Victim's statement following a phone conversation with defendant that the victim had to "get" defendant because defendant told the victim the defendant was going to kill the victim, considered in the context in which it was made, was an excited utterance. Walthour v. State, 269 Ga. 396, 497 S.E.2d 799 (1998).

Testimony of police officer that victim told the officer that defendant forced the victim's car off the road was within the "excited utterance" hearsay exception and admissible as part of the res gestae. T.G. & Y. Stores Co. v. Waters, 175 Ga. App. 884, 334 S.E.2d 910 (1985).

Testimony by victim on witness's statements to victim. — Trial court did not err by allowing a burglary victim to testify that the victim's neighbor, an eyewitness, told the victim that the witness saw someone running from the victim's house or as to the neighbor's description of the perpetrator when such declarations were made in a phone call to the victim substantially contemporaneously with the burglary and soon thereafter when the victim returned home. Lovelace v. State, 262 Ga. App. 690, 586 S.E.2d 386 (2003).

Statements by victims identifying their murderers admissible as res gestae in the following cases. — See Jordan v. State, 180 Ga. 871, 181 S.E. 151 (1935); Gates v. State, 120 Ga. App. 518, 171 S.E.2d 375 (1969).

Defendant's threatening words and behavior made defendant's angry telephone message and act of hunting for the victim's hotel room a startling event that, in all probability, impeded the victim's normal thought processes, and the victim's comment to the victim's friend that defendant was going to kill the victim appears to have been spontaneous and not the result of reasoned deliberation. Testimony such as the friend's, that the declarant appeared nervous and upset, combined with a reasonable basis for emotional upset, will usually suffice for admission under the excited utterance exception of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3. Demons v. State, 277 Ga. 724, 595 S.E.2d 76 (2004).

Firmly rooted hearsay exceptions, such as res gestae, the excited utterance exception of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3, are generally not a sufficient substitute for a prior opportunity for cross-examination in order to admit testimonial hearsay in a criminal case. However, when a deceased victim's statements were not "testimonial," the statements were not precluded from admission under Georgia's res gestae exception to the hearsay rule. Demons v. State, 277 Ga. 724, 595 S.E.2d 76 (2004).

Rape and kidnapping part of one transaction. — Because the evidence showed that a victim's kidnapping and rape were part of one criminal transaction, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting evidence of the rape, as it formed a part of the res gestae. Garrett v. State, 285 Ga. App. 282, 645 S.E.2d 718 (2007).

Statement by victim to police officer. — Evidence of a victim's statement to the police, although not properly admitted as a prior inconsistent statement due to the failure to lay a proper foundation under O.C.G.A. § 24-9-83, was properly admitted as part of the res gestae under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-3 because the victim's description of a distinctive jacket worn by one of the individuals who took a pickup truck was used by the police to search the defendant's residence. Stubbs v. State, 293 Ga. App. 692, 667 S.E.2d 905 (2008).

10. Donors

Statements by donor of gift. — Declarations of the donor, made on the evening of the same day on which an alleged gift was made, but after the gift was made, going to show that there was a gift, and the manner of the gift, are not admissible as parts of the res gestae. Carter v. Buchannon, 3 Ga. 513 (1847).

11. Employees

Statement made by the store manager in a slip and fall action pertaining to the identity of the slippery substance which allegedly caused the fall was admissible as an admission against interest or under the res gestae exception and was sufficient to raise a question of fact precluding summary judgment in favor of the store. Brown v. Piggly Wiggly S., Inc., 210 Ga. App. 459, 436 S.E.2d 513 (1993).

Employee's statement held admissible. — Statement made just after plaintiff's fall by an unknown employee in the presence of the store manager that "if this floor had been mopped or kept mopped this wouldn't happen" was admissible as part of the res gestae and might also have been an admission against defendant store's interest. Sutton v. Winn Dixie Stores, Inc., 233 Ga. App. 424, 504 S.E.2d 245 (1998).

Employee's statement held not admissible. — Extrajudicial admission of employee, who was not a party to the indemnity contract, nor a party to the suit was not admissible as a part of the res gestae of the larceny for which the employer was seeking indemnification, nor as an admission by a stranger to the suit bearing upon a collateral issue essential to the adjudication, as the admission was not collateral to the main issue involved, but bore directly upon it. Glens Falls Indem. Co. v. Gottlieb, 80 Ga. App. 634, 56 S.E.2d 799 (1949).

In an action for injuries sustained after falling on a wet floor, testimony of the injured customer that a store employee came up to the customer after the customer fell and stated that a child had thrown up on the floor was not admissible as part of the res gestae. The testimony did not create a triable issue of fact as to the store owner's knowledge of a dangerous condition. Hagan v. Goody's Family Clothing, Inc., 227 Ga. App. 585, 490 S.E.2d 107 (1997).

As a witness's hearsay statement to an investigator was made 13 days after the fire at issue in the litigation, it could not be said to have been voluntary or free of all suspicion or afterthought, and hence was not admissible under the res gestae exception. HCP III Woodstock, Inc. v. Healthcare Servs. Group, Inc., 254 Ga. App. 242, 562 S.E.2d 225 (2002).

12. Opinions

An opinion or conclusion is admissible as res gestae evidence if it is spontaneous or reflective rather than a reasoned one arrived at deliberately after thoughtful consideration. Bentley v. State, 131 Ga. App. 425, 205 S.E.2d 904 (1974).

13. Personal Injuries

Statements by injured persons held admissible in the following cases. — See Charleston & W. Carolina Ry. v. Burckhalter, 141 Ga. 127, 80 S.E. 278 (1913) (statement to doctor); Standard Oil Co. v. Reagan, 15 Ga. App. 571, 84 S.E. 69 (1915) (statement to spouse); Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. App. 472, 56 S.E.2d 305 (1949) (statement to stepson); Gilbert Corp. of Del., Inc. v. Yetman, 219 Ga. App. 320, 464 S.E.2d 822 (1995) (officer's testimony about decedent's statements).

Statements held inadmissible. — Statements by an injured party to a hospital surgeon were held inadmissible. Hunter v. State, 147 Ga. 823, 95 S.E. 668 (1918).

Excluded testimony of two witnesses that a patient told the witnesses that the patient had pointed out a bump on the patient's breast to a doctor and that the doctor told the patient not to be concerned about the bump was not admissible under the res gestae exception as it was unclear how much time elapsed between the office visit and the patient's statements to the witnesses; moreover, the patient did not testify that the patient told the witnesses about the office visit and there was no way to establish the exact sequence of events that occurred between the office visit and the discussions about that visit or to determine the circumstances surrounding the making of the statements. Davis v. Reid, 272 Ga. App. 312, 612 S.E.2d 112 (2005).

14. Principal and Surety

Statements during transaction for which surety is bound held admissible. — If the admissions of a principal are made during the transaction of the business for which the surety is bound, the admissions become a part of the res gestae and are admissible; otherwise, the admissions are not. Dobbs v. Justices of Inferior Court, 17 Ga. 624 (1855).

15. Sales

Agreement of sale. — Declarations of a vendor of property, as to the vendor's motive for the sale, made at the time and during the progress of the sale, and even so soon thereafter as to be free from all suspicion of afterthought, are admissible evidence on a trial as to the validity of the sale. McLean v. Clark, 47 Ga. 24 (1872).

16. Transcripts

Testimonial conclusions contained in an incident report prepared by store's security personnel that a customer of the store had been struck in the abdomen by shopping carts steered by an employee of the store were admissible under the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule. Super Disc. Mkts., Inc. v. Coney, 210 Ga. App. 659, 436 S.E.2d 803 (1993).

Photostatic copy of log made by the operator on duty representing radio communication of officers engaged in high speed chase with defendant was admissible as part of the res gestae. Waller v. State, 80 Ga. App. 488, 56 S.E.2d 491 (1949).

17. Wills

Any acts or declarations by the principal legatee, who procures the will under which one claims to be written, may be given in evidence as a part of the res gestae. Morris v. Stokes, 21 Ga. 552 (1857), aff'd, 27 Ga. 239 (1859).

Statements made for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment and describing medical history, or past or present symptoms, pain, or sensations, or the inception or general character of the cause or external source thereof insofar as reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment shall be admissible in evidence. (Code 1933, § 38-315, enacted by Ga. L. 1977, p. 226, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

This statute relates only to factual matters which would be within the immediate knowledge of the patient personally, and statements of medical opinion are not included. Dunn v. McIntyre, 146 Ga. App. 362, 246 S.E.2d 398 (1978) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4).

This statute does not encompass statements of medical opinion made by one physician to another but instead refers only to statements made by or on behalf of the patient when seeking medical care. Dunn v. McIntyre, 146 Ga. App. 362, 246 S.E.2d 398 (1978) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4 does not cover statements of medical opinion made by one physician to another, much less a second-hand recitation of what the witness was told by another person concerning the injured plaintiff's condition. Pirkle v. Hawley, 199 Ga. App. 371, 405 S.E.2d 71, cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 906, 405 S.E.2d 71 (1991).

Responses to medical questions of patient taken to hospital admissible. — Testimony of a doctor who related a patient's responses to medical questions for purposes of diagnosis and treatment was admissible under the exception to the hearsay rule provided by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4 since where the responses were given within a matter of minutes after the patient was taken to the hospital. Allen v. State, 174 Ga. App. 206, 329 S.E.2d 586 (1985).

Statements made by child to nurse several months after sexual abuse. — Testimony of nurse, who prepared child for examination by physician, as to statements made to the nurse by the child was admissible in prosecution for child molestation, even though the statements were made several months after the sexual abuse occurred, since the statements were made for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment and did not identify or in any way refer to the defendant. Sparks v. State, 172 Ga. App. 891, 324 S.E.2d 824 (1984).

Statements to psychologist as to grief. — When a psychologist, in a deposition which was introduced into evidence at trial, stated several times that plaintiffs were suffering from great pain, grief, and stress when the psychologist met with them approximately one year after the death of their son, the statements made to the psychologist during the psychologist's evaluation were exceptions to the hearsay rule under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4. Southern Ry. v. Lawson, 256 Ga. 798, 353 S.E.2d 491 (1987).

Testimony from psychologist on schizophrenia. — In a proceeding on termination of parental rights, the trial court did not err in allowing a clinical psychologist to testify as to the possible effects schizophrenia may have on caring for children based upon the psychologist's psychological evaluations of the mother. In re M.D., 244 Ga. App. 156, 534 S.E.2d 889 (2000).

Failure to assert admissibility is waiver. — Failure of the plaintiff to assert that a statement made by a therapist at a deposition was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4 as a statement made for medical diagnosis or treatment at trial when the trial court asked for the plaintiff's response to a hearsay objection precluded the appellate court from considering the issue for the first time on appeal. Bryant v. Food Giant, Inc., 184 Ga. App. 155, 361 S.E.2d 38 (1987).

Past recollections within medical record inadmissible. — When the original of the medical record itself is admissible but diagnostic opinions and conclusions therein are inadmissible, past recollection recorded by a doctor of a patient's medical history contained in a medical record, which included a diagnostic opinion of another doctor, would be inadmissible. Stoneridge Properties, Inc. v. Kuper, 178 Ga. App. 409, 343 S.E.2d 424 (1986).

Physical description of a victim's assailant is not reasonably pertinent to the diagnosis and treatment of the victim and the exclusion of a hospital report containing such a description is proper. Arnold v. State, 166 Ga. App. 313, 304 S.E.2d 118 (1983).

Testimony pertinent to diagnosis and treatment of victim. — See Davis v. State, 168 Ga. App. 272, 308 S.E.2d 602 (1983).

Testimony by a doctor that the doctor received a report that a mixture of hot bleach was thrown in the victim's face was properly admitted as the testimony related to the cause of the victim's injuries and was made for the purpose of the victim's diagnosis and treatment. Payne v. State, 273 Ga. App. 483, 615 S.E.2d 564 (2005).

Trial court properly admitted testimony of an emergency medical technician who arrived on the scene of a vehicle accident caused by defendant as the technician's questions to defendant were pertinent to defendant's medical treatment, and defendant's response that defendant had been drinking alcohol and smoking marijuana all night was properly admitted pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4. Ellis v. State, 275 Ga. App. 881, 622 S.E.2d 89 (2005).

Trial court did not err in permitting a challenged state expert, who examined the victim, to testify as to what the victim stated during an emergency room examination as the victim corroborated the expert's testimony and the expert based the testimony on personal knowledge, not hearsay; moreover, the expert's testimony did not improperly bolster that of the victim, but merely repeated the information that the victim provided, which the expert used to examine the victim and draw medical conclusions. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. App. 106, 635 S.E.2d 582 (2006).

With regard to a defendant's trial and conviction for aggravated sodomy and simple battery involving the sexual assault of an inmate upon an inmate, the trial court did not violate the defendant's rights under the confrontation clause by admitting the statements made by the victim to the physician and the nurse who treated the victim for the injuries received because the statements were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4, the medical diagnosis or treatment exception, and did not fall within any class of testimonial statement. In particular, no objective witness would reasonably conclude that the statements were made under such circumstances that the statement would be available for use at a later trial. Thomas v. State, 288 Ga. App. 602, 654 S.E.2d 682 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 471 (Ga. 2008).

With regard to a defendant's convictions for aggravated sodomy, rape, and other related crimes, trial counsel's decision not to object to hearsay testimony of the emergency room physician who treated the victim did not amount to ineffective assistance of counsel as the physician's testimony was admissible under the hearsay exception set forth in O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4 since the challenged statements related to the cause of the victim's injuries and were made for the purpose of the victim's diagnosis and treatment. As a result, the trial court did not err in admitting the statements and, therefore, since the statements were admissible, there was no merit to the defendant's contention that the defendant's trial counsel's failure to object to the hearsay testimony was ineffective assistance. Greene v. State, 295 Ga. App. 803, 673 S.E.2d 292 (2009), cert. denied, No. S09C0862, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 259 (Ga. 2009).

Medical history and records admissible. — In a personal injury action, plaintiff's alleged statements made to plaintiff's medical providers regarding medical history during plaintiff's diagnosis and treatment were not inadmissible hearsay. Barone v. Law, 242 Ga. App. 102, 527 S.E.2d 898 (2000).

Testimony held not within rule. — When a physician's testimony includes the victim's out-of-court statements to the physician that intercourse with the victim's father (the defendant) had taken place, admission of that portion of the statement was error; the identity of the defendant contained in the out-of-court statements was unnecessary to any legitimate purpose addressed in this statute. Johnson v. State, 149 Ga. App. 544, 254 S.E.2d 757 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4).

Admission of an emergency room physician's testimony that the patient told the physician she had been raped by a black man named "Miller" was error; however, since the evidence was cumulative, the admission was not prejudicial to defendant. Miller v. State, 194 Ga. App. 533, 390 S.E.2d 901 (1990).

Admission of a shooting victim's statements to a physician regarding the circumstances and activity prior to the shooting, which did not fall within the statutory exception because they were not reasonably pertinent to the physician's diagnosis or treatment, was harmless error since it was highly probable that the error did not contribute to the judgment. Howard v. State, 261 Ga. 251, 403 S.E.2d 204 (1991).

Doctor's testimony that a child abuse victim's father told the doctor that defendant abused the child was not admissible as an out-of-court statement made for the purpose of describing medical history reasonably pertinent to diagnosis or treatment. Cupe v. State, 253 Ga. App. 851, 560 S.E.2d 700 (2002).

Nurse's testimony that a victim told the nurse that the victim was attacked by the victim's roommate while the victim was sleeping was not admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4 as the statements were not reasonably pertinent to the nurse's diagnosis or treatment of the victim. Brown v. State, 273 Ga. App. 88, 614 S.E.2d 187 (2005).

Testimony admissible. — Trial court did not err in admitting the medical record from the doctor as an exception to the hearsay rule. Central of Ga. R.R. v. Carter, 212 Ga. App. 528, 442 S.E.2d 269 (1994).

In a negligence action seeking compensatory damages for a disabling injury, because an emergency room report was prepared prior to performance of the surgery on plaintiff's foot so that the statement was made before medical treatment was rendered, the trial court did not err in allowing admission as such under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-4. Imm v. Chaney, 287 Ga. App. 606, 651 S.E.2d 855 (2007).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion when it admitted the testimony of the nurse who performed the initial examination of the victim because, even assuming that the victim's identification of the defendant as the victim's attacker was not reasonably pertinent to the diagnosis or treatment, that identification was cumulative of other evidence as to the defendant's identity. McGill v. State, 302 Ga. App. 378, 690 S.E.2d 648 (2010).

Nurse practitioner's testimony which identified child molestation victim's father as the molester was cumulative of that of other witnesses, including the victim personally, and therefore harmless. Hyde v. State, 189 Ga. App. 727, 377 S.E.2d 187, cert. denied, 189 Ga. App. 912, 377 S.E.2d 187 (1988).

Impeachment of declarant. — Party must be given the opportunity to impeach the credibility of a declarant whose statement is admitted under the medical diagnosis or treatment exception to the hearsay rule. Allen v. State, 247 Ga. App. 10, 543 S.E.2d 45 (2000).

Information given to a licensed professional counselor is admissible under this exception to the hearsay rule. Allen v. State, 247 Ga. App. 10, 543 S.E.2d 45 (2000).

General Consideration

Coconspirator’s exception to the hearsay rule is codified at O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5. Hunter v. State, 179 Ga. App. 368, 347 S.E.2d 2 (1986).

Defendant responsible for incidental, but unanticipated, acts. — When there is evidence that two or more individuals have conspired to accomplish a common design and one or more of the conspirators has done an act which is an incidental and probable consequence of the original design and which the acting conspirator(s) deems to be expedient to the accomplishment of the common design, the intent and act of the acting conspirator(s) may be imputed to the other active conspirators even though the act may not have been a part of the original design. Therefore, when the common design was to burglarize the victim’s house, that the defendant may not have anticipated defendant’s coconspirators committing the burglary on the day in question did not remove defendant from the conspiracy, nor did it relieve defendant from responsibility for the incidental and probable acts that defendant’s coconspirators felt were expedient to the accomplishment of the common design. Thus, it was not error to present evidence concerning acts of murder committed by the coconspirators that occurred after the coconspirators entered the victim’s home. Bruce v. State, 263 Ga. 273, 430 S.E.2d 745 (1993).

Statement must be that of defendant. — If a hearsay statement was not made by the defendant and could not be imputed to defendant, it could not be admitted to show defendant’s motive or intent. Hart v. State, 174 Ga. App. 134, 329 S.E.2d 178 (1985).

Use of translator. — Use of a translator between the defendant and a witness did not render the witness’s testimony about the substance of the translation inadmissible, pursuant to the language conduit rule, as no evidence was presented to the trial court to show that the translator had a motive to distort the translation; moreover, since the translator was a coconspirator, to the extent statements were made directly to the witness in English to further the conspiracy, the witness could testify regarding those statements under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5. Lopez v. State, 281 Ga. App. 623, 636 S.E.2d 770 (2006).

Intercepted conversation between coconspirators in the back seat of a patrol car was admissible in the trial of one of the coconspirators because the other took the stand and was subject to cross-examination, and because the conversation took place when the coconspirators were actively attempting concealment. Burgeson v. State, 267 Ga. 102, 475 S.E.2d 580 (1996).

Coconspirator not available for cross-examination. — Testimony by an undercover police officer as to a statement made by a coconspirator during the pendency of the criminal project was not inadmissible simply because the coconspirator was not available for cross-examination since, after the fact of conspiracy is proved, the declarations of any one of the conspirators during the pendency of the project is admissible against all. Clark v. State, 236 Ga. App. 153, 510 S.E.2d 907 (1999).

Constitutionality

Statute does not violate the sixth amendment confrontation clause. Smith v. State, 236 Ga. 12, 222 S.E.2d 308, cert. denied, 428

Constitutionality (Cont'd)

U.S. 910, 96 S. Ct. 3224, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1219 (1976).

Application of statute is not subject to objection as a denial of confrontation. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337 (1979), cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Statute not unconstitutional in application. — Statute has many applications consistent with the confrontation clause, and does not violate the Constitution. Dutton v. Evans, 400 U.S. 74, 91 S. Ct. 210, 27 L. Ed. 2d 213 (1970), for comment, see 22 Mercer L. Rev. 791 (1971); (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5).

Evidentiary rule applied by this statute does not violate the Constitution merely because it does not exactly coincide with the hearsay exception applicable in a federal prosecution for the substantive offense of conspiracy. Dutton v. Evans, 400 U.S. 74, 91 S. Ct. 210, 27 L. Ed. 2d 213 (1970), for comment, see 22 Mercer L. Rev. 791 (1971).

Statute applied consistently with the confrontation clause and the due process clause, even though the alleged accomplice did not appear as a witness at the defendant's trial. Spivey v. State, 138 Ga. App. 298, 226 S.E.2d 104, cert. denied, 429 U.S. 921, 97 S. Ct. 317, 50 L. Ed. 2d 288 (1976).

Defendant not deprived of right to confrontation when conspiracy shown. — When two witnesses were permitted, over a hearsay objection, to testify as to the statements made to the witnesses by deceased gasoline station operator, defendant was not deprived of defendant's constitutional rights to confrontation under U.S. Const., amend. 6 since the state's evidence was sufficient to show prima facie a conspiracy between the operator and defendant to commit arson in the third degree, and since statements made by the operator were made during the concealment stage of the conspiracy. Timberlake v. State, 158 Ga. App. 125, 279 S.E.2d 283 (1981).

Admission of the defendants' hearsay statements as statements made by coconspirators under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5 did not violate the confrontation clause of U.S. Const., amend. 6 since the statements were reliable, and the statements were not testimonial in nature; each statement corroborated the other statements and the physical evidence, and each of the defendants implicated himself or herself in their statement. Brooks v. State, 281 Ga. 14, 635 S.E.2d 723 (2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1215, 127 S. Ct. 1266, 167 L. Ed. 2d 91 (2007).

Admission of coconspirator's declaration does not violate confrontation clause. — In cases involving a coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, the admission of the statement of a coconspirator does not violate the confrontation clause if the statement and the circumstances surrounding the statement contain sufficient "indicia of reliability." Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 418, 314 S.E.2d 210; Hunter v. State, 179 Ga. App. 368, 347 S.E.2d 2 (1986), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 873, 105 S. Ct. 230, 83 L. Ed. 2d 159 (1984).

Factors indicating reliability of declarations. — United States Supreme Court has identified at least four factors indicative of reliability: (1) the declarations contained no assertion of a past fact, and consequently carried a warning to the jury against giving it undue weight; (2) the declarant had personal knowledge of the identity and role of participants in the crime; (3) the possibility that the declarant was relying on faulty recollection was remote; and (4) the circumstances under which the statements were made did not provide reason to believe that the declarant had misrepresented the defendant's involvement in the crime. When all of these factors are present, the defendant's sixth amendment rights are not violated by introduction of a coconspirator's declarations. Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 418, 314 S.E.2d 210; Hunter v. State, 179 Ga. App. 368, 347 S.E.2d 2 (1986).

When the four factors indicative of reliability identified by the United States Supreme Court are present in the case, a demonstration of the unavailability of the coconspirator is not required and the defendant's sixth amendment confrontation rights are not violated by introduction of testimony regarding the coconspirator's declarations. Hunter v. State, 179 Ga. App. 368, 347 S.E.2d 2 (1986).

Application

Statute is applicable in civil as well as criminal cases. Hames v. Shaver, 229 Ga. 412, 191 S.E.2d 861 (1972).

Statute does not render a conspirator incompetent to testify as to facts until the fact of the conspiracy be proved by independent evidence; it simply prohibits a conspirator from testifying as to declarations made by one conspirator outside the presence of, and upon the trial of, another conspirator. Birt v. State, 236 Ga. 815, 225 S.E.2d 248, cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1029, 97 S. Ct. 654, 50 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1976); Ramsey v. State, 165 Ga. App. 854, 303 S.E.2d 32 (1983); Whitton v. State, 178 Ga. App. 862, 344 S.E.2d 703 (1986).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5 does not exclude the testimony of a coconspirator, only the admission of coconspirator's declarations to third persons. Ramsey v. State, 165 Ga. App. 854, 303 S.E.2d 32 (1983).

Declarations of coconspirator admissible. — When codefendant's incriminating statements were made shortly after the crime occurred, were made prior to arrest, and were noncustodial statements made to acquaintances of codefendant and defendant rather than to police officers, under these circumstances, codefendant's statements can be characterized as the declaration of a conspirator rather than as a confession and would be admissible against defendant when the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5 have been met. Brown v. State, 262 Ga. 223, 416 S.E.2d 508 (1992).

Testimony by officers regarding an incriminating statement made by one of three coconspirators was admissible even though the officers could not identify the speaker and the admission of the statement did not mandate severance of the parties for trial nor a limiting instruction to the jury that such a "confession" by one codefendant could not be considered against the others. Reid v. State, 210 Ga. App. 783, 437 S.E.2d 646 (1993).

Coconspirator's statement's were admissible against defendant since circumstantial evidence established a conspiracy to kill defendant's wife. Walker v. State, 213 Ga. App. 407, 444 S.E.2d 824 (1994).

Even though a coconspirator may have terminated participation in the conspiracy when, at the request of the police, the coconspirator voluntarily placed a recorded call to another coconspirator, statements made by the latter implicating the defendant in murder and armed robbery were admissible since the second coconspirator was still conspiring to conceal the crime, and statements of the former, offered for the limited purpose of putting the second coconspirator's responses in context, were admissible as original evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-2. Bundrage v. State, 265 Ga. 813, 462 S.E.2d 719 (1995).

After finding that the evidence was sufficient to establish a prima facie case of conspiracy, the trial court properly ruled that a coconspirator's statements were admissible against defendant. Robertson v. State, 268 Ga. 772, 493 S.E.2d 697 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1140, 118 S. Ct. 1845, 140 L. Ed. 2d 1095 (1998).

When the evidence established a prima facie case of conspiracy, codefendant's surreptitiously recorded statements, in which the codefendant implicated defendant in the charged offenses, were admissible. Avery v. State, 269 Ga. 584, 502 S.E.2d 230 (1998).

Statements made by the codefendant to an informant in a recorded call were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5 because at the time of the call the conspiracy was still pending between defendant and the coconspirator to commit the trafficking offense for which they were eventually arrested. Perez v. State, 254 Ga. App. 872, 564 S.E.2d 208 (2002).

Coconspirator's statements were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5 as the statements contained sufficient indicia of reliability to ensure that defendant's sixth amendment rights were not violated and afforded the jury a satisfactory basis for evaluating the truth of the statements. Duckett v. State, 259 Ga. App. 814, 578 S.E.2d 524 (2003).

When defendant and the codefendant were charged with murder and related offenses, the denial of defendant's motion to sever defendant's trial from that of the codefendant was not an abuse of discretion because, inter alia, incriminating statements that the codefendant made to police would have been admissible against defendant in a separate trial as the statements of a coconspirator under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5. Styles v. State, 279 Ga. 134, 610 S.E.2d 23 (2005).

Witness's statement regarding conversations between defendant and an accomplice were admissible as a conspiracy between defendant and the accomplice because: (1)

two masked bandits committed three armed robberies; (2) defendant and the accomplice attempted to use the credit and debit cards obtained in the robberies immediately after the robberies; (3) masks and a gun used in the robberies were found in defendant's car; and (4) defendant told defendant's half-sister that the defendant and the accomplice had committed the robberies. Dillard v. State, 272 Ga. App. 523, 612 S.E.2d 804 (2005).

Denial of defendant's severance motion was not an abuse of discretion because there was no likelihood of confusion as the defendant and the codefendant acted in concert and their defenses were not antagonistic, substantially similar evidence was presented against them, and the codefendant's statements would have been admissible in a separate trial as statements of a coconspirator. Shelton v. State, 279 Ga. 161, 611 S.E.2d 11 (2005).

After defendant and defendant's brother agreed on a plan to murder a victim, and after the crime occurred but before defendant's arrest, the brother told a girlfriend that the brother had "taken care" of the victim, the statement was properly admitted as a declaration of a coconspirator, rather than as a confession. Copprue v. State, 279 Ga. 771, 621 S.E.2d 457 (2005).

Because a codefendant's statements were non-custodial and were made in furtherance of a conspiracy, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in finding that the statements were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5 and did not violate Bruton; consequently, defendant failed to demonstrate that counsel's failure to request a severance constituted ineffective assistance. Hankerson v. State, 275 Ga. App. 545, 621 S.E.2d 772 (2005).

Court of Appeals of Georgia held that the coconspirators' testimony was properly allowed by the trial court as most of the testimony at issue was admissible on grounds other than as declarations of coconspirators, and the state made a prima facie showing of the existence of a conspiracy without relying on the coconspirators' declarations. English v. State, 288 Ga. App. 436, 654 S.E.2d 150 (2007).

Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion to exclude testimony recounting the out-of-court statements of the codefendant, which were made to friends during the concealment phase of the conspiracy between the defendant and the codefendant, because, on balance, the statements bore sufficient indicia of reliability to be admissible; although the trial court erred by applying a presumption of reliability, its decision to admit the statements was not erroneous because the statements were admissible since they were not testimonial in nature, many of the statements were made in the defendant's presence, and none of the statements sought to deny the codefendant's guilt. Stinski v. State, 286 Ga. 839, 691 S.E.2d 854 (2010).

Recorded statement of coconspirator properly admitted. — Trial court did not err by allowing the state to introduce a coconspirator's recorded statement against a defendant, which the defendant claimed incriminated the defendant, as the coconspirator testified and was subject to cross-examination. Overton v. State, 295 Ga. App. 223, 671 S.E.2d 507 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0654, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 212 (Ga. 2009).

When the state is proceeding on a theory of conspiracy, acts and statements of one conspirator in furtherance of the conspiracy are admissible against all other conspirators. Knowles v. State, 159 Ga. App. 239, 283 S.E.2d 51 (1981).

Qualification of rule. — Statutory rule is qualified by the fact that each is responsible for the acts of the others only insofar as such acts are naturally or necessarily done pursuant to or in furtherance of the conspiracy. Handley v. State, 115 Ga. 584, 41 S.E. 992 (1902); Hill v. Reynolds, 19 Ga. App. 334, 91 S.E. 434 (1917).

Exculpatory evidence of conspirator not admissible. — Under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5, the declaration of a coconspirator during the pendency of a criminal project is admissible against all coconspirators; however, it may only be used against a conspirator and is not a means by which a conspirator may introduce exculpatory evidence. Dunbar v. State, 205 Ga. App. 867, 424 S.E.2d 43, cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 899, 424 S.E.2d 43 (1992).

Statements made during concealment phase of conspiracy admissible. — Statements made by a coconspirator to police were admissible as made during the concealment phase of the conspiracy, even though made before evidence establishing conspiracy had been introduced. Morgan v. State, 206 Ga. App. 132, 424 S.E.2d 92 (1992).

Properly authenticated letters written by one of the three defendants charged in a conspiracy involving an armed robbery and related offense were properly admitted under the exception to the rule against hearsay evidence that statements made by a coconspirator during the concealment phase of the conspiracy were admissible against all other coconspirators. Williamson v. State, 285 Ga. App. 779, 648 S.E.2d 118 (2007).

Applies to acts. — Statute applies to the acts of the conspirators as well as to the conspirators' declarations. Thompson v. State, 58 Ga. App. 593, 199 S.E. 568 (1938).

Agency theory. — Conspirator's declaration in furtherance of the conspiracy may be used against another conspirator not present on the theory that the declarant is the agent of the other, and the admissions of one are admissible against both. Park v. Huff, 506 F.2d 849 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 824, 96 S. Ct. 38, 46 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1975).

Not applicable to direct testimony. — It is the declarations of coconspirators related by another witness that are dealt with in statute, and not the direct testimony of an alleged coconspirator on the trial. Sutton v. State, 237 Ga. 423, 228 S.E.2d 820 (1976).

Indictment not required. — Statute does not include any condition precedent of indictment of a coconspirator before the statute becomes applicable. Baker v. State, 17 Ga. App. 279, 86 S.E. 530 (1915); Cook v. State, 22 Ga. App. 770, 97 S.E.2d 264 (1918); Porterfield v. State, 137 Ga. App. 449, 224 S.E.2d 94 (1976); Baughner v. State, 212 Ga. App. 7, 440 S.E.2d 768 (1994).

Membership in conspiratorial unit required. — When the statements of a defendant were recounted to a third person by an individual who was part of the conspiratorial unit, the statements were admissible. Mullins v. State, 147 Ga. App. 337, 248 S.E.2d 706 (1978), aff'd, 249 Ga. 411, 290 S.E.2d 472 (1982); Knox v. State, 156 Ga. App. 777, 275 S.E.2d 371 (1980).

Undisclosed conspirators. — Acts and declarations of undisclosed conspirators, looking to the concealment of identity and the suppression of evidence, are admissible against other conspirators. Mitchell v. State, 86 Ga. App. 292, 71 S.E.2d 756 (1952).

Statements out of defendant's presence. — Conversation overheard between coincitees out of the presence of the defendant is admissible. Hutchins v. State, 229 Ga. 804, 194 S.E.2d 442 (1972).

Once some evidence of a joint criminal undertaking has been presented, the out-of-court statements of one wrongdoer, are admissible against the other even though that other is separately tried, and even though the statements were made outside the other's presence. Davis v. State, 129 Ga. App. 796, 201 S.E.2d 345 (1973).

Indicia of reliability required for admissibility are that the statements be non-narrative, that the declarant is shown by the evidence to know whereof the declarant speaks, that the witness is not apt to be proceeding on faulty recollection, and that the circumstances show that the declarant had no apparent reason to lie to the witness; it is not required that all of the indicia be present for the statement to be admissible. Timberlake v. State, 158 Ga. App. 125, 279 S.E.2d 283 (1981).

When statement inadmissible. — Statement is inadmissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5 when the statement implicates the defendant and when the statement is not accompanied by an indicia of reliability such as the spontaneity of the statement and the fact that the statement was against the speaker's penal interest to make the statement. Boswell v. State, 158 Ga. App. 727, 282 S.E.2d 196 (1981).

Admission of a coconspirator's hearsay statement that defendant was the "triggerman" in a robbery violated the confrontation clause, and could not be deemed harmless error since the hearsay lacked sufficient indicia of reliability; the statement was not res gestae, was not given under oath, was not against penal interest, and was exculpatory. Horton v. Zant, 941 F.2d 1449 (11th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 503 U.S. 952, 112 S. Ct. 1516, 117 L. Ed. 2d 652 (1992).

Statement made five months before crime. — Witness's testimony as to coconspirator's statement offering money for the killing of coconspirator's ex-husband made some five months prior to the killing was admissible even though witness/coconspirator expressed disinterest in the offer at that time. Blalock v. State, 250 Ga. 441, 298 S.E.2d 477 (1983).

Wire tap conversations of other conspirators to which appellants had not been parties were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5. Gilstrap v. State, 162 Ga. App. 841, 292 S.E.2d 495 (1982).

Tapes and transcripts admissible when testimony admissible. — Trial court did not err in admitting in evidence two tapes of a coconspirator's conversations with defendants and the transcripts thereof because the transcripts were the result of a confession made by the coconspirator, after one coconspirator heard defendants' statements and could have testified to what they said. The coconspirator's voluntary participation in the recording of the conversations does not alter their basic admissibility as the lawful electronic interception of the conversations only created a recording of what the coconspirator could have related as a witness. Ramsey v. State, 165 Ga. App. 854, 303 S.E.2d 32 (1983).

Statements attributable to coconspirator who refused to testify properly admitted as declarations of coconspirator during course of conspiracy. Owens v. State, 251 Ga. 313, 305 S.E.2d 102 (1983).

Separate trials. — Statutory rule is true even though the person against whom the declaration is introduced is being tried separately from the person making the declaration. Coleman v. State, 141 Ga. 731, 82 S.E. 228 (1914); Tate v. State, 41 Ga. App. 300, 152 S.E. 609 (1930); Driggers v. State, 51 Ga. App. 370, 180 S.E. 619 (1935); Wortham v. State, 184 Ga. 674, 192 S.E. 720 (1937); West v. State, 85 Ga. App. 220, 68 S.E.2d 611 (1952).

Testimony admissible as coconspirator's statement made during pendency of conspiracy. Lawrence v. State, 187 Ga. App. 211, 369 S.E.2d 531 (1988).

When objected-to statements were made during the pendency of and in furtherance of a conspiracy, they were not admitted as similar transactions or for the sole purpose of showing bad character, but were relevant and material to the issues in the case. Kitchens v. State, 235 Ga. App. 349, 509 S.E.2d 391 (1998).

Declarations were properly admitted in the following cases. — See Campbell v. State, 202 Ga. 705, 44 S.E.2d 903 (1947); Hardy v. State, 245 Ga. 272, 264 S.E.2d 209 (1980); Gay v. State, 249 Ga. 747, 294 S.E.2d 476 (1982); Manuel v. State, 245 Ga. App. 565, 538 S.E.2d 472 (2000).

Note-passing inmate was properly permitted to relate to the jury statements made by other inmates when the inmates were discussing what to do about the possibility the victim was going to tell the authorities about their effort to escape as the coconspiratorial statements were made during the pendency of the conspiracy and the statements were presumed to be sufficiently reliable to satisfy the confrontation clause's requirement of trustworthiness; the admission of the statements was not at odds with Crawford v. Washington, 541 U.S. 36 (2004), because statements admissible pursuant to the hearsay exception permitting the use of statements made in furtherance of a conspiracy were not testimonial. McKinney v. State, 281 Ga. 92, 635 S.E.2d 153 (2006).

Trial court did not err by admitting the recorded statement of a witness under circumstances in which, at trial, the witness recanted the statement, claiming the statement was fabricated under pressure from police; in the statement, the witness stated that the defendant bragged about the crime, reporting that the defendant shot the victim and predicting that the eyewitnesses were too intoxicated to be able to identify them. The statement corroborated other details, related to the witness by the codefendants regarding the crime itself and the subsequent attempts to dispose of instrumentalities of the crime, and the statement was properly admitted as evidence of statements made by coconspirators during the pendency of the criminal project. Thorpe v. State, 285 Ga. 604, 678 S.E.2d 913 (2009).

Writings were admissible. — See Bragg v. State, 52 Ga. App. 69, 182 S.E. 403 (1935) (letter written by one coconspirator to other relating to crime); Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337 (1979) (written directions to witness from coconspirator); Farley v. State, 155 Ga. App. 188, 270 S.E.2d 361 (1980) (trial transcript).

Error to allow into deliberations. — All writings introduced in evidence in lieu of testimony from the witness stand, such as interrogatories, depositions, dying declarations, and confessions of guilt of a defendant or of an alleged coconspirator, which depend entirely for their value on the credibility of the maker, should not be in the possession of the jury during their deliberations, thus, when defendants' and alleged coconspirators' signed statements are delivered to the jury, over timely objections, a new trial must be granted. Royals v. State, 208 Ga. 78, 65 S.E.2d 158 (1951).

No ineffective counsel since statements by coconspirator admissible. — Defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV, as statements made by a coconspirator were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5, and the failure of counsel to raise a non-meritorious hearsay objection did not constitute ineffective legal representation. Jones v. State, 279 Ga. 854, 622 S.E.2d 1 (2005).

No ineffective assistance of counsel. — Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel due to counsel's failure to object to hearsay testimony of a note-passing inmate as the hearsay statements fell within the exception permitting hearsay statements made by coconspirators during the pendency of the conspiracy; the failure to object did not constitute deficient performance. McKinney v. State, 281 Ga. 92, 635 S.E.2d 153 (2006).

Construction with § 24-3-52

Former Code 1933, § 38-414 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52) was a limitation upon former Code 1933, § 38-306 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5). Munsford v. State, 235 Ga. 38, 218 S.E.2d 792 (1975).

Allowance of hearsay evidence by former Code 1933, § 38-306 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5) was restricted by former Code 1933, § 38-414 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52). Price v. State, 239 Ga. 439, 238 S.E.2d 24 (1977).

Former Code 1933, §§ 38-306 and 38-414 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-5 and 24-3-52) were mutually exclusive so a conspirator's statement was made either "during" or "after" the conspiracy. Crowder v. State, 237 Ga. 141, 227 S.E.2d 230 (1976).

Both former Code 1933, §§ 38-306 and 38-414 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-5 and 24-3-52) clearly contemplate a point in time in certain cases when the conspiracy, including its concealment stage, was at an end so as to render a subsequent confession by an alleged coconspirator inadmissible in the trial of a defendant who continued to deny guilt. Hill v. State, 232 Ga. 800, 209 S.E.2d 153 (1974).

An incriminatory declaration made by one conspirator was either made "during the pendency of the criminal project," and was thus admissible against the other conspirators under former Code 1933, § 38-306 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5), or was made "after the enterprise is ended," and was thus inadmissible against the other conspirators under former Code 1933, § 38-414 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52). Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979).

Conspiracy Defined

1. In General

Conspiracy consists in a corrupt agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful act, the existence of which agreement may be established by direct proof, or by inference, as a deduction from acts and conduct, which discloses a common design on their part to act together for the accomplishment of the unlawful purpose. Kennemore v. State, 222 Ga. 362, 149 S.E.2d 791 (1966).

Conspiracy is a corrupt agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful act. Park v. State, 224 Ga. 467, 162 S.E.2d 359, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 980, 89 S. Ct. 449, 21 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1968).

To have a conspiracy, there must be an agreement between two or more persons to commit a crime. Kilgore v. State, 251 Ga. 291, 305 S.E.2d 82 (1983).

Motive to commit crime. — Criminal project referred to in statute includes the creation of the original motive to commit the crime, the plan to commit the crime and the carrying out of the plan. The motive and the plan could be created first in the mind of only one of the coconspirators and prior to the formation of the conspiracy itself. Knight v. State, 239 Ga. 594, 238 S.E.2d 390 (1977).

Common design. — Common design which is the essence of conspiracy may be made to appear when the parties steadily pursue the same object, whether acting separately or together by common or different means, ever leading to the same unlawful result. Park v. Huff, 506 F.2d 849 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 824, 96 S. Ct. 38, 46 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1975).

2. Proof of Conspiracy

Conspiracy may be proved by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence. Darden v. State, 172 Ga. 590, 158 S.E. 414 (1931); Wortham v. State, 184 Ga. 674, 192 S.E. 720 (1937); Park v. State, 224 Ga. 467, 162 S.E.2d 359, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 980, 89 S. Ct. 449, 21 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1968); Sentell v. State, 227 Ga. 153, 179 S.E.2d 234 (1971).

Existence of a conspiracy may be established by direct proof, or by inference, as a deduction from acts and conduct, which discloses a common design on their part to act together for the accomplishment of the unlawful purpose. Park v. State, 224 Ga. 467, 162 S.E.2d 359, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 980, 89 S. Ct. 449, 21 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1968); Weatherington v. State, 139 Ga. App. 795, 229 S.E.2d 676 (1976).

Existence of a common design or purpose between two or more persons to commit an unlawful act may be shown by direct or circumstantial evidence. Harris v. State, 255 Ga. 500, 340 S.E.2d 4 (1986).

State must make a prima facie showing of a conspiracy by aliunde proof. Weatherington v. State, 139 Ga. App. 795, 229 S.E.2d 676 (1976).

Conspiracy itself must be proved by evidence aliunde such declarations, and the declarations are not admissible unless the conspiracy is prima facie shown by such aliunde evidence. Park v. State, 224 Ga. 467, 162 S.E.2d 359, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 980, 89 S. Ct. 449, 21 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1968); Sentell v. State, 227 Ga. 153, 179 S.E.2d 234 (1971); Park v. Huff, 506 F.2d 849 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 824, 96 S. Ct. 38, 46 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1975).

In order to establish a conspiracy it is not necessary that the aliunde proof shall itself warrant a verdict, slight evidence connecting the defendant with the crime will be sufficient. Weatherington v. State, 139 Ga. App. 795, 229 S.E.2d 676 (1976).

And prove existence beyond a reasonable doubt. — In order to properly admit the declaration of an alleged coconspirator made during a criminal project, there must be sufficient evidence aliunde the declaration to establish the conspiracy at least prima facie and prove the declaration's existence beyond a reasonable doubt. Wortham v. State, 184 Ga. 674, 192 S.E. 720 (1937); Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979).

While the rule is well established that the conspiracy itself cannot be shown from the acts and declarations of one coconspirator in the absence of the others (this rule being necessary to prevent the finding of the fact of the conspiracy from such acts and declarations alone), yet the acts and declarations made in carrying out the conspiracy are relevant. Bragg v. State, 52 Ga. App. 69, 182 S.E. 403 (1935).

Participation in a criminal conspiracy may be shown by circumstantial as well as direct evidence. Park v. Huff, 506 F.2d 849 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 423 U.S. 824, 96 S. Ct. 38, 46 L. Ed. 2d 40 (1975).

Declarations of coconspirator admissible. — State had to make a prima facie showing of the existence of a conspiracy, without regard to the declarations of the coconspirators, in order to admit their out-of-court declarations; trial judge could admit testimony by coconspirators before the conspiracy had been proved, provided the conspiracy's existence was ultimately shown at trial. Belmar v. State, 252 Ga. App. 264, 555 S.E.2d 902 (2001).

Hearsay statements made by each defendant implicating their coconspirators in the crimes were properly admitted against all the defendants as coconspirator's statements under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5; a conspiracy among the defendants was shown to have existed, as the evidence indicated that the victim's house was a drug house, that the first defendant's car was seen on the scene around the time of the murder, and that the second defendant later possessed drugs and money in a hotel room shortly after the crimes, and although the defendants all made incriminating statements in jail, the statements were made during the concealment phase as the defendants were still hiding their identities from the police. Brooks v. State, 281 Ga. 14, 635 S.E.2d 723 (2006), cert. denied, 549 U.S. 1215, 127 S. Ct. 1266, 167 L. Ed. 2d 91 (2007).

Trial court did not err by permitting a witness to testify regarding a conversation the witness participated in which took place on the day after the crime in which the defendant and the codefendants made certain admissions concerning the crimes at issue; hearsay statements of coconspirators were admissible when the state at some point before the close of evidence established a prima facie case of conspiracy independent of the coconspirator statement. The state presented ample evidence in the form of testimony from two witnesses present with the defendant and the codefendants in the hours immediately prior to the crimes that the three, together with one of the witnesses, planned to commit a robbery that night, and the statement was clearly within the concealment phase of the conspiracy. Thorpe v. State, 285 Ga. 604, 678 S.E.2d 913 (2009).

Statements made by defendant's nephew during the time the nephew, defendant, and another man conspired to traffic in cocaine were admissible against the defendant in defendant's trial for trafficking in cocaine as the state first proved the existence of the conspiracy and defendant's involvement in the conspiracy. Smith v. State, 253 Ga. App. 131, 558 S.E.2d 455 (2001).

When evidence independent of the testimony of the coconspirators is not sufficient to show a conspiracy, it was error to admit in evidence testimony as to declarations of the alleged conspirators to charge the jury upon the subject of conspiracy and to overrule the grounds of those motions for new trial involving conspiracy. Caldwell v. State, 227 Ga. 703, 182 S.E.2d 789 (1971).

Evidence insufficient. — Evidence of conspiracy between the defendant and a codefendant was not sufficient to render admissible against the former evidence of declarations by the latter. Johnson v. State, 186 Ga. 324, 197 S.E. 786 (1938).

Trial court did not err by denying a defendant's motion for a new trial with regard to the defendant's convictions for armed robbery and possession of a firearm based on the trial court erroneously admitting the testimony of a witness, who was a long-time acquaintance of the co-indictee that the co-indictee had bragged about committing the robbery with the defendant as, although the state failed to establish a prima facie case of conspiracy, the admission was harmless in view of the victims' consistent eyewitness testimony implicating the defendant in the robbery and defendant's admission of the intention to rob the store. Fisher v. State, 295 Ga. App. 501, 672 S.E.2d 476 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to show conspiracy in the following cases. — See Patterson v. State, 199 Ga. 773, 35 S.E.2d 504 (1945); Cowart v. State, 92 Ga. App. 253, 88 S.E.2d 208 (1955); Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 418, 314 S.E.2d 210, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 873, 105 S. Ct. 230, 83 L. Ed. 2d 159 (1984); Dalton v. State, 237 Ga. App. 217, 513 S.E.2d 745 (1999); Freeman v. State, 273 Ga. 137, 539 S.E.2d 127 (2000).

Because the state proved that two masked bandits committed three armed robberies, that defendant and an accomplice attempted to use the credit and debit cards obtained in the robberies immediately after the robberies, that masks and a gun used in the robberies were found in defendant's car, and that defendant told defendant's half-sister that defendant and the accomplice had committed the robberies, the evidence was sufficient to establish the fact of a conspiracy between defendant and the accomplice sufficient to admit declarations by the accomplice at defendant's criminal trial. Dillard v. State, 272 Ga. App. 523, 612 S.E.2d 804 (2005).

Testimony of two witnesses as to statements made by coconspirators was evidence independent of statements made to an inmate witness, and was sufficient to support a jury's finding of a conspiracy; therefore, a trial court did not err in allowing the inmate witness to testify as to statements made by one of the perpetrators of the crime to the inmate witness while both were incarcerated. Dickerson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 29, 633 S.E.2d 367 (2006).

Pendency of Criminal Project

1. In General

Though crime previously committed. — Statement by the defendant coconspirator made after the actual commission of the crime, but while the conspiracy continued is admissible. Evans v. State, 222 Ga. 392, 150 S.E.2d 240, cert. denied, 385 U.S. 953, 87 S. Ct. 336, 17 L. Ed. 2d 231 (1966); Scott v.

Pendency of Criminal Project (Cont'd)
1. In General (Cont'd)

State, 151 Ga. App. 495, 260 S.E.2d 401 (1979).

Conspiracy must not have ended. — “Acts, doings and sayings of the coconspirators” made before or after the crime are admissible as original evidence against all defendants so long as they are made before the evidence shows that the conspiracy has ended. Price v. State, 239 Ga. 439, 238 S.E.2d 24 (1977).

Pendency of the criminal project includes the accomplishment of the crime itself plus concealment of the crime or the identity of the perpetrators. Crowder v. State, 237 Ga. 141, 227 S.E.2d 230 (1976); Welch v. State, 237 Ga. 665, 229 S.E.2d 390 (1976); Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337 (1979); Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979); Scott v. State, 151 Ga. App. 495, 260 S.E.2d 401 (1979); Smith v. State, 244 Ga. 814, 262 S.E.2d 116 (1979).

Rule is that so long as the conspiracy to conceal the fact that a crime has been committed or the identity of the perpetrators of the offense continues the parties to such conspiracy are to be considered so much a unit that the declarations of either are admissible against the other. Evans v. State, 222 Ga. 392, 150 S.E.2d 240, cert. denied, 385 U.S. 953, 87 S. Ct. 336, 17 L. Ed. 2d 231 (1966); Dutton v. Evans, 400 U.S. 74, 91 S. Ct. 210, 27 L. Ed. 2d 213 (1970); Munsford v. State, 235 Ga. 38, 218 S.E.2d 792 (1975); Mills v. State, 236 Ga. 365, 223 S.E.2d 725 (1976); Moore v. State, 240 Ga. 807, 243 S.E.2d 1, cert. denied, 439 U.S. 903, 99 S. Ct. 268, 58 L. Ed. 2d 249 (1978); Hardy v. State, 245 Ga. 272, 264 S.E.2d 209, vacated, 449 U.S. 988, 101 S. Ct. 523, 66 L. Ed. 2d 285 (1980) (remanded for further consideration in light of Godfrey v. Georgia, 446 U.S. 420, 100 S. Ct. 1759, 64 L.Ed.2d 398 (1980)).

Declarations during concealment admissible. — So long as the concealment phase of the conspiracy continues, declarations of either of the conspirators are admissible against the other. Timberlake v. State, 158 Ga. App. 125, 279 S.E.2d 283 (1981).

Statements made by the person with whom the defendant conspired to commit murder, made during the concealment phase of that conspiracy, were admissible against the defendant. Cromer v. State, 253 Ga. 352, 320 S.E.2d 751 (1984).

Agreement not to discuss case ever again. — Conspiracy continues during the concealment phase, after crime has been committed, and when evidence was presented that defendants agreed not to discuss case ever again and crime went unsolved for over two years, concealment phase lasted throughout that time. Fortner v. State, 248 Ga. 107, 281 S.E.2d 533 (1981).

Declarations made during conspiracy, including concealment stage, admissible. — Under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5, the declarations of a conspirator, made during the course of a conspiracy, including the concealment stage, are admissible against coconspirators. Wilbanks v. State, 251 Ga. App. 248, 554 S.E.2d 248 (2001).

Statements by defendant's coconspirator to a third person regarding defendant's actions during the criminal project and during the concealment phase bore sufficient indicia of reliability to be admissible in defendant's criminal trial, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5, and any objection on the grounds of the confrontation clause under U.S. Const., amend. 6 or on hearsay grounds would have lacked merit; accordingly, defendant's counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the admission thereof. Redwine v. State, 280 Ga. 58, 623 S.E.2d 485 (2005).

Indicia of reliability which are determinative of whether a statement may be placed before the jury require that the statement by the declarant be non-narrative; that the declarant is shown by the evidence to know whereof the declarant speaks; that the witness is not apt to be proceeding on faulty recollection; and that the circumstances show that the declarant had no apparent reason to lie to the witness. Not all of the indicia need be present to support admissibility of the statement. Waters v. State, 174 Ga. App. 916, 331 S.E.2d 893 (1985).

Coconspirator's offer to share theft proceeds. — Trial court properly admitted the testimony of coconspirator's sister recounting another coconspirator's offer to share the theft proceeds with her if she would keep silent about the matter. Truitt v. State, 174 Ga. App. 687, 331 S.E.2d 64 (1985).

Accomplices. — Acts, sayings, and conduct of one accomplice during the pendency of a conspiracy, not alone in its perpetration but also in its subsequent concealment, are admissible against another accomplice. Carter v. State, 106 Ga. 372, 32 S.E. 345, 71 Am. St. R. 262 (1899); Bragg v. State, 52 Ga. App. 69, 182 S.E. 403 (1935); Thompson v. State, 58 Ga. App. 593, 199 S.E. 568 (1938); Mitchell v. State, 86 Ga. App. 292, 71 S.E.2d 756 (1952); Hutchins v. State, 229 Ga. 804, 194 S.E.2d 442 (1972).

2. Termination of Conspiracy

Only the admissions made pending the conspiracy or fraudulent scheme should be considered, and not those made after the conspiracy was terminated or the fraudulent scheme executed. Turner v. State, 43 Ga. App. 799, 160 S.E. 509 (1931).

Whether conspiracy ended crucial question. — Crucial question in determining whether the statement of one conspirator may be used as evidence of guilt against another conspirator is whether the conspiracy had ended at the time the statement was made. Munsford v. State, 235 Ga. 38, 218 S.E.2d 792 (1975).

Conspiracy deemed continuing until ultimate purpose accomplished. — If the conspiracy contemplates actions beyond an initial criminal act such as concealment, the conspiracy is deemed in progress until its ultimate purpose is accomplished, and admissions made by one conspirator while attempting to conceal the case may be admissible against the other conspirators. Knight v. State, 239 Ga. 594, 238 S.E.2d 390 (1977).

In legal contemplation, the enterprise may not be at an end so long as the concealment of the crime or the identity of all the conspirators has not been disclosed. Mitchell v. State, 86 Ga. App. 292, 71 S.E.2d 756 (1952).

Arrest alone does not necessarily end. — Conspiracy or the concealment phase of the conspiracy does not necessarily end just because one or more participants have been arrested and jailed. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 100 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

Conspiracy does not necessarily end simply because one or more of the conspirators have been arrested. Chews v. State, 187 Ga. App. 600, 371 S.E.2d 124 (1988).

Even though one codefendant had been arrested when a tape recording of a conversation between that codefendant and another was made, the tape was admissible since the arrest did not end the conspiracy and the substance of the recorded conversation indicated that the concealment phase of the conspiracy was ongoing. Cromwell v. State, 218 Ga. App. 481, 462 S.E.2d 388 (1995).

Evidence admissible from concealment phase. — As the conspiracy between the two brothers to conceal their roles in two murders had not terminated when one brother wrote a letter incriminating the other, that letter was clearly admissible against the second brother because the letter concerned the murders and was written during the concealment phase of their conspiracy as to those crimes. Arevalo v. State, 275 Ga. 392, 567 S.E.2d 303 (2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 962, 123 S. Ct. 1749, 155 L. Ed. 2d 515 (2003).

Statements made by a defendant's accomplice that implicated the defendant in crimes that included a murder and an armed robbery were admissible against the defendant under the coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule because the statements were made during the concealment phase of the conspiracy prior to the accomplice making a confession that the accomplice had committed the murder. Jackson v. State, 292 Ga. App. 312, 665 S.E.2d 20 (2008).

Incriminating statements to police end conspiracy. — Statement made to police by a conspirator, whether inculpatory or exculpatory as to the declarant, which statement incriminates the other conspirator as a party to the crime, constitutes termination of the conspiracy. Thus, such statement by a conspirator is not made during the pendency of the criminal project and is not admissible. Crowder v. State, 237 Ga. 141, 227 S.E.2d 230 (1976); Hannah v. State, 144 Ga. App. 677, 242 S.E.2d 334 (1978).

When first defendant made a statement to police and implicated second defendant, defendants' conspiracy ended and the statement was only admissible against first defendant; thus, the statement's admission as against a second defendant constituted a Bruton violation and under the circumstances warranted a reversal of the second defendant's convictions. Meadows v. State, 264 Ga. App. 160, 590 S.E.2d 173 (2003).

Statement to an investigator by the defendant's alleged coconspirator that the coconspirator drove the defendant to a restaurant that the defendant robbed was not admissible against the defendant under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5, as it was not made during the pendency of the conspiracy, but in fact constituted a termination of the conspiracy. Verdree v. State, 299 Ga. App. 673, 683 S.E.2d 632 (2009).

Confession made to police by a conspirator, in which other conspirators were identified and their participation was described, was not made during the pendency of the criminal project but was made after the enterprise was ended. Such confession therefore was not admissible under former Code 1933, § 38-306 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5) and was inadmissible at the trial of conspirator under former Code 1933, § 38-414 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52). Crowder v. State, 237 Ga. 141, 227 S.E.2d 230 (1976); Welch v. State, 237 Ga. 665, 229 S.E.2d 390 (1976); Corson v. State, 144 Ga. App. 559, 241 S.E.2d 454 (1978); Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979); Livingston v. State, 268 Ga. 205, 486 S.E.2d 845 (1997).

Statements after conspiracy terminated admissible only against declarant. — Declarations or conduct of one joint conspirator, made after the enterprise is ended, are inadmissible except against the person making them, and against others must be rejected as narrative merely of past occurrence. Hicks v. State, 11 Ga. App. 265, 75 S.E. 12 (1912); Wall v. State, 153 Ga. 309, 112 S.E. 142 (1922).

Evidence as to admissions of guilt involving the defendant, made by a coconspirator after the termination of the conspiracy, was admissible since it appeared that the admissions were made in the presence of the defendant personally and were then freely and voluntarily declared by the defendant to be true. Gunter v. State, 19 Ga. App. 772, 92 S.E. 314 (1917).

Conspiracy was found to be terminated in the following case. — See Green v. State, 115 Ga. App. 685, 155 S.E.2d 655 (1967) (arrest).

Admission of codefendant's statement to investigator was reversible error because the statement was not made during the pendency of the criminal project, the conspiracy terminated when the statement was made to the investigator and thus, the statement was inadmissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Sharber v. State, 268 Ga. App. 365, 601 S.E.2d 732 (2004).

Procedure

1. Order of Proof

Conspiracy must be proved first. — Only after the fact of the conspiracy has been proven may the declarations by any one of the conspirators during the pendency of the criminal project be admissible against all. Stinson v. State, 151 Ga. App. 533, 260 S.E.2d 407 (1979).

When there was sufficient evidence introduced prior to disputed testimony to make out prima facie case of conspiracy, court did not err in admitting declarations of coconspirator. Salmon v. State, 249 Ga. 785, 294 S.E.2d 500 (1982); Blue v. State, 212 Ga. App. 847, 433 S.E.2d 635 (1994).

But rule not inflexible. — While it may generally be the better practice to require a prima facie case of conspiracy first to be made, before admitting evidence of the acts and declarations of one of the alleged conspirators, there is no inflexible rule to that effect. Coleman v. State, 141 Ga. 731, 82 S.E. 228 (1914); Hutchins v. State, 229 Ga. 804, 194 S.E.2d 442 (1972); Fallings v. State, 232 Ga. 798, 209 S.E.2d 151 (1974).

Coconspirator's statement allowed into evidence, notwithstanding the contention that the fact of conspiracy was not proved before the admission of the statement, since the evidence adduced at trial, independent of the coconspirator's statement, was sufficient to prove a conspiracy. Isaac v. State, 269 Ga. 875, 505 S.E.2d 480 (1998).

Evidence admitted conditioned on proof of conspiracy. — Incriminating statements of coconspirator were properly admitted since it was allowed on the condition that a conspiracy be shown by all of the evidence, since order of proof is in the discretion of the judge and there is no error in admitting such declarations if a prima facie case of conspiracy is proved by the state. Blalock v. State, 250 Ga. 441, 298 S.E.2d 477 (1983).

Evidence becomes competent after showing of conspiracy. — Though evidence is objectionable because conspiracy was not proved, if it be afterwards shown, it renders the evidence competent. Barrow v. State, 121 Ga. 187, 48 S.E. 905 (1904); Tate v. State, 41 Ga. App. 300, 152 S.E. 609 (1930).

Hearsay evidence admissible. — Admission of hearsay testimony by coconspirators was proper based on the prosecutor's representation that the state would introduce defendant's statement, which had been ruled admissible and which revealed that coindictes were together prior to and participated in the murder. The statement satisfied the requirement of a prima facie case without regard to the hearsay testimony itself. Waldrip v. State, 267 Ga. 739, 482 S.E.2d 299 (1997), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 917, 118 S. Ct. 305, 139 L. Ed. 2d 235 (1997).

It is within the discretion of the trial judge to allow the admission of testimony by coconspirators before the existence of the conspiracy is disclosed, provided that such existence is afterwards shown during the trial. Tate v. State, 41 Ga. App. 300, 152 S.E. 609 (1930); Jenkins v. State, 73 Ga. App. 515, 37 S.E.2d 230 (1946); Denison v. State, 258 Ga. 690, 373 S.E.2d 503 (1988).

Trial judge has sound discretion as to the order of proof, and if a prima facie case of conspiracy is shown from the whole evidence, the admitting of a declaration by an alleged coconspirator is not error. Wortham v. State, 184 Ga. 674, 192 S.E. 720 (1937); Hutchins v. State, 229 Ga. 804, 194 S.E.2d 442 (1972); Fallings v. State, 232 Ga. 798, 209 S.E.2d 151 (1974); Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979).

Error is harmless. — While it is error to admit declarations of coconspirators before the fact of conspiracy is proved, the error becomes harmless when subsequently during the trial the conspiracy is clearly established by the direct and circumstantial evidence adduced. Driggers v. State, 51 Ga. App. 370, 180 S.E. 619 (1935).

Early admission of declarations not grounds for new trial. — While it is the better practice to require proof of the conspiracy before admitting such declarations, the admission of the evidence in a different order will not be ground for a new trial. McDaniel v. State, 103 Ga. 268, 30 S.E. 29 (1898); Tate v. State, 41 Ga. App. 300, 152 S.E. 609 (1930).

No error shown by reference to conspiracy during opening statement. — With regard to a defendant's trial and conviction for malice murder arising from the severe physical abuse of the defendant's five-year-old nephew, the defendant failed to meet the burden of proving that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the comments made by the state during open statements with regard to the defendant and the defendant's mother beating the victim all the time and that the pair carried out the actions together. Peterson v. State, 282 Ga. 286, 647 S.E.2d 592 (2007).

2. Duty of Jury

Determination of conspiracy. — It is for the jury to determine from the whole evidence whether a conspiracy has been shown, and if they find that none has been established, it is their duty not to consider the acts and declarations of the supposed coconspirator. Coleman v. State, 141 Ga. 731, 82 S.E. 228 (1914); Nelson v. State, 51 Ga. App. 207, 180 S.E. 16 (1935); Wortham v. State, 184 Ga. 674, 192 S.E. 720 (1937); Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979).

Question of existence of a conspiracy is ultimately for the jury to determine. Harris v. State, 255 Ga. 500, 340 S.E.2d 4 (1986).

Necessary findings. — Before the jury can consider such declaration, it must find (1) that a conspiracy was in existence (2) when the statement was made. Parker v. State, 145 Ga. App. 205, 243 S.E.2d 580 (1978).

3. Instructions

Erroneous instructions. — It was error, likely to have been very prejudicial, to charge a jury in effect that the state's contention of conspiracy would be established if the jury believed beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a conspiracy or common purpose between "any two" of the three defendants, not necessarily including the defendant on trial. Wortham v. State, 184 Ga. 674, 192 S.E. 720 (1937).

Proper instruction. — Trial court did not err when the court gave the instruction to the jury that informed the jury of the circumstances under which the alleged declarations of an alleged coconspirator made out of the presence of the defendant are to be disregarded, and the instruction immediately followed the trial court's instruction that any admissions made by one or more of the conspirators during and in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy could be considered by the jury against all the conspirators if the existence of the conspiracy had been shown beyond a reasonable doubt by evidence other than the declarations of alleged coconspirators; the instruction correctly stated the law and did not impermissibly shift the burden of proof to the defendant by failing to include "not" in the pattern charge, so as to read "not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that a conspiracy exists." Castillo v. State, 281 Ga. 579, 642 S.E.2d 8 (2007).

Trial court properly refused to give the defendant's request to charge that, in determining whether a conspiracy existed, the jury could not consider the declarations of the alleged accomplice. Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983).

4. Unavailability of Declarant

State need not prove declarant's unavailability as a prerequisite to admission of the declarant's declarations made during pendency of criminal project. Gay v. State, 249 Ga. 747, 294 S.E.2d 476 (1982).

Non-testifying codefendant's admission properly admitted. — Admission of incriminating statements made by the defendant's coconspirator to an informant to the effect that defendant agreed to sell methamphetamine to the informant, and arranging details of the transaction, was proper, despite the fact that the coconspirator did not appear at trial and was not available for cross-examination, because the statements were made during the pendency of the criminal project, the coconspirator was not asserting past facts and had personal knowledge of the identities and roles of the participants, the possibility that the statements were founded on faulty memory was decidedly remote in that the referenced occurrences were taking place almost simultaneously with the statements, and, believing that the coconspirator was setting up a lucrative drug deal with a sympathetic customer, the coconspirator had no reason to lie about the defendant's involvement in the crime. Bowden v. State, 279 Ga. App. 173, 630 S.E.2d 792 (2006).

General Consideration

Constitutionality. — Admission of dying declarations does not contravene that provision of the Constitution of the United States which provides that the accused shall be confronted with the witnesses against the accused. Jones v. State, 130 Ga. 274, 60 S.E. 840 (1908). See Campbell v. State, 11 Ga. 353 (1852).

If the declarant does not die, the statement is not admissible as a dying declaration. Stembridge v. Georgia, 343 U.S. 541, 72 S. Ct. 834, 96 L. Ed. 1130 (1952).

Must be in prosecution for homicide of deceased. — Declarations made by a person in extremis are not admissible as dying declarations except where the defendant is on trial for killing declarant. Wooten v. Wilkins, 39 Ga. 223, 99 Am. Dec. 456 (1869); Miliken v. State, 8 Ga. App. 478, 69 S.E. 915 (1910).

Declarations, though made by a person in extremis, are not admissible as dying declaration in a homicide case since the defendant is not on trial for killing the declarant, though the declarant may have been killed in the transaction to which the trial relates. Westberry v. State, 175 Ga. 115, 164 S.E. 905 (1932).

Dying declarations can be used by the accused for the purpose of showing the accused's innocence. Johnson v. State, 169 Ga. 814, 152 S.E. 76 (1930).

Credibility of declarations. — Even though all the conditions be satisfied still the declarations should be received with great caution. Carter v. State, 2 Ga. App. 254, 58 S.E. 532 (1907); Smith v. State, 9 Ga. App. 403, 71 S.E. 606 (1911).

Evidence of a dying declaration should be received with great caution because, first, the declarant is not under oath, second, because the declarant is not subject to cross-examination, third, because of the likelihood of its being misquoted, and fourth, because although it is of a species of proof spoken of as an anomaly, and contrary to all the general rules of evidence, yet it has, where it is received, the greatest weight with juries. Hardy v. State, 76 Ga. App. 488, 46 S.E.2d 536 (1948).

Ambiguous statements. — When a statement is susceptible of two constructions, one that the declarant realized the declarant was in a dying condition and the other that the declarant might recover, and when the other circumstances are sufficient to show prima facie that the declarant was in the article of death and conscious of the declarant's condition, a declaration as to the cause of the declarant's death and the person who killed the declarant is not to be excluded because of such ambiguity. Parker v. State, 197 Ga. 340, 29 S.E.2d 61 (1944).

ing, the declarant did not believe declarant was going to die, may become admissible by subsequent affirmation since the declarations were referred to and affirmed as to their truth at the time when the declarant was conscious the declarant was dying. Cooper v. State, 182 Ga. 42, 184 S.E. 716 (1936).

When victim makes same statement before and after awareness of impending death. — There was no error in permitting the state's witnesses to testify about the victim's statement, made prior to the time that the victim was aware of the victim's impending death, about who had beaten the victim, since there was evidence that the victim later made the same statement while fully aware of the victim's impending death. Wright v. State, 254 Ga. 484, 330 S.E.2d 358 (1985).

Witherspoon*, 228 Ga. 485, 186 S.E.2d 534 (1971); Lloyd v. State, 257 Ga. 108, 355 S.E.2d 423 (1987); Richie v. State, 258 Ga. 361, 369 S.E.2d 740 (1988).

Declarations

1. Completeness

Exclusion as fragmentary and incomplete. — Dying declaration which was uncompleted because the declarant' became unconscious before finishing the declarant's statement is not thereby rendered inadmissible. But if it appears that the statement was intended by the declarant to be connected with and qualified by other statements which from any cause the declarant was prevented from making, the statement should be excluded as fragmentary and incomplete. Kalb v. State, 195 Ga. 544, 25 S.E.2d 24 (1943), overruled on other grounds, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976).

Telling of less than full knowledge. — If a dying person finishes the statement the person wishes to make, it is no objection to the statement's admissibility as a dying declaration that the person told only a portion of what the person might have been able to tell. A distinct statement of facts meets the requirement of completeness. Kalb v. State, 195 Ga. 544, 25 S.E.2d 24 (1943), overruled on other grounds, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976).

Failure to use full name. — Dying declarations sought to be admitted were not objectionable because the full name of the defendant was not stated, there being other evidence to show that the name used by the deceased referred to the accused. Emmett v. State, 195 Ga. 517, 25 S.E.2d 9, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 774, 64 S. Ct. 76, 88 L. Ed. 464 (1943), overruled on other grounds, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976).

Fact that the deceased in the deceased's dying declaration did not call the full name of the defendant does not render this evidence inadmissible when taken in connection with the other evidence that there was no other person present at the time of the homicide with such name. Patterson v. State, 199 Ga. 773, 35 S.E.2d 504 (1945).

Since the victim's dying declaration referred to a woman at the scene of a crime, and since the state established that the defendant was the only woman present when the victim was killed, the victim's failure to use her name does not render the victim's statement inadmissible. Dixon v. State, 243 Ga. 46, 252 S.E.2d 431 (1979).

2. Factual Requirements

Reason for admission is based on the fact that a man in a dying condition would not misrepresent a fact. Hill v. State, 41 Ga. 484 (1871); Solomon v. State, 2 Ga. App. 92, 58 S.E. 381 (1907).

Must be certain and definite. — All vague and indefinite expressions, all language that does not distinctly point to the cause of death, and death's attending circumstances, but requires to be aided by supposition or inference in order to establish facts tending to criminate the respondent should be held inadmissible. Mitchell v. State, 71 Ga. 128

(1883); Odom v. State, 13 Ga. App. 687, 79 S.E. 858 (1913).

Must be as to facts. — Dying declarations are competent, provided the declarations do not amount to the mere expression of an opinion by the deceased as to the cause and manner of the declarant's death. The rule of law is that a dying declaration to be admissible must consist of a statement of a matter of fact, and a declaration which amounts to the mere expression of an opinion by the person making it should not be received in evidence. White v. State, 100 Ga. 659, 28 S.E. 423 (1897).

Presumption of personal knowledge. — When want of knowledge does not appear either from the statement itself or from other evidence in the case, it must be presumed that the declarant stated a fact within the declarant's knowledge. In these circumstances, it was a question for the jury whether the declaration represented the primary knowledge of the deceased or merely the deceased's opinion. Strickland v. State, 167 Ga. 452, 145 S.E. 879 (1928); Hawkins v. State, 213 Ga. 749, 101 S.E.2d 710 (1959).

3. Scope of Declarations

Declarations should be limited to the cause of death and the person who killed the victim. Harris v. State, 142 Ga. 627, 83 S.E. 514 (1914).

But not strictly limited. — Dying declaration is not strictly limited to the physical cause of death and the identity of the killer but may include the res gestae of the homicide as part of the cause of death. McAllister v. State, 246 Ga. 246, 271 S.E.2d 159 (1980).

Dying declarations admissible to prove any relevant fact embraced in the res gestae of the killing. Wilkerson v. State, 91 Ga. 729, 17 S.E. 990, 44 Am. St. R. 63 (1893). See Bush v. State, 109 Ga. 120, 34 S.E. 298 (1899); Rozier v. State, 197 Ga. 420, 29 S.E.2d 602 (1944).

Relation required. — Dying declarations must relate to the cause of death or the person who killed the deceased in order to be admissible. Rozier v. State, 197 Ga. 420, 29 S.E.2d 602 (1944).

Proper parts of res gestae. — Every fact or circumstance shedding light upon the transaction, including such conversation and conduct of the parties as are properly parts of the res gestae of the homicide, may lawfully go to the jury in a dying declaration made by the deceased. Taylor v. State, 120 Ga. 857, 48 S.E. 361 (1904); Harris v. State, 142 Ga. 627, 83 S.E. 514 (1914); Rozier v. State, 197 Ga. 420, 29 S.E.2d 602 (1944).

4. Identity of Assailant

Mere expression of opinion as to who assailant was, where it was manifestly impossible that the deceased could have seen the assailant or known certainly who the assailant was, is not admissible as a dying declaration. Strickland v. State, 167 Ga. 452, 145 S.E. 879 (1928).

Conclusions based on appearances. — When a declaration by the declarant's terms, taken in connection with the circumstances, merely expresses the declarant's belief as to the identity of the guilty person, it should be excluded; however, if the declarant sees the declarant's assailant or assailants, and from appearances which the declarant may describe the declarant draws a conclusion as to the assailant's identity, it is admissible. Hawkins v. State, 213 Ga. 749, 101 S.E.2d 710 (1958).

Question of fact. — When the evidence did not show that it was impossible for the deceased to have seen the person who shot the deceased, it was a question of fact for the jury to determine whether the deceased had personal knowledge of the assailant's identity. Hawkins v. State, 213 Ga. 749, 101 S.E.2d 710 (1958).

5. Elicited by Questions

Admissibility is not affected by the fact that the statements may have been elicited in response to questions put to deceased by bystanders. Brinson v. State, 22 Ga. App. 649, 97 S.E. 102 (1918); Davis v. State, 204 Ga. 467, 50 S.E.2d 604 (1948).

Not rebuttal of other evidence. — If preliminary statement made by the deceased as to the deceased's condition, in answer to questions, could be construed as lacking definiteness as a statement that the deceased was conscious of the fact that the deceased was going to die, this would not necessarily rebut the other evidence and circumstances from which it could have been inferred that the deceased believed the deceased would die. Davis v. State, 204 Ga. 467, 50 S.E.2d 604 (1948).

Conscious of Condition

Must be conscious of condition. — It must appear to the court that there was a probability that the deceased was conscious of the deceased's impending death at the time of making the dying declarations. Walton v. State, 79 Ga. 446, 5 S.E. 203 (1887); Young v. State, 114 Ga. 849, 40 S.E. 1000 (1902); Crews v. State, 44 Ga. App. 546, 162 S.E. 146 (1932); Gibbs v. State, 190 Ga. 207, 9 S.E.2d 248 (1940); Freeman v. State, 233 Ga. 745, 213 S.E.2d 643 (1975).

Means unimportant. — It does not matter how or by what means the deceased becomes conscious that the deceased is dying. Smith v. State, 9 Ga. App. 403, 71 S.E. 606 (1911).

Declarations of a person since deceased are admissible to show that the person was conscious of the person's dying condition. Jenkins v. State, 190 Ga. 556, 9 S.E.2d 909 (1940).

Statement of recovery hopes most common. — Most common way to determine whether or not the deceased was conscious of impending death at the time of making the declaration is to look at the deceased's statement concerning the deceased's hope of recovery. Wallace v. State, 90 Ga. 117, 15 S.E. 700 (1892).

Consciousness may be inferred. — Consciousness on the part of the deceased that the deceased was dying and was actually in extremis may be inferred, not only from the deceased's statements, but also from the nature of the wound and other circumstances. Smith v. State, 110 Ga. 255, 34 S.E. 204 (1899); Young v. State, 114 Ga. 849, 40 S.E. 1000 (1902); Jefferson v. State, 137 Ga. 382, 73 S.E. 499 (1912); Johnson v. State, 169 Ga. 814, 152 S.E. 76 (1930); Crews v. State, 44 Ga. App. 546, 162 S.E. 146 (1932); Keith v. State, 175 Ga. 385, 165 S.E. 262 (1932); McCullough v. State, 177 Ga. 315, 170 S.E. 220 (1933); Simmons v. State, 181 Ga. 761, 184 S.E. 291 (1936); Rouse v. State, 183 Ga. 551, 188 S.E. 904 (1936); Etheridge v. State, 199 Ga. 773, 35 S.E.2d 504 (1945); Hardy v. State, 76 Ga.

App. 488, 46 S.E.2d 536 (1948); Davis v. State, 204 Ga. 467, 50 S.E.2d 604 (1948); Stembridge v. State, 82 Ga. App. 214, 60 S.E.2d 491 (1950); Norris v. State, 258 Ga. 889, 376 S.E.2d 653 (1989).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for malice murder, the trial court did not err by admitting into evidence statements that the victim made to friends who found the victim wounded that the same person who had accused the victim of committing a robbery earlier in the day (the defendant) was the same person who shot the victim. The victim had lost consciousness after no longer being able to walk after having suffered a gunshot wound to the chest and was found several hours later fully knowing of the need of immediate medical attention; therefore, a prima facie showing for the admission of the victim's statements as dying declarations was established. Ventura v. State, 284 Ga. 215, 663 S.E.2d 149 (2008).

Identification testimony of murder victim who had suffered third-degree burns over 95 percent of the victim's body, and was aware of the victim's impending death at the time the identification was made, was properly admitted. Norris v. State, 258 Ga. 889, 376 S.E.2d 653 (1989).

Consciousness of impending death may be inferred from the declarant's statements, the nature of declarant's wounds, and other circumstances. Early v. State, 170 Ga. App. 158, 316 S.E.2d 527 (1984).

Asking for physician. — Fact that the deceased whose last statements were sought to be admitted, might have asked for a doctor does not establish, and might not of itself be taken in the mind of the jury as in any way indicating that the deceased was unaware of the deceased's dying condition, since it is but natural that even a dying man could wish to be attended by a physician. Patterson v. State, 199 Ga. 773, 35 S.E.2d 504 (1945).

Notwithstanding that a physician informed the declarant that there was a chance for the declarant to recover, declarations were held admissible. Bryant v. State, 80 Ga. 272, 4 S.E. 853 (1887).

Officer's reassurance to victim did not preclude admission. — Fact that victim asked whether the victim was going to die, the victim's knowledge of the serious gunshot wound, the occurrence of the victim's death within a matter of hours, and the victim's great pain established a prima facie case that the victim realized that death was impending and, therefore, the ultimate determination was for the jury; the police officer's reassurance of the victim did not preclude admission of the dying declaration. Morgan v. State, 275 Ga. 222, 564 S.E.2d 192 (2002).

Time Requirements

Dying declaration need not be made at the time of the transaction or immediately thereafter. McAllister v. State, 246 Ga. 246, 271 S.E.2d 159 (1980).

Although life may have continued longer than was expected despair of dying may exist and be sufficiently proved. Emmett v. State, 195 Ga. 517, 25 S.E.2d 9, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 774, 64 S. Ct. 76, 88 L. Ed. 464 (1943), overruled on other grounds, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976).

Actual period of survival after making the declarations is not controlling. The necessary element is the declarant's expectation; and the subsequent duration of life, whatever it may turn out to be, has no relation to the declarant's state of mind when the declarant made the declaration. Johnson v. State, 169 Ga. 814, 152 S.E. 76 (1930); Crews v. State, 44 Ga. App. 546, 162 S.E. 146 (1932); Rouse v. State, 183 Ga. 551, 188 S.E. 904 (1936); Emmett v. State, 195 Ga. 517, 25 S.E.2d 9, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 774, 64 S. Ct. 76, 88 L. Ed. 464 (1943), overruled on other grounds, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976); Kalb v. State, 195 Ga. 544, 25 S.E.2d 24 (1943), overruled on other grounds, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976); Davis v. State, 204 Ga. 467, 50 S.E.2d 604 (1948); Stembridge v. State, 82 Ga. App. 214, 60 S.E.2d 491 (1950); Ayers v. State, 215 Ga. 325, 110 S.E.2d 669 (1959); Ward v. State, 226 Ga. 724, 177 S.E.2d 378 (1970).

Declarations were held admissible despite length of survival in the following cases. — See Johnson v. State, 169 Ga. 814, 152 S.E. 76 (1930) (survived three weeks after declaration); Cooper v. State, 182 Ga. 42, 184 S.E. 716 (1936) (survived several days after declaration which was made 11 months after shooting); Miles v. State, 182 Ga. 75, 185 S.E. 286 (1936) (survived 33 or 34 days after declaration); Emmett v. State, 195 Ga. 517, 25 S.E.2d 9, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 774, 64 S.

Ct. 76, 88 L. Ed. 464 (1943), overruled on other grounds, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976).

Long intervals evidence of state of mind.

— Fact that death does not immediately follow the declaration will not render evidence of the declaration inadmissible as a matter of law; although, if the interval is long, this fact may be some evidence that the declarant had not despaired of recovery. Emmett v. State, 195 Ga. 517, 25 S.E.2d 9, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 774, 64 S. Ct. 76, 88 L. Ed. 464 (1943), overruled on other grounds, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976).

Lapse of time between the declaration and the time of death may be some evidence that the declarant has not despaired of recovery, but it is not controlling. Early v. State, 170 Ga. App. 158, 316 S.E.2d 527 (1984).

Fact that victim survived 54 days following the victim's declaration did not make declaration inadmissible. Early v. State, 170 Ga. App. 158, 316 S.E.2d 527 (1984).

Procedure

1. Evidentiary Foundation

Affirmative proof not required. — It is not, in order to render dying declarations admissible in evidence upon a trial for murder, essential for the state to show that the declarant affirmatively said the declarant was in a dying condition or used language of like import. Gibson v. State, 52 Ga. App. 297, 183 S.E. 83 (1935); Parker v. State, 197 Ga. 340, 29 S.E.2d 61 (1944); Ayers v. State, 215 Ga. 325, 110 S.E.2d 669 (1959).

Only prima facie evidence needed. — In order to submit a dying declaration to the jury it is only necessary for the state to submit facts which prima facie prove that the deceased was in the article of death at the time of the statement and that the deceased was conscious of impending death. Dumas v. State, 62 Ga. 58 (1878); Mitchell v. State, 71 Ga. 128 (1883); Walton v. State, 79 Ga. 446, 5 S.E. 203 (1887); Bird v. State, 128 Ga. 253, 57 S.E. 320 (1907); Moody v. State, 1 Ga. App. 772, 58 S.E. 262 (1907); Hawkins v. State, 141 Ga. 212, 80 S.E. 711 (1914); Green v. State, 154 Ga. 117, 113 S.E. 536 (1922); Faulkner v. State, 166 Ga. 645, 144 S.E. 193 (1928); Johnson v. State, 169 Ga. 814, 152 S.E. 76 (1930); Gibbs v. State, 41 Ga. App. 574, 153 S.E. 613 (1930); Crews v. State, 44

Decedent's declarations admissible as foundation. — While testimony of decedent's spouse as to decedent's declarations to the spouse did not indicate the cause of the decedent's death or the person who killed the decedent, but strongly tended to show that the decedent was in a dying condition and was conscious thereof, they were admissible to support other declarations made by the decedent to other persons in which the decedent had indicated, not only consciousness of the decedent's dying condition, but facts going to show the cause of the decedent's death and the person who killed the decedent. Gibbs v. State, 190 Ga. 207, 9 S.E.2d 248 (1940).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize admission of statements as dying declarations in the following cases. — White v. State, 100 Ga. 659, 28 S.E. 423 (1897); Lee v. State, 2 Ga. App. 481, 58 S.E. 676 (1907); Faulkner v. State, 166 Ga. 645, 144 S.E. 193 (1928); Etheridge v. State, 187 Ga. 30, 199 S.E. 185 (1938); Jenkins v. State, 190 Ga. 556, 9 S.E.2d 909 (1940); Davis v. State, 204 Ga. 467, 50 S.E.2d 604 (1948); Hubbard v. State, 208 Ga. 472, 67 S.E.2d 562 (1951); Lee v. State, 211 Ga. 170, 84 S.E.2d 353 (1954); Phillips v. State, 260 Ga. 742, 399 S.E.2d 202 (1991).

Declarations were erroneously admitted in the following cases. — See Lyens v. State, 133 Ga. 587, 66 S.E. 792 (1909); Howard v. State, 144 Ga. 169, 86 S.E. 540 (1915).

2. Witnesses

All evidence from same witness not required. — It is not necessary that the testimony relating to declarations by the deceased as to the cause of the deceased's death, the person who killed the deceased, the deceased's dying condition, and the deceased's consciousness of such fact at the time the declarations were made, should come from the same witness. Gibbs v. State, 190 Ga. 207, 9 S.E.2d 248 (1940).

Individual testimony requirements. — It was not necessary that the testimony of each witness should disclose that the deceased was in a dying condition and conscious thereof, in order for such testimony to be admissible, but it was permissible to lay the foundation by other witnesses. Emmett v. State, 195 Ga. 517, 25 S.E.2d 9, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 774, 64 S. Ct. 76, 88 L. Ed. 464 (1943), overruled on other grounds, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976).

3. Impeachment

Bad character of deceased. — On a trial for murder, when dying declarations of the deceased have been introduced against the accused, it is competent for the latter to impeach these declarations by showing that the deceased, because of general bad character, was unworthy of belief. Redd v. State, 99 Ga. 210, 25 S.E. 268 (1896); Johnson v. State, 169 Ga. 814, 152 S.E. 76 (1930).

Conflicting statements. — Statements of the deceased in conflict with proved dying declarations, if any have been made, are admissible. Johnson v. State, 169 Ga. 814, 152 S.E. 76 (1930); Keith v. State, 175 Ga. 385, 165 S.E. 262 (1932).

4. Instructions

Contents of instructions. — Better practice when charging on the question of dying declarations to charge substantially in the language of the statute, without explaining to the jury why such declarations are admitted. Hubbard v. State, 208 Ga. 472, 67 S.E.2d 562 (1951).

Decedent's condition. — Jury should be instructed that the statements attributed to the deceased should be received and considered with great caution, and should have no weight unless the jury is satisfied from the evidence that such statements were made by the deceased at a time when the deceased was in a dying condition, and that the deceased was at that time conscious that the deceased was dying. Cooper v. State, 182 Ga. 42, 184 S.E. 716 (1936).

When defendant made no objection to the admission of testimony as to statements of murder victim on the ground that it was not shown that such declarations of the deceased were conscious utterances in the apprehension and immediate prospect of death, and the witness who testified to the statement also testified that victim was in a dying condition and knew that the victim was, court did not err in refusing a new trial merely because the court made no reference in the court's charge to dying declarations, and did not charge the jury that the alleged dying statement was admitted by the court prima facie and that before the jury could receive it and act upon the declaration they must believe that the declaration was made by the deceased in the article of death and when the deceased was conscious of the deceased's condition. Allen v. State, 187 Ga. 178, 200 S.E. 109 (1938).

Credibility. — While the testimony of a witness, whose evidence goes to the jury through the medium of dying declarations, is to be considered under the same rules that govern them in determining the credibility of other witnesses who testify from the stand, the failure of the judge to charge upon the subject of such rules will not be a sufficient reason for granting a new trial, in the absence of an appropriate and timely written request asking instructions upon the subject. Carter v. State, 227 Ga. 788, 183 S.E.2d 392 (1971).

Admission over objection. — When testimony relating to a dying declaration of the decedent is received in evidence and no objection is made thereto, it is not error for the court to give in charge to the jury the legal principles applicable to dying declarations. Craig v. State, 55 Ga. App. 207, 189 S.E. 727 (1937).

Proof beyond reasonable doubt. — It was error for the court, when the defendant personally introduced dying declarations as an affirmative defense, to instruct the jury in effect that the jury would have to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the deceased was, at the time the deceased made such declarations, in the article of death and conscious of the deceased's condition. Poole v. State, 47 Ga. App. 303, 170 S.E. 309 (1933).

Failure to instruct. — Failure of the court to add, in addition to other instructions given upon the subject of dying declarations, the further instruction that the dying declaration must be received with caution, is not reversible error. Key v. State, 177 Ga. 329, 170 S.E. 230 (1933).

When in a homicide prosecution during colloquy between counsel and the trial judge with reference to admission of dying declaration the court stated that the court would charge the jury on dying declarations, but nothing further was said by counsel or court pertaining to the evidence of a dying declaration, it was not reversible error to fail to charge this law. Dudley v. State, 67 Ga. App. 256, 19 S.E.2d 833 (1942).

Failure of the court to instruct the jury as to the jury's consideration of dying declarations is not cause for a new trial since the state does not rely for conviction solely on dying declarations, and since there is no appropriate and timely written request for instructions as to dying declarations. Murray v. State, 214 Ga. 350, 104 S.E.2d 905 (1958).

When the state relies solely on a dying declaration, it is error to fail to instruct the jury thereon. Holcomb v. State, 249 Ga. 658, 292 S.E.2d 839 (1982).

When the trial court fails to properly instruct the jury as to the jury's consideration of statements preliminarily admitted by the court as dying declarations, the error is not cause for a new trial since the state does not rely for conviction solely on dying declarations and since there is no appropriate and timely written request for instructions as to the declarations. Kitchens v. State, 256 Ga. 1, 342 S.E.2d 320 (1986).

5. Duty of Jury

Ultimate determination. — When the foundation for a declaration has been prima facie established, the evidence is properly admitted, and the ultimate determination as to whether the person making the declaration was in articulo mortis and realized that death was impending, is a matter for the jury. Freeman v. State, 112 Ga. 48, 37 S.E. 172 (1900); Darby v. State, 22 Ga. App. 606, 96 S.E. 707 (1918); Gibbs v. State, 41 Ga. App. 574, 153 S.E. 613 (1930); McCullough v. State, 177 Ga. 315, 170 S.E. 220 (1933); Cooper v. State, 182 Ga. 42, 184 S.E. 716 (1936); Etheridge v. State, 187 Ga. 30, 199 S.E. 185 (1938), for comment, see 1 Ga. B.J. 49 (1939); Simmons v. State, 181 Ga. 761, Weight of declarations. — Circumstances surrounding a dying declaration are matters which may properly be considered by the jury in determining the weight to be given to the declaration. Hubbard v. State, 208 Ga. 472, 67 S.E.2d 562 (1951).

ANALYSIS

DISPARAGEMENT OF OWN TITLE

ADVERSE POSSESSION

General Consideration

Presumption. — Until the contrary appears, every man is presumed to be cognizant of the law; and whenever admissions are made, as to the title of property, by the party in possession, the presumption is, that the statements were made, not only with a knowledge of the facts, but of the party's legal rights, also, growing out of those facts. Butler v. Livingston, 15 Ga. 565 (1854).

Possession required. — Statement by the alleged predecessor in title was properly rejected because it did not appear that at the time of making the admission referred to the party making the statement was in possession of the land. George v. Williams, 177 Ga. 630, 170 S.E. 790 (1933).

Proof of privity required. — Before the sayings of one person should be received in evidence against another, it ought to be clear beyond a reasonable doubt, that the other claims under him, or bears to him some relation of privity. Aiken v. Cato, 23 Ga. 154 (1857).

Tax returns. — Tax returns were held in the nature of declarations to show adverse possession. Smith v. Haire, 58 Ga. 446 (1877).

County property inventory purporting to include all property belonging to the county is in the nature of such a declaration. Ogden v. Dodge County, 97 Ga. 461, 25 S.E. 321 (1895).

Testimony held not admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-7 in the following cases. — See Ehrlich v. Mills, 203 Ga. 600, 48 S.E.2d 107 (1948); Turner v. McKee, 97 Ga. App. 531, 103 S.E.2d 658 (1958).

Disparagement of Own Title

Competency depends on time of making. — Whether admissions made by defendant, while in possession of land levied on and claimed, in disparagement of defendant's title, are competent, depends, in some measure, upon the time when the admissions were made. If made before the commencement of the plaintiff's suit, the admissions would be admissible even in favor of the claimant. Powell v. Watts, 72 Ga. 770 (1884). See also Rountree v. Gaulden, 128 Ga. 737, 58 S.E. 346 (1907).

Party privy required. — While declarations by a person in possession of property, in disparagement of the person's own title, shall be admissible in evidence in favor of anyone and against privies, it was error to admit the testimony of a witness as to a statement made by someone else involved, which adjoined him, neither of these persons being in possession of the land and neither being in privity with either of the parties to the present proceeding. Morgan v. Lester, 215 Ga. 570, 111 S.E.2d 228 (1959).

Declarations of a deceased person in disparagement of the deceased's title to land, made while in possession thereof, are admissible in evidence, not only against the declarant and those claiming under the declarant, but also for or against strangers. McLeod v. Swain, 87 Ga. 156, 13 S.E. 315 (1891); Hall v. Collier, 146 Ga. 815, 92 S.E. 536 (1917); McCrea v. Georgia Power Co., 179 Ga. 1, 174 S.E. 798 (1934), later appeal, 187 Ga. 708, 15 S.E.2d 664 (1939); Kimbrough v. Rutherford, 70 Ga. App. 294, 28 S.E.2d 370 (1943).

Party having two distinct titles to property may disclaim one and rely entirely on the other, and after such election is made, the admissions of one's privies in the disclaimed title are not evidence against that one. Oliver v. Persons, 30 Ga. 391, 76 Am. Dec. 657 (1860).

Possessor of personal property. — Declarations of one in possession of personal property, adverse to one's title, are evidence against a party holding under one by purchase subsequent to the making of such declarations. Doughty v. McMillan, 92 Ga. 818, 19 S.E. 59 (1894).

Party declaring against part interest. — Declaration of one in possession of a lot of land, with a deed to the whole lot, that one did not claim a particular part of the land, is admissible in evidence against a privy of the declarant. Callaway v. Beauchamp, 147 Ga. 17, 92 S.E. 538 (1917).

Declarations by a donor of land in favor of the donor's own title, made after the donor has delivered possession of the land to the donee, are not admissible in evidence against the latter. Declarations of a donor against the donor's title and in favor of that of the donee bind the donor and donor's privies in estate, and consequently are admissible in the donee's favor against one who derived title from the donor after the declarations were made. Ogden v. Dodge County, 97 Ga. 461, 25 S.E. 321 (1895).

Admissions of trustee. — If one was a continuing trustee, holding the legal title for the cestui que trust, one's admissions, while actually handling the subject matter of the trust, would be admissible. Knorr v. Raymond, 73 Ga. 749 (1884).

Declarations of an assignor were admissible if the declarations were made in disparagement of the assignor's title while the assignor was in possession. Wright v. Zeigler Bros., 70 Ga. 501 (1883).

Claim cases. — In a claim case, the sayings of the defendant in execution while in possession, or of any other person in possession of the land, are evidence for the plaintiff in execution to show that the defendant, or such third person, was not the tenant of the claimant. Ozmore v. Hood & Kiddoo, 53 Ga. 114 (1874).

Adverse Possession

Declarations are admissible to characterize the possession as bearing on whether the possession was permissive or adverse, when that fact is relevant, but not to show the truth of the statements, without more. Sausey v. White, 143 Ga. 7, 84 S.E. 58 (1915).

Declarations of a person in possession of land are admissible to characterize the possession as bearing on whether the possession was permissive or adverse, when that fact is relevant, but not to show the truth of the statements without more. Higdon v. Dixon, 203 Ga. 67, 45 S.E.2d 423 (1947).

Declarations admissible for limited purpose. — Declarations in favor of one's own title are admissible for no other purpose than to prove adverse possession. Rucker v. Rucker, 136 Ga. 830, 72 S.E. 241 (1911).

Nature of predecessor's title. — When a claimant relies upon statements of the claimant's father to show that the latter had purchased land with money of his wife, taking title thereto in his own name, declarations made by the father, while in possession of the land, that the land was not bought with money of his wife; but with his own funds, are admissible to show his adverse possession. Wallace v. Mize, 153 Ga. 374, 112 S.E. 724 (1922).

24-3-8. Declarations against interest by one since deceased.

Declarations and entries made by a person since deceased against his interest and not made with a view to pending litigation shall be admissible in evidence in any case. (Orig. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

History generally. — Statute is a mere codification of a well-settled principle in the law. While such evidence is hearsay, it is admitted as one of the exceptions to the rule against hearsay evidence on the ground of the extreme improbability of its falsity. Massee-Felton Lumber Co. v. Sirmans, 122 Ga. 297, 50 S.E. 92 (1905).

Former Code 1933, § 38-309 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-8) had no application since the party seeking to give hearsay evidence was not a competent witness under former Code 1933, § 38-1603 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-9-1). Bloodworth v. Taylor, 208 Ga. 770, 69 S.E.2d 747 (1952); Dye v. Richards, 210 Ga. 601, 81 S.E.2d 820 (1954).

Prerequisites. — To render declaration or entries admissible, it must appear that the declarant is deceased, that the declarant possessed competent knowledge of the facts, or that it was his duty to know them, and the declarations were at variance with the declarant's interests. Field v. Boynton, 33 Ga. 239 (1862); Murdock v. Adamson, 12 Ga. App. 275, 77 S.E. 181 (1913).

Declarations of persons since deceased must be trustworthy before the declarations are admissible under the rule of necessity, and self-serving declarations are not admissible. Chrysler Motors Corp. v. Davis, 226 Ga. 221, 173 S.E.2d 691 (1970).

Declarations of a decedent to others are admissible if there are no other witnesses to the alleged occurrence, it being for the jury, under appropriate instructions, to determine their weight and credibility. Transamerica Ins. Co. v. Thrift-Mart, Inc., 159 Ga. App. 874, 285 S.E.2d 566 (1981).

Time of making declarations. — Declarations are not admissible in behalf of a claimant, if made after the judgment was obtained or while the litigation was pending and with reference thereto. James v. Taylor, 93 Ga. 275, 20 S.E. 309 (1893).

Nature of declarations. — Declarations of one, whether verbal or in writing, of a matter which is against one's interest at the time, and who is since deceased, is admissible as evidence in a suit between third persons, whether such declaration relates to the present or past occurrences. Field v. Boynton, 33 Ga. 239 (1862); Barbre v. Scott, 75 Ga. App. 524, 43 S.E.2d 760 (1947).

Declaration containing statements both for and against declarant's interest. — If the declaration or entry contains statements both in favor of the declarant and against the declarant's interest, the statements are to be balanced, and if those in favor of interest equal or preponderate over those against interest the declaration is not admissible; otherwise it is. Massee-Felton Lumber Co. v. Sirmans, 122 Ga. 297, 50 S.E. 92 (1905).

If a declaration or entry contains statements both in favor of the declarant and against the declarant's interest, the statements are to be balanced, and if those in favor of interest equal or preponderate over those against interest, the declaration is not admissible. Mattison v. Travelers Indem. Co., 167 Ga. App. 521, 307 S.E.2d 39 (1983).

Weight of evidence. — Declarations or entries when admitted are evidence as to any fact stated therein which was within the knowledge of the declarant or which it was the declarant's duty to know. Massee-Felton Lumber Co. v. Sirmans, 122 Ga. 297, 50 S.E. 92 (1905).

Cause of injury. — Declaration by an injured party tending to exonerate the defendant is admissible. Georgia R.R. & Banking v. Fitzgerald, 108 Ga. 507, 34 S.E. 316, 49 L.R.A. 175 (1899); Murdock v. Adamson, 12 Ga. App. 275, 77 S.E. 181 (1913).

Declaration as to marriage. — When equivocal conduct such as cohabitation is relied upon as a circumstance material to the issue to prove marriage, declarations of one of the parties since deceased, made pending the period of cohabitation, disaffirming the marriage, are admissible. Drawdy v. Hesters, 130 Ga. 161, 60 S.E. 451 (1905).

Insurance. — When an insurance policy is sued on by a creditor who was a beneficiary, a letter of the insured to a third person stating that the insured had not applied for any insurance is admissible. Chandler v. Mutual Life & Indus. Ass'n, 131 Ga. 82, 61 S.E. 1036 (1908).

It was permissible for the defendant to prove that a few months before applying for the insurance the insured made to third persons declarations contrary to the facts stated in the application, the same being admissible as declarations of a person, since deceased, against the deceased's interest, and not made with a view to pending litigation. Henderson v. Jefferson Std. Life Ins. Co., 39 Ga. App. 609, 147 S.E. 901 (1929), overruled on other grounds, Lawler v. Life Ins. Co. of Ga., 90 Ga. App. 481, 83 S.E.2d 281 (1954).

Parties to contracts. — Testimony of a person other than the party to the contract that the person heard the deceased state that the person was going to will the deceased's property to the plaintiff is admissible. Brewer v. Mackey, 177 Ga. 813, 171 S.E. 273 (1933).

In a personal injury case, to the extent that an employer implied or stated that a deceased employee agreed to make certain deliveries, those statements were admissible because alleged oral agreements by the decedent were considered against the decedent's interest. Thompson v. Club Group, Ltd., 251 Ga. App. 356, 553 S.E.2d 842 (2001).

Proffer of declaration by beneficiary thereof. — Decedent's declarations in disparagement of decedent's title would be admissible pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-8, as the declarations negate the existence of a gift and are, therefore, against the decedent's pecuniary interest; that such declarations are proffered by one who would benefit from their admission into evidence is not a valid ground for excluding the declarations from the jury's consideration. Cole v. Cole, 205 Ga. App. 332, 422 S.E.2d 230 (1992).

Parties and their privities. — It is not necessary for purposes of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-8 that a declarant be a party or in privity with a party. Horan v. Pirkle, 197 Ga. App. 151, 397 S.E.2d 734 (1990).

Pending litigation. — While a confessor to a crime may believe that litigation is impending, that one might well become involved in criminal proceedings as a result of one's confession, the possibility or probability of litigation does not translate into "pending" litigation as the term is used in O.C.G.A. § 24-3-8. State Farm Auto. Ins. Co. v. Great Am. Ins. Co., 164 Ga. App. 457, 297 S.E.2d 355 (1982).

When defendant's deceased brother had been fingerprinted and booked at the time he was interviewed by police, his statement, made with a view to litigation, was inadmissible. Jones v. State, 196 Ga. App. 842, 397 S.E.2d 181 (1990).

Rule of necessity. — Since deceased was the only eyewitness to events leading up to a fire, the deceased's out-of-court declarations in the form of the deceased's "trustworthy" deposition testimony are admissible as coming within the rule of necessity. Transamerica Ins. Co. v. Thrift-Mart, Inc., 159 Ga. App. 874, 285 S.E.2d 566 (1981).

Declarations held inadmissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-8 in the following cases. — See Hollis v. Sales, 103 Ga. 75, 29 S.E. 482 (1897); *State Banking Co. v. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Former dead man's statute rendered a witness incompetent to testify as to a conversation with a person since deceased regardless of whether the testimony might be admissible under other rules of evidence. Willis v. Kennedy, 267 Ga. 165, 476 S.E.2d 246 (1996).

Declarations as to the location of the property line by the deceased husband were competent evidence of the line and landmarks thereon since this line had been claimed as the true line and was at least impliedly agreed to by the deceased husband. Banks v. Myrick, 149 Ga. App. 252, 253 S.E.2d 873 (1979).

Actions to quiet title. — In an action to quiet title to real property, testimony about a rock foundation being the location of the family home was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-9. Resseau v. Bland, 268 Ga. 634, 491 S.E.2d 809 (1997).

GENERAL CONSIDERATION

PROCEEDINGS

General Consideration

For case discussing history of statute, see Burns v. State, 191 Ga. 60, 11 S.E.2d 350 (1940) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10).

Constitutional right of confrontation. — Confrontation Clause is not offended when the defendant waives at trial, through defendant's counsel at that time, the use of prior sworn testimony of an inaccessible witness and therefore cannot claim the waiver was error for the first time on appeal. Riley v. State, 237 Ga. 124, 226 S.E.2d 922 (1976).

Statute is really a rule of necessity. Herndon v. Chamberlain, 39 Ga. App. 207, 146 S.E. 503 (1929); Parrott v. Edwards, 113 Ga. App. 422, 148 S.E.2d 175 (1966).

Statute has been uniformly applied to criminal as well as to civil cases. Burns v. State, 191 Ga. 60, 11 S.E.2d 350 (1940).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10 is an exception to the hearsay rule to prove the testimony of a witness at a former trial under certain circumstances when the witness is unavailable at a later trial. Gottschalk v. State, 160 Ga. App. 769, 287 S.E.2d 107 (1982).

Relationship of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10 to O.C.G.A. § 9-11-32(a)(5). — Specific and limited provision for the admission into evidence in a subsequent trial of depositions taken in a prior action is made by O.C.G.A. § 9-11-32(a)(5). All other issues relating to the admission into evidence in a subsequent trial of testimony taken in connection with a prior action must be resolved under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10. Transamerica Ins. Co. v. Thrift-Mart, Inc., 159 Ga. App. 874, 285 S.E.2d 566 (1981).

Whether the party objecting had adequate opportunity to cross-examine the witness at the previous trial is the central issue in determining whether this statute applies. Cates v. State, 245 Ga. 30, 262 S.E.2d 796 (1980); Craft v. State, 154 Ga. App. 682, 269 S.E.2d 490 (1980).

For prior testimony to be admissible, the party challenging the testimony must have had the opportunity at the earlier proceeding to cross-examine the witness on the issue to be decided in the later proceeding, which necessarily means that the earlier and later proceedings have to involve substantially the same issue. In re Spruell, 227 Ga. App. 324, 489 S.E.2d 48 (1997).

Sole question determined by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10 is whether the party against whom the former testimony is now offered had an adequate opportunity by cross-examination to sift this testimony. Transamerica Ins. Co. v. Thrift-Mart, Inc., 159 Ga. App. 874, 285 S.E.2d 566 (1981).

When the issues and parties are identical and the party against whom the testimony is offered called the witness to the stand at the previous hearing or trial, the need for cross-examination is basically satisfied, and the requirement of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10 is met. Barnes v. State, 256 Ga. 370, 349 S.E.2d 387 (1986).

Parties and issues in actions must be same. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10 requires as the prerequisite to the admission in a subsequent action of the prior testimony of a since deceased witness that the parties and issues in the two actions be substantially the same. Transamerica Ins. Co. v. Thrift-Mart, Inc., 159 Ga. App. 874, 285 S.E.2d 566 (1981); GMC v. Moseley, 213 Ga. App. 875, 447 S.E.2d 302 (1994).

Substantial compliance with O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10. — Substantial and not a literal compliance with the conditions of this statute is all that is required. Mitchell v. State, 71 Ga. 128 (1883).

Same issues required. — Evidence as to what a deceased witness testified on a previous trial is not admissible when it appears that the issue therein involved was not substantially the same as that in controversy on the trial at which such evidence is tendered. Lathrop v. Adkisson, 87 Ga. 339, 13 S.E. 517 (1891); Whitaker v. Arnold, 110 Ga. 857, 36 S.E. 231 (1900).

Statute does not require that all the issues in the two proceedings be the same; but the issue to which the former testimony was directed must be the same as the issue upon which the testimony is offered in the second. Craft v. State, 154 Ga. App. 682, 269 S.E.2d 490 (1980).

Statute does not demand that all the issues or parties be the same but requires only that the issue on which the testimony was offered in the first suit be the same as the issue upon which the testimony is offered in the second. Vanhouten v. State, 193 Ga. App. 871, 389 S.E.2d 534 (1989).

Companion case growing out of a common occurrence, though not wholly between the same parties, is a former trial within the meaning of this statute. Myrick v. Sievers, 104 Ga. App. 95, 121 S.E.2d 185 (1961).

Probative value. — Testimony admitted under this statute has probative value as original testimony. Maynard v. Rawlins, 45 Ga. App. 91, 163 S.E. 269 (1932).

Burden of proof. — Party seeking introduction of the testimony at a prior trial must show that the witness is inaccessible. Riley v. State, 237 Ga. 124, 226 S.E.2d 922 (1976).

Party seeking to introduce testimony given at a prior trial must show that the witness is inaccessible. Whether a witness is inaccessible depends upon the diligence shown by the party seeking to use the witness's testimony in ascertaining the witness's whereabouts and the attempts made to bring the witness into court. Johnson v. State, 197 Ga. App. 384, 398 S.E.2d 432 (1990).

Proof by parol evidence. — When a witness who testified at a committing trial subsequently died, on the final trial of the same case in the superior court the witness's testimony so given was admissible, and there being nothing to show that the testimony was reduced to writing, it was competent to prove such testimony by parol. Robinson v. State, 68 Ga. 833 (1882).

Testimony compelled by grant of immunity admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10. — Testimony may be admitted pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10 although that testimony was compelled by the state after a grant of immunity. Kesler v. Veal, 165 Ga. App. 475, 300 S.E.2d 217 (1983).

Deceased Witnesses

Deceased witness's testimony from preliminary hearing admissible. — Recounting of deceased's preliminary hearing testimony which had been given subject to cross-examination by the defendant's attorney does not violate the defendant's right of confrontation. Little v. Balkcom, 245 Ga. 285, 264 S.E.2d 219 (1980).

Error to admit testimony from deceased witness. — Because defendant had no opportunity to confront a deceased witness at an accomplice's trial, the trial court erred in admitting the witness's statements at defendant's trial pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10; in addition, the statements were testimonial and violated defendant's confrontation rights. Willingham v. State, 279 Ga. 886, 622 S.E.2d 343 (2005).

Deceased codefendant's entire testimony at defendant's first trial was admissible at retrial even though defendant's character was incidentally placed in issue. Chambers v. State, 213 Ga. App. 414, 444 S.E.2d 820 (1994).

Deceased witness testimony from sentencing proceeding admissible. — Prior testimony of a deceased witness at a sentencing trial held before the defendant withdrew the defendant's guilty plea was admissible at the defendant's guilt/innocence trial. The state sought the admission of this testimony, which included the witness's account of the witness's rape and the murders of family members to help meet the state's burden to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of these crimes; furthermore, there was no limitation on the defendant's cross-examination of the witness at the sentencing trial. Martin v. State, 284 Ga. 504, 668 S.E.2d 685 (2008).

Inaccessible Witnesses

Whether a witness is inaccessible depends upon the diligence shown by the party seeking to use the witness's testimony of a former trial in ascertaining where the witness is and in attempting to bring the witness into court. Gaither v. State, 227 Ga. 668, 182 S.E.2d 434 (1971); Robertson v. State, 124 Ga. App. 119, 183 S.E.2d 47 (1971); Smith v. State, 247 Ga. 453, 276 S.E.2d 633 (1981).

Prima facie showing of inaccessibility is sufficient. Williams v. Wolff, 3 Ga. App. 737, 60 S.E. 357 (1908); Savannah Bank & Trust Co. v. Estill, 142 Ga. 447, 83 S.E. 137 (1914); Estill v. Citizens & S. Bank, 153 Ga. 618, 113 S.E. 552 (1922); Goodwin v. Allen, 83 Ga. App. 615, 64 S.E.2d 212 (1951).

Mere contention insufficient. — State is allowed to use a transcript of testimony of an absent witness upon the state's showing, and not mere contention, that after diligent search, the state could not locate the witness.

Hewell v. State, 136 Ga. App. 420, 221 S.E.2d 219 (1975), later appeal, 139 Ga. App. 622, 229 S.E.2d 92 (1976), rev'd on other grounds, 238 Ga. 578, 234 S.E.2d 497 (1977).

Proof of inability to find a witness after diligent search may be sufficient to establish that such witness is inaccessible within the meaning of this statute. Robinson v. State, 128 Ga. 254, 57 S.E. 315 (1907); Goodwin v. State, 49 Ga. App. 223, 174 S.E. 742 (1934); Jones v. State, 250 Ga. 166, 296 S.E.2d 598 (1982).

Parties never inaccessible. — Party to a pending case is not, though beyond the jurisdiction of the court when the case is tried, inaccessible within the meaning of this statute. Crumm v. Allen & Co., 11 Ga. App. 203, 75 S.E. 108 (1912).

Sufficiency of the search for the witness who testified previously is a matter left to the discretion of the trial judge, whose judgment will not be reversed unless a manifest abuse of discretion appears. Robinson v. State, 128 Ga. 254, 57 S.E. 315 (1907); Goodwin v. State, 49 Ga. App. 223, 174 S.E. 742 (1934); Norris v. State, 58 Ga. App. 399, 198 S.E. 714 (1938); Gaither v. State, 227 Ga. 668, 182 S.E.2d 434 (1971).

Witness beyond the limits of the state is inaccessible. Adair v. Adair, 39 Ga. 75 (1869); Smith v. State, 72 Ga. 114 (1883); Swift v. Oglesby & Smith, 8 Ga. App. 540, 70 S.E. 97 (1911); Brinson Ry. v. Beard, 11 Ga. App. 737, 76 S.E. 76 (1912); Brown v. Matheson, 142 Ga. 396, 83 S.E. 98 (1914); Smith v. State, 147 Ga. 689, 95 S.E. 281 (1918); Estill v. Citizens & S. Bank, 153 Ga. 618, 113 S.E. 552 (1922); Taylor v. State, 155 Ga. 785, 118 S.E. 675 (1923); Carswell, Moxley & Son v. Harrison, 33 Ga. App. 140, 126 S.E. 293 (1924); Norris v. State, 58 Ga. App. 399, 198 S.E. 714 (1938); Goodwin v. Allen, 83 Ga. App. 615, 64 S.E.2d 212 (1951).

Word "inaccessible" does not apply to a witness who, though absent from the county of the trial, is nevertheless at the time of the trial, a resident of a different county in the same state. Broach v. Kelly, 71 Ga. 698 (1883), overruled on other grounds, Ward v. Hudco Loan Co., 254 Ga. 294, 328 S.E.2d 729 (1985); Taylor v. State, 126 Ga. 557, 55 S.E. 474 (1906); Brinson Ry. v. Beard, 11 Ga. App. 737, 76 S.E. 76 (1912).

In the case of a witness who may be difficult to locate, the state should begin to look for the witness sooner than the date of the beginning of the trial. Gaither v. State, 227 Ga. 668, 182 S.E.2d 434 (1971).

Disability of witness. — In criminal prosecutions, according to the weight of authority, the mere temporary illness or disability of a witness is not sufficient to justify the reception of the witness's former testimony; it must appear that the witness is in such a state, either mentally or physically, that in reasonable probability the witness will never be able to attend the trial. Tanner v. State, 213 Ga. 820, 102 S.E.2d 176 (1958).

Privilege as constituting inaccessibility. — Inaccessibility of witness has been construed to include assertion of privilege by a witness. Wiseman v. State, 249 Ga. 559, 292 S.E.2d 670 (1982).

Testimony from escaped prisoner admissible. — In trial for murder, where witness from preliminary hearing was not available at time of trial, having had escaped from prison, defendant's right of confrontation under U.S. Const., amend. 6 was not violated by admission of transcript of witness's testimony at defendant's preliminary hearing, at which defendant was represented by counsel and witness was cross-examined. Stidem v. State, 246 Ga. 637, 272 S.E.2d 338 (1980).

Failure to grant continuance proper. — Trial court did not err in admitting the testimony given by an inaccessible witness under oath in a former trial on substantially the same issue and between the same parties, and, thus, did not err in denying defendant's motion for a continuance as the former testimony was deemed "inherently reliable", its use did not violate the accused's right of confrontation, and defendant did not show that the witness could have been located if a continuance had been granted as diligent attempts had already been undertaken, without success, to locate the witness. Dillingham v. State, 275 Ga. 665, 571 S.E.2d 777 (2002).

Testimony from probation revocation hearing admissible when witness unavailable. — When a witness made it clear that the witness would not testify about the shooting at trial, the witness's sworn testimony at the defendant's probation revocation hearing, which concerned substantially the same issue and where the witness was subject to cross-examination, was admissible under

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10. Hardeman v. State, 277 Ga. App. 180, 626 S.E.2d 138 (2006).

Evidence sufficient to show inaccessibility of witnesses in the following cases. — See Armstrong Furn. Co. v. Nickle, 110 Ga. App. 686, 140 S.E.2d 72 (1964); Hewell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 622, 229 S.E.2d 92 (1976), rev'd on other grounds, 238 Ga. 578, 234 S.E.2d 497 (1977); Tolbert v. State, 239 Ga. App. 703, 521 S.E.2d 827 (1999); Walton v. State, 272 Ga. 73, 526 S.E.2d 333 (2000).

Evidence insufficient to show inaccessibility of witnesses in the following cases. — See Herndon v. Chamberlain, 39 Ga. App. 207, 146 S.E. 503 (1929); Standridge v. Standridge, 224 Ga. 102, 160 S.E.2d 377 (1968); Whatley v. State, 230 Ga. 523, 198 S.E.2d 176 (1973); Century Dodge, Inc. v. Mobley, 155 Ga. App. 712, 272 S.E.2d 502 (1980).

Inaccessibility not shown. — Trial court's ruling that defendant failed to show inaccessibility of a witness upon the exercise of due diligence was affirmed since defendant had six months after defendant's arraignment attempted three times to serve a subpoena on the witness prior to trial, and since defendant declined the trial court's offer of a continuance for the purpose of further searching for the witness. Carter v. State, 266 Ga. App. 691, 598 S.E.2d 76 (2004).

Inaccessibility of a witness is to be determined within the sound discretion of the court and will not be disturbed unless there is a manifest abuse of discretion. Estill v. Citizens & S. Bank, 153 Ga. 618, 113 S.E. 552 (1922); Brooks v. State, 69 Ga. App. 697, 26 S.E.2d 549 (1943); Pacific Nat'l Fire Ins. Co. v. Beavers, 87 Ga. App. 294, 73 S.E.2d 765 (1952); Tanner v. State, 213 Ga. 820, 102 S.E.2d 176 (1958); Robertson v. State, 124 Ga. App. 119, 183 S.E.2d 47 (1971); Riley v. State, 237 Ga. 124, 226 S.E.2d 922 (1976); LaCount v. State, 237 Ga. 181, 227 S.E.2d 31 (1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1046, 97 S. Ct. 753, 50 L. Ed. 2d 761 (1977); Hewell v. State, 139 Ga. App. 622, 229 S.E.2d 92 (1976), rev'd on other grounds, 238 Ga. 578, 234 S.E.2d 497 (1977); Smith v. State, 247 Ga. 453, 276 S.E.2d 633 (1981); Gibson v. State, 160 Ga. App. 615, 287 S.E.2d 595 (1981); Jones v. State, 250 Ga. 166, 296 S.E.2d 598 (1982); Kesler v. Veal, 165 Ga. App. 475, 300 S.E.2d 217 (1983); Thomas v. State, 192 Ga. App. 744, 386 S.E.2d 402 (1989); Barry v.

State, 214 Ga. App. 418, 448 S.E.2d 243 (1994); Palmer v. Taylor, 215 Ga. App. 546, 451 S.E.2d 486 (1994).

Standard on appeal of question of inaccessibility. — Primary consideration on appeal is not whether the Court of Appeals agrees with the trial court's finding that a witness was inaccessible, but whether that finding constitutes an abuse of discretion. Kesler v. Veal, 165 Ga. App. 475, 300 S.E.2d 217 (1983).

Proceedings

Survival of action. — When a parent began suit against a railroad for damages for a personal injury to the parent, and subsequently died from the results of the injury, and a suit for the homicide was brought by the parent's child, answers of the decedent to interrogatories taken during the decedent's life in the suit were admissible in the action by the child. Atlanta & W.P.R.R. v. Venable, 67 Ga. 697 (1881).

Substantial similarity not found. — Suit for personal injuries to a minor, brought in the minor's behalf by the minor's father as next friend, is not, either as to cause of action or as to parties, actually or substantially the same as a suit by the father in the father's own right for loss of the minor's services, occasioned by those injuries. Hooper v. Southern Ry., 112 Ga. 96, 37 S.E. 165 (1900).

Preliminary hearings. — Introduction of testimony previously taken of a witness at a preliminary hearing is permitted if it is shown either that the witness is out of the jurisdiction or that the witness cannot with due diligence be found within the state. LaCount v. State, 237 Ga. 181, 227 S.E.2d 31 (1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1046, 97 S. Ct. 753, 50 L. Ed. 2d 761 (1977).

When the victim died before trial, the victim's preliminary hearing testimony identifying defendant as a burglar was admissible. Igle v. State, 223 Ga. App. 498, 478 S.E.2d 622 (1996).

Testimony given at hearing on suppression of evidence. — Transcript of the testimony of an unavailable witness who testified for the defendant at the hearing on defendant's motion to suppress evidence was admissible since the testimony involved essentially the same issue as in the trial. Williams v. State, 214 Ga. App. 280, 447 S.E.2d 676 (1994), aff'd, 265 Ga. 471, 457 S.E.2d 665 (1995).

Testimony given at coroner's inquest. — Testimony as to the substance of evidence given at a coroner's inquest by a witness since deceased was admissible when offered for impeachment purposes. Darby v. Moore, 144 Ga. 758, 87 S.E. 1067 (1916).

Production of articles present at former trial. — When the testimony of a deceased witness who had testified at the former trial contained references to certain physical objects, which at the former trial were in court, this fact did not stop the operation of this statute on the ground that such articles were not produced in court at the trial now under review nor offered in evidence, even though the state did not account for their absence. Bloodworth v. State, 161 Ga. 332, 131 S.E. 80 (1925).

Agreed writing. — Evidence of a witness, since deceased, given on a former trial, on the same case, between the same parties, reduced to writing and agreed upon by counsel, is admissible on a subsequent trial. Walker v. Walker, 14 Ga. 242 (1853); Smith v. State, 28 Ga. 19 (1859); Adair v. Adair, 39 Ga. 75 (1869); Lathrop v. Adkisson, 87 Ga. 339, 13 S.E. 517 (1891).

Ex parte affidavits. — Statute does not authorize the admission in evidence on the final trial of the case an ex parte affidavit made by a witness since deceased for use on the hearing of an application for interlocutory injunction in the same case. Fender v. Ramsey & Phillips, 131 Ga. 440, 62 S.E. 527 (1908); Byrd v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 185 Ga. 625, 196 S.E. 72 (1938).

Testimony given at execution of an affidavit for an arrest warrant. — In a probation revocation proceeding, a court clerk's testimony regarding a wife's statements at the time of an application for an arrest warrant was not admissible since the party against whom the warrant was offered had not had the opportunity to cross-examine the wife. Farmer v. State, 266 Ga. 869, 472 S.E.2d 70 (1996).

"Former trial" includes a commitment hearing. Wiseman v. State, 249 Ga. 559, 292 S.E.2d 670 (1982).

Guilty plea to a reduced criminal charge is proper evidence as an admission in a subsequent civil action, despite the fact that the admission was the result of a compromise in the criminal case. Kesler v. Veal, 165 Ga.

App. 475, 300 S.E.2d 217 (1983).

Statement of child witness about abuse of victim not admissible. — Out-of-court statements of a child witness who observes the physical abuse of another child, but who is not personally a victim of such abuse, may not be admitted as an exception to the hearsay rule under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-10. Thornton v. State, 264 Ga. 563, 449 S.E.2d 98 (1994).

Testimony in probation revocation hearings. — Trial court erred in considering the prior testimony of witnesses who were not shown to be dead, disqualified, or otherwise inaccessible in a probation revocation hearing; nevertheless, any inadmissible hearsay was merely cumulative of the admissible probative testimony which was sufficient to show by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant committed the offense of aggravated assault. Wolcott v. State, 278 Ga. 664, 604 S.E.2d 478 (2004).

Admission of cumulative testimony denied. — Defendant's reading into evidence the prior testimony of an unavailable witness was properly denied since the testimony would have been cumulative of other testimony, except as to a nonprobative matter. Pickens v. State, 225 Ga. App. 792, 484 S.E.2d 731 (1997).

Former testimony was properly admitted in the following cases. — See Banks v. Bradwell, 140 Ga. 640, 79 S.E. 572 (1913); Hunter v. State, 147 Ga. 823, 95 S.E. 668 (1918); *Sheppard v. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Proof without compliance. — An instrument may be properly admitted as having been sufficiently proved pursuant to former Code 1933, § 38-707 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-7-5), irrespective of whether or not there was a sufficient compliance with former Code 1933, § 38-312 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-11). *Rieves v. Comparison of handwriting. — Deed proven to be 30 years of age, purporting to be signed by the alleged grantor and under which the grantor surrendered possession to the person purporting to be the grantee who by the grantee and the grantee's privies in estate remained in possession, was so far proven to be the genuine deed of the alleged grantor, and so far established the genuineness of the grantor's signature thereto, as to authorize the deed's admission in evidence, for the purpose of a comparison of handwriting, upon the trial of a cause involving the question of the genuineness of the signature of such grantor to another instrument. Goza v. Browning, 96 Ga. 421, 23 S.E. 842 (1895).

REQUIREMENTS FOR ADMISSION

History generally. — Statute did not arise from a legislative enactment, but from a codification of the general rule. Terry v. Brown, 142 Ga. 224, 82 S.E. 566 (1914).

Former dead man's statute rendered a witness incompetent to testify as to a conversation with a person since deceased regardless of whether the testimony might be admissible under other rules of evidence. Willis v. Kennedy, 267 Ga. 165, 476 S.E.2d 246 (1996).

Statute is declaratory of the common law. Whigby v. Burnham, 135 Ga. 584, 69 S.E. 1114 (1911).

Statute provides one of the specified cases in which the general hearsay rule has been relaxed. Hines v. Donaldson, 193 Ga. 783, 20 S.E.2d 134 (1942).

Vital records law. — It was never intended that the vital statistics act (former Code 1933, § 88-1102 et seq., see O.C.G.A. Ch. 10, T. 31) pertaining to vital records should repeal the provisions of former Code 1933, § 38-303 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-12). Stewart v. State, 72 Ga. App. 308, 33 S.E.2d 744 (1945).

Rule as to proof of race-ancestry is not so strict as the rule as to proof of pedigree which confines evidence of reputation to general repute in the family. White v. Holderby, 192 F.2d 722 (5th Cir. 1951).

Possession of land cannot be established by family repute. Luttrell v. Whitehead, 121 Ga. 699, 49 S.E. 691 (1905).

Cited in Rea v. Pursley, 170 Ga. 788, 154 S.E. 325 (1930); Garner v. Wood, 188 Ga. 463, 4 S.E.2d 137 (1939); Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Saul, 189 Ga. 1, 5 S.E.2d 214 (1939); Garrett v. State, 203 Ga. 756, 48 S.E.2d 377 (1948); Byers v. Lieberman, 126 Ga. App. 582, 191 S.E.2d 470 (1972); Simeonides v. Zervis, 127 Ga. App. 506, 194 S.E.2d 324 (1972); Mincey v. Mincey, 233 Ga. 512, 212 S.E.2d 345 (1975); Darling v. State, 248 Ga. 485, 284 S.E.2d 260 (1981); Johnson v. Bialach, 167 Ga. App. 775, 307 S.E.2d 295 (1983).

Relationship

Relationship cannot be proved by reputation in community outside of family. Lamar v. Allen, 108 Ga. 158, 33 S.E. 958 (1899).

Branches of same family. — When the question is whether any, or what, relationship exists between two supposed branches of the same family, it is sufficient to establish the connection of the deceased declarant with either branch in order to render such declaration admissible. Terry v. Brown, 142 Ga. 224, 82 S.E. 566 (1914).

Next of kin. — It was competent for a caveatrix to support a contention that she was the next of kin of the decedent by proving declarations to that effect made by the latter while in life. Malone v. Adams, 113 Ga. 791, 39 S.E. 507, 84 Am. St. R. 259 (1901).

Relationship to jurors. — In order for a new trial to be granted on the ground that the prosecutor was related to one of the jurors, it must be shown that the witness, testifying to such relationship, was testifying either from personal knowledge or from knowledge acquired by some means within the purview of the law. Davis v. State, 24 Ga. App. 776, 102 S.E. 378, cert. denied, 24 Ga. App. 816 (1920); Davis v. State, 150 Ga. 19, 102 S.E. 445 (1920).

Affidavits by relatives, showing relationship to challenged jurors, are properly admitted in support of motion for new trial. Harris v. State, 188 Ga. 745, 4 S.E.2d 651 (1939).

Paternity of child. — When the paternity of a child is the issue involved, the declarations of the reputed father, since deceased, are admissible in evidence. The weight to be given the declarations is a matter for the jury. Estill v. Estill, 149 Ga. 384, 100 S.E. 365 (1919).

Proof seeking indirectly to show that a child is illegitimate, by showing general reputation in the community that the father was a single man, was inadmissible. Gibson v. Mason, 31 Ga. App. 584, 121 S.E. 584 (1924).

Evidence sufficient to prove relationship with deceased. — Husband of the plaintiff having testified that she was his wife and that she was the mother of the deceased child sufficiently proved the necessary relationship between the plaintiff and the deceased. Scoggins v. Hughes, 112 Ga. App. 777, 146 S.E.2d 134 (1965).

Birth and Age

Births may be proved by general reputation in the family. Luke v. Hill, 137 Ga. 159, 73 S.E.

345, 38 L.R.A. (n.s.) 559 (1911); Hines v. Donaldson, 193 Ga. 783, 20 S.E.2d 134 (1942).

Witness may testify to the witness's age without first requiring the witness to show from what source the witness derived the witness's information, and when and where the witness was born. Central R.R. v. Coggin, 73 Ga. 689 (1884); McCollum v. State, 119 Ga. 308, 46 S.E. 413, 100 Am. St. R. 171 (1904).

Bible containing family record. — Bible containing a family record, in the handwriting of a deceased daughter, which remained in the possession of the mother until her death, and then went into the possession of daughters, from whom the witness got it, is competent evidence on the question of age of one of the children of that mother. Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 53 Ga. 535 (1874).

Marriage

Proof of marriage. — Fact of marriage may be at least prima facie shown by proof of general reputation in family, by proof of general reputation in the community, or by proof of the fact that the man or the woman, as the case may be, lives together with a person of the opposite sex as his or her spouse, with general recognition in the community of their being married to each other. Plummer v. State, 27 Ga. App. 185, 108 S.E. 128 (1921). See also Drawdy v. Hesters, 130 Ga. 161, 60 S.E. 451 (1908); Gibson v. Mason, 31 Ga. App. 584, 121 S.E. 584 (1924).

Validity of marriage. — On an issue of validity of marriage, the declarations of the parties themselves that they were or were not married, made without view to litigation, are admissible evidence of the fact declared. But the declaration of such party as to a fact, evidentiary of the invalidity of the marriage, does not come within this exception to the rule of hearsay evidence. Whigby v. Burnham, 135 Ga. 584, 69 S.E. 1114 (1911).

Death

Proof of death. — While, in a sense, hearsay is admissible to prove death, yet before the hearsay is admissible for that purpose, it must come up to the requirements of statute. Piedmont Hotel Co. v. Henderson, 9 Ga. App. 672, 72 S.E. 51

Death (Cont'd)

(1911); Cone v. Lythgoe, 40 Ga. App. 491, 150 S.E. 465 (1929).

Death may be established as provided by this statute, by family repute, but by no other species of hearsay evidence. Ferguson v. Atlanta Newspapers, Inc., 91 Ga. App. 115, 85 S.E.2d 72 (1954).

Source of information. — It was not competent for a witness to testify as to the death of a certain person, and who were the witness's heirs surviving at a certain date when a deed was executed, the witness testifying that the witness did not know these facts from the witness's own personal knowledge, but the witness knew the facts from family repute and from various other sources of information, such as a vast amount of correspondence from the decedent's family, and from the court records, and from wills and documents, which made the matter conclusive so far as could be ascertained by search. Imboden v. Etowah & Battle Branch Mining Co., 70 Ga. 86 (1883); Mobley v. Baxter & Co., 143 Ga. 565, 85 S.E. 859 (1915); Mobley v. Pierce, 144 Ga. 327, 87 S.E. 24 (1915).

After proof that a woman was married, her declaration that she had heard her husband was dead is not admissible to prove his death; it not appearing from whom her information was derived. Williams v. State, 86 Ga. 548, 12 S.E. 743 (1891).

Missing persons. — In an action brought by a wife upon a policy of insurance in her favor upon the life of her husband, the insurance being against death by accident within one year from the date of the policy, and he having disappeared within the year, that his family regarded him as dead, or recognized him as being dead, is not competent evidence in behalf of the plaintiff. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 751, 12 S.E. 18 (1890).

Requirements for Admission

Limitation on rule. — Statute which permits declarations to be received in proof of pedigree is limited to the extent that the declarations must have been made without view to litigation and under such circumstances that the person making the declarations could have no motive to misrepresent the facts. Mobley v. Pierce, 144 Ga. 327, 87 S.E. 24 (1915); Hines v. Donaldson, 193 Ga.

783, 20 S.E.2d 134 (1942); Johnson v. Roberson, 88 Ga. App. 548, 77 S.E.2d 232 (1953).

First-hand knowledge not required. — Witnesses must appear to have had fair knowledge, or fair opportunity for acquiring knowledge upon the subject. It is not required that the witnesses were present at the birth, marriage, or death to be competent to testify as to relationship. Wilson v. State, 173 Ga. 275, 160 S.E. 319 (1931).

Declarations concerning pedigree, to be admissible, need not be upon the knowledge of the declarant. Thus, evidence is admissible that a deceased member of the family said that the deceased heard from others of the deceased's family the facts of family history which the deceased stated. Hines v. Donaldson, 193 Ga. 783, 20 S.E.2d 134 (1942).

Family source required. — One of the conditions upon which family tradition is received in evidence is that it emanate from a source within the family, and from persons having such a connection with the party to whom it relates that it is natural and likely that they cannot be mistaken and will speak the truth. In the event it appears that the evidence offered does not emanate from such source, the presumption of the reliability of the source of information is rebutted and the evidence becomes inadmissible. Hines v. Donaldson, 193 Ga. 783, 20 S.E.2d 134 (1942).

Presumption of knowledgeable source. — Declarations respecting pedigree do not stand upon the footing of secondary evidence to be excluded when a witness can be produced who speaks upon the subject from the witness's own knowledge. This rule of law rests upon the presumption that the declaration or family tradition comes from persons who have competent knowledge with respect to the subject matter of the declaration, and speak the truth with reference thereto. Hines v. Donaldson, 193 Ga. 783, 20 S.E.2d 134 (1942).

Notwithstanding the declarant did not mention the source from which the declarant derived the declarant's information, facts of family history heard from other family members are admissible. Hines v. Donaldson, 193 Ga. 783, 20 S.E.2d 134 (1942).

Proof of relationship required. — Before the declarations of deceased persons may be received in evidence, the fact of relationship must be shown by other evidence. Greene v. Almand, 111 Ga. 735, 36 S.E. 957 (1900); Terry v. Brown, 142 Ga. 224, 82 S.E. 566 (1914); Mobley v. Pierce, 144 Ga. 327, 87 S.E. 24 (1915); Wilson v. State, 173 Ga. 275, 160 S.E. 319 (1931); Hines v. Donaldson, 193 Ga. 783, 20 S.E.2d 134 (1942).

Only slight proof of relationship is required as a foundation for the admission of hearsay evidence regarding pedigree. Hines v. Donaldson, 193 Ga. 783, 20 S.E.2d 134 (1942).

Family members as witness. — When a witness reports matters of general repute and tradition in the witness's own family, it is not necessary for the witness to first establish by independent evidence the witness's relationship to the witness's family. Crawley v.

Selby, 208 Ga. 530, 67 S.E.2d 775 (1951).

No particular form of statement is required to render a declaration as to pedigree admissible. It may be oral or written, such as a letter or a recital in a deed. Hines v. Donaldson, 193 Ga. 783, 20 S.E.2d 134 (1942).

Admission over objection. — When affidavit contained declarations tending to establish pedigree, and contained other statements which were inadmissible if properly objected to, and when the admissibility of such affidavit was objected to as a whole, upon the ground that it was hearsay and not binding upon the defendants, its admission over such objection is not ground for a new trial. Massell Realty Co. v. Hanbury, 165 Ga. 534, 141 S.E. 653 (1928).

24-3-13. Ancient boundaries and landmarks.

Traditional evidence as to ancient boundaries and landmarks shall be admissible in evidence, the weight to be determined by the jury according to the source from which it comes. (Orig. Code 1863, § 3703; Code 1868, § 3727; Code 1873, § 3780; Code 1882, § 3780; Civil Code 1895, § 5185; Civil Code 1910, § 5772; Code 1933, § 38-313.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Metes and bounds description prevails over description as numbered lot. — If a deed describes land as being parts of certain numbered lots, and also contains a description of the tract of land by metes and bounds, calling for natural, visible, and ascertained objects and monuments, and such description by such metes and bounds includes a part of a lot not designated by number, such metes and bounds must govern. McCann v. Miller, 177 Ga. App. 53, 338 S.E.2d 509 (1985).

Deed with overly vague description does not validly convey title. — Deed wherein the description of the property sought to be conveyed is so vague and indefinite as to afford no means of identifying any particular tract of land is inoperative either as a conveyance of title or as color of title. McCann v. Miller, 177 Ga. App. 53, 338 S.E.2d 509 (1985).

Reputation as evidence. — An ancient boundary, corner, or station tree cannot, generally, be proved otherwise than by reputation; consequently, hearsay evidence is admissible for this purpose, from the necessity of the case. It is not the best testimony, however, to prove the identity of a lot of land, there being higher evidence of that fact in the power of the party. Martin v. Atkinson, 7 Ga. 228, 50 Am. Dec. 403 (1849). See also Riley v. Griffin, 16 Ga. 141, 60 Am. Dec. 726 (1854).

Present day reputation is not sufficient to establish a line or landmark. McAfee v. Newberry, 144 Ga. 473, 87 S.E. 392 (1915); Patterson v. Baugh, 56 Ga. App. 660, 193 S.E. 364 (1937).

Evidence sufficient to support plaintiff's boundaries. — In a boundary line dispute filed pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 23-3-61, the trial court properly entered judgment on a jury verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, two landowners, and against their neighbor, and then denied the neighbor a new trial, or alternatively a judgment notwithstanding the verdict as: (1) the boundary line indicated on a plat reflecting the locations of monuments on the parcel owned by two landowners complied with the monuments referenced in the original warranty deed; and (2) the neighbor agreed to a special verdict form allowing the jury to find that the plat submitted by the two landowners accurately and sufficiently showed the true boundary line. Dover v. Higgins, 287 Ga. App. 861, 652 S.E.2d 829 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 237 (Ga. 2008).

Evidence of declarations of persons since deceased, relative to the location of a landmark, is admissible over an objection on the ground of hearsay. Deaton v. Swanson, 196 Ga. 833, 28 S.E.2d 126 (1943); Phelps v. Huff, 214 Ga. App. 398, 448 S.E.2d 64 (1994).

A witness's testimony to declarations made to the witness a number of years earlier by a now deceased predecessor in title regarding the disputed location of the line between the properties of the contesting parties is admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. Gilman Paper Co. v. James, 235 Ga. 348, 219 S.E.2d 447 (1975).

As evidence the owners of several parcels of land sought to introduce regarding an iron pin was not as to the general reputation of the pin but rather was what the original grantor (by then deceased) had said about that specific pin, the evidence was hearsay and was properly excluded from a quiet title trial. Gibson v. Rustin, 297 Ga. App. 169, 676 S.E.2d 799 (2009).

Appraisals constitute opinions and are inadmissible as hearsay. — Appraisals of property by a deceased appraiser were not admissible in a wrongful foreclosure action since the appraisals represented the opinion of the appraiser and as such constituted hearsay. Dickens v. Calhoun First Nat'l Bank, 214 Ga. App. 490, 448 S.E.2d 237 (1994).

That a smaller tract is located within a larger tract, if the boundaries of which larger tract are not located, cannot be shown by common reputation. McAfee v. Newberry, 144 Ga. 473, 87 S.E. 392 (1915).

In locating land described in a deed it is competent to establish the land's boundaries by proof of traditional reputation in the neighborhood, derived from ancient sources or from the declarations of persons since deceased who had peculiar means of knowing what the reputation of the boundary was in an ancient day. McAfee v. Newberry, 144 Ga. 473, 87 S.E. 392 (1915).

When land conveyed in a deed is described as a city lot "designated by stakes", extrinsic evidence may supply the location and shape of the particular tract of land. The test as to the sufficiency of the description in a deed is whether or not it discloses with sufficient certainty the intention of the grantor with respect to the quantity and location of the land therein described. Lankford v. Pope, 206 Ga. 430, 57 S.E.2d 538 (1950).

Boundaries of political subdivisions. — When the location of the line between two counties was disputed, and the line between adjoining lands coincided with the county line, which was claimed by both sides to be a straight line, evidence was admissible to show that for a considerable distance south of the place where the line was in dispute owners of land in the two counties, whose lands were bounded by the county line, had built fences up to a certain line and recognized it as being the county line, and had so bounded their possessions for 20 years or more; and that the line run between the lands of the parties by processioners was a continuation of the line so recognized. Ivey v. Cowart, 124 Ga. 159, 52 S.E. 436, 110 Am. St. R. 160 (1905).

As to the location of county lines and state lines and other boundaries, a witness is entitled to testify from what others have told the witness, from reputation in the community, and from hearsay. Green v. State, 123 Ga. App. 286, 180 S.E.2d 564 (1971).

Iron pipes, fence line, hedgerow, and acquiescence in boundary was sufficient evidence for court. — While no natural landmarks established the disputed boundary between property belonging to the parties, other evidence did, including iron pipes marking the corners of the property, a fence line, a hedgerow, and acquiescence in the boundary, and the failure in landowners' deed to reference the land lot where the disputed acreage was located did not determine the result; sufficient evidence supported the trial court's findings as to the location of the boundary line. Sledge v. Peach County, 276 Ga. App. 780, 624 S.E.2d 288 (2005).

Venue. — Venue must be proved positively, and one of the methods of proving venue is by the testimony of witnesses as to their knowledge of a place, which the witnesses have learned from hearsay and from reputation. Green v. State, 123 Ga. App. 286, 180 S.E.2d 564 (1971).

(b) Any writing or record, whether in the form of an entry in a book or otherwise, made as a memorandum or record of any act, transaction, occurrence, or event shall be admissible in evidence in proof of the act, transaction, occurrence, or event, if the trial judge shall find that it was made in the regular course of any business and that it was the regular course of such business to make the memorandum or record at the time of the act, transaction, occurrence, or event or within a reasonable time thereafter.

(c) All other circumstances of the making of the writing or record, including lack of personal knowledge by the entrant or maker, may be shown to affect its weight; but they shall not affect its admissibility.

FOUNDATION FOR ADMISSION

General Consideration

Purpose of statute. — Purpose of statute is not to bolster the witness on the stand but to serve in place of witness by giving the manner of entry within the usual course of the business enterprise an independent prima facie probative value of its own, thus broadening an exception to the hearsay rule. Calhoun v. Chappell, 117 Ga. App. 865, 162 S.E.2d 300 (1968).

Statute is primarily adapted to allowing testimony of business records the authentication of which is otherwise difficult against a hearsay objection because it is "the routine product of an efficient clerical system." Calhoun v. Chappell, 117 Ga. App. 865, 162 S.E.2d 300 (1968).

Purpose of statute in allowing into evidence routine business records is not to allow the conclusions of anyone, and it certainly was not intended that such conclusions stand without opportunity to cross-examine the maker. Wesley v. State, 225 Ga. 22, 165 S.E.2d 719 (1969).

Purpose of statute is to allow the determination of records without the necessity of producing all the various clerical personnel who made the entries. Dowling v. Jones-Logan Co., 123 Ga. App. 380, 181 S.E.2d 75 (1971); Timothy McCarthy Constr. Co. v. Southern Detectives, Inc., 125 Ga. App. 205, 186 S.E.2d 895 (1971); Cotton v. John W. Eshelman & Sons, 137 Ga. App. 360, 223 S.E.2d 757 (1976); Lewis v. United Cal. Bank, 143 Ga. App. 126, 237 S.E.2d 645 (1977), aff'd, 240 Ga. 823, 242 S.E.2d 581 (1978); Record Data, Inc. v. Vinylgrain Indus. of Ga., Inc., 143 Ga. App. 854, 240 S.E.2d 223 (1977); Gray v. Cousins Mtg. & Equity Invs., 150 Ga. App. 296, 257 S.E.2d 365 (1979); Reisman v. Martori, Meyer, Hendricks, & Victor, 155 Ga. App. 551, 271 S.E.2d 685 (1980).

Purpose of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14 is to provide for the admissibility of records that would otherwise be excluded as hearsay. Allen v. State, 248 Ga. 676, 286 S.E.2d 3 (1982).

Statute was intended to preempt the field with regard to admission of business records and the statutory requirements are exclusive in this regard. Dowling v. Jones-Logan Co., 123 Ga. App. 380, 181 S.E.2d 75 (1971).

Statute was intended to bring realities of business and professional practice into courtroom and should not be interpreted so as to destroy the statute's obvious usefulness. Cotton v. John W. Eshelman & Sons, 137 Ga. App. 360, 223 S.E.2d 757 (1976).

Statute opens a broad departure from the hitherto fixed rules of evidence relative to the introduction of books and papers. Guthrie v. Berrien Prods. Co., 91 Ga. App. 45, 84 S.E.2d 596 (1954).

Statute has never been expanded to include private custody or simple possession since the circumstances of private possession are infinitely more varied than those of business or official custody. Martin v. State, 135 Ga. App. 4, 217 S.E.2d 312 (1975).

Summary need not qualify as "business record." — Summary of business records is admissible even though the summary itself may not qualify as a "business record" under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14. Polma, Inc. v. Coastal Canvas Prods. Co., 199 Ga. App. 616, 405 S.E.2d 531, cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 906, 405 S.E.2d 531 (1991).

Discussion of the admissibility of summaries of business records. — See Tyner v. Sheriff, 164 Ga. App. 360, 297 S.E.2d 114 (1982).

Summaries of voluminous business records are admissible so long as the original records are accessible to the court and the parties. Lawhorn v. State, 200 Ga. App. 451, 408 S.E.2d 425 (1991).

An affidavit need not recite the words "true and correct copies" before the accompanying business records will be admissible. Questions about the accuracy of business records go to their weight, not their admissibility. Bagley v. Fulton-DeKalb Hosp. Auth., 216 Ga. App. 537, 455 S.E.2d 325 (1995).

Language of statute suggests that writing must be made as memorandum or record rather than for some other purpose. American San. Servs., Inc. v. EDM of Tex., Inc., 139 Ga. App. 662, 229 S.E.2d 136 (1976).

Statute does not abrogate right of party to cross-examine witness called against the party. Meeks v. Lunsford, 106 Ga. App. 154, 126 S.E.2d 531 (1962).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14 must be liberally interpreted and applied. McConnell v. State, 166 Ga. App. 530, 304 S.E.2d 733 (1983).

Confrontation clause. — Business record exception is an exception to the hearsay rule, and not a general exception to the confrontation clause. Adams v. State, 217 Ga. App. 706, 459 S.E.2d 182 (1995).

Right to confrontation. — In a case when a summary of business records is properly admitted and the figures so introduced are relied upon by another witness, there is ordinarily no violation of defendant's right of confrontation. Stewart v. State, 246 Ga. 70, 268 S.E.2d 906 (1980).

Records noting conversation's contents not admissible. — Records which note the contents of a conversation rather than an act, transaction, occurrence, or event are not eligible for the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Mitchell v. State, 254 Ga. 353, 329 S.E.2d 481 (1985).

Reason for reasonable time requirement is so the entry might appear to have taken place while the memory of the fact was recent, or the source from which the knowledge of it is derived was unimpaired. Martin v. Glenn's Furn. Co., 126 Ga. App. 692, 191 S.E.2d 567 (1972).

Uniform business records as evidence statute. — Statute contains what is referred to by courts of other states and textbooks as the "Uniform Business Records as Evidence" statute. There is no material difference in the Georgia statute and similar statutes of the other states. Knudsen v. Duffee-Freeman, Inc., 95 Ga. App. 872, 99 S.E.2d 370 (1957), for comment, see 20 Ga. B.J. 381 (1958).

Kind of books. — Books contemplated by this statute are permanent books. Bush v. Fourcher, 3 Ga. App. 43, 59 S.E. 459 (1907); Eley v. Holden, 48 Ga. App. 152, 172 S.E. 75 (1933).

Waiver. — Requirement that entries be made in the ordinary course of business can be waived. Finch v. Caldwell, 155 Ga. App. 813, 273 S.E.2d 216 (1980).

Procedural Considerations

1. Foundation for Admission

Compliance renders further proof unnecessary. — Once a certificate of inspection is completed as specified under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14, the certificate is admissible in any court of law without further proof, and a further foundation for admission under the business records exception to the hearsay rule is rendered unnecessary. State v. Had-dock, 235 Ga. App. 726, 510 S.E.2d 561 (1998).

Nature of foundation. — Before a writing or record is admissible under subsection (b) of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14, a foundation must be laid through the testimony of a witness who is familiar with the method of keeping records and who can testify thereto and to facts which show that the entry was made in the regular course of business at the time of the event or within a reasonable time thereafter. Suarez v. Suarez, 257 Ga. 102, 355 S.E.2d 649 (1987).

In an action in which the victim was awarded restitution for tools and equipment taken from a stolen truck, all that was required was that a foundation be laid through the testimony of a witness who was familiar with the method of keeping the record of the list of equipment and tools normally found on the truck who could testify thereto, and to facts which showed that the entry was made in the regular course of business at the time of the event or within a reasonable time thereafter. Tindol v. State, 284 Ga. App. 45, 643 S.E.2d 329 (2007).

Preliminary proof is necessary before the writing or record is admissible. The evidence should include identification of the writing or record by a witness who is familiar with the method of keeping the records and who can testify thereto and to facts which show that the entry was made in the regular course of business and that it was the regular course of the business to make such memorandum or record at the time of the event or within a reasonable time thereafter. Walburn v. Taunton, 107 Ga. App. 411, 130 S.E.2d 279 (1963); Cassano v. Pilgreen's, Inc., 117 Ga. App. 260, 160 S.E.2d 439 (1968).

Absent preliminary proof required to qualify statements as to facts, the knowledge of which were obtained from records not personally kept by testifying witness, had no probative value. Eaton Oil & Auto Co. v. Greene County, 53 Ga. App. 145, 185 S.E. 296 (1936); Thomasson v. Trust Co. Bank, 149 Ga. App. 556, 254 S.E.2d 881 (1979); Harris v. Collins, 149 Ga. App. 638, 255 S.E.2d 107 (1979); Hill Aircraft & Leasing Corp. v. Planes, Inc., 158 Ga. App. 151, 279 S.E.2d 250 (1981).

When defendant submitted an unsigned document purported to be in the plaintiff's handwriting, but was not able to locate anyone who could identify the document, defendant was unable to produce the required foundation testimony, and the document was properly excluded. Metropolitan Atlanta Rapid Transit Authority v. Green Int'l, Inc., 235 Ga. App. 419, 509 S.E.2d 674 (1998).

Authentication required. — Witness's testimony is inadmissible in the absence of any authentication of the records which the witness's testimony is purported to track. Hall v. State, 244 Ga. 86, 259 S.E.2d 41 (1979).

In the absence of authentication by the issuing officer or testimony of the witness officers that the license tag number on the traffic ticket accurately reflected the license tag number of the car the witnesses saw appellant driving, the citations were hearsay as to the identity of the license tag number. Since the proper foundation was not laid, the tickets did not qualify for the business record exception to the hearsay rule. Curtis v. State, 190 Ga. App. 173, 378 S.E.2d 516 (1989).

An uncertified copy of a check was properly excluded since the witness had no personal knowledge of the transaction or the making of the copy and provided conflicting testimony about the witness's familiarity with the business practices or regular course of dealing. U.B. Vehicle Leasing, Inc. v. Vision Int'l, Inc., 224 Ga. App. 611, 481 S.E.2d 597 (1997).

Ride safety checklist had not been authenticated as a business record and thus was merely inadmissible hearsay that could not be considered as evidence in support of a motion for summary judgment. Valentin v. Six Flags Over Ga., L.P., 286 Ga. App. 508, 649 S.E.2d 809 (2007).

Personal knowledge not required. — It is not necessary that a witness identifying business records have personal knowledge of the correctness of the records or have actually made the entries personally. Knudsen v. Duffee-Freeman, Inc., 95 Ga. App. 872, 99 S.E.2d 370 (1957), for comment, see 20 Ga. B.J. 381 1958; Seaboard Coast Line R.R. v. Smalley, 127 Ga. App. 652, 194 S.E.2d 612 (1972); Welborn v. State, 132 Ga. App. 207, 207 S.E.2d 688 (1974); Cotton v. John W. Eshelman & Sons, 137 Ga. App. 360, 223 S.E.2d 757 (1976); F.N.B. Fin. Co. v. Glaze

Tire Co., 140 Ga. App. 184, 230 S.E.2d 342 (1976); Smith v. Bank of S., 141 Ga. App. 114, 232 S.E.2d 629 (1977); Vaughn & Co. v. Saul, 143 Ga. App. 74, 237 S.E.2d 622 (1977); Bentley v. State, 153 Ga. App. 410, 265 S.E.2d 293 (1980); Whittington v. State, 155 Ga. App. 667, 272 S.E.2d 532 (1980); Hines v. Good Housekeeping Shop, 161 Ga. App. 318, 291 S.E.2d 238 (1982); Murphy v. State, 182 Ga. App. 791, 357 S.E.2d 147 (1987).

Witness identifying business records under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14 does not have to have personal knowledge of the correctness of the records or have made the entry personally. Hertz Corp. v. McCray, 198 Ga. App. 484, 402 S.E.2d 298 (1991).

There is no requirement that in order to lay a proper foundation for the admission of a certificate of inspection under the business record exception, the person who conducted the inspection of the machine, or someone who actually witnessed the inspection, appear in court to testify about the inspection or the completion of the certificate. State v. Haddock, 235 Ga. App. 726, 510 S.E.2d 561 (1998).

There was no error in denying the property owner's motion to strike virtually all of the evidence against the owner; the trial judge was authorized to admit the tax documents into evidence as records made in the regular course of business under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14(b) because the testimony of the custodian of the sheriff department's tax levy files and an employee of the county tax commissioner's delinquent tax division, even without personal knowledge, was sufficient to authorize finding that the witnesses were familiar with the method of keeping the records and that the documents were made in the regular course of business at the time of the events. Tharp v. Vesta Holdings I, LLC, 276 Ga. App. 901, 625 S.E.2d 46 (2005).

Trial court did not err in admitting a copy of the defendant's fingerprint card, pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-14 and 24-5-26, despite the defendant's claim that the testifying witness lacked personal knowledge with regard to the circumstances or time of the creation or transmission of the card, as the card itself showed that the card was created and transmitted at the time of the defendant's arrest, and was handled in the gathering agency's regular and routine course of business. Tubbs v. State, 283 Ga. App. 578, 642 S.E.2d 205 (2007).

Person laying foundation need not be custodian of records. — Georgia Business Records Act, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14, does not require that the person laying the foundation for business records' admissibility be the custodian of the records, that is, be the person who "keeps the records" under that person's "control and supervision." Hertz Corp. v. McCray, 198 Ga. App. 484, 402 S.E.2d 298 (1991).

In a negligence action seeking compensatory damages for a disabling injury, the trial court did not err in admitting certain prescription drug records pertaining to the injured plaintiff as a pharmacist presented sufficient testimony to satisfy the foundational requirements necessary for admission under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Imm v. Chaney, 287 Ga. App. 606, 651 S.E.2d 855 (2007).

Housekeeping supervisor of a motel where a victim was found dead of strangulation after being seen with a defendant could properly lay the foundation for the motel's lock interrogation log as the record only had to be made in the regular course of business at the time of the transaction; any lack of personal knowledge by the supervisor as to how the records were created only went to the weight of the evidence. Hamilton v. State, 297 Ga. App. 47, 676 S.E.2d 773 (2009).

Testimony of a bank officer may provide the required foundation for business records. Shannon v. Toronto-Dominion Bank, 168 Ga. App. 279, 308 S.E.2d 682 (1983).

Affidavit of custodian of bank records. — The affidavit of a bank records custodian was properly admitted in support of the bank's motion for summary judgment under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14(b). The custodian averred that the custodian was the records custodian for the bank and that the records filed with the custodian's affidavit were maintained in the regular and ordinary course of business and that the transactions were recorded contemporaneously with the events as they occurred. Vadde v. Bank of Am., 301 Ga. App. 475, 687 S.E.2d 880 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0624, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 338 (Ga. 2010).

In questions of proof of business records stored on tape on electronic computing equipment, the proper foundation to be laid is the same as that for business records of any other type or description. Cotton v. John W. Eshelman & Sons, 137 Ga. App. 360, 223 S.E.2d 757 (1976).

Officer qualified to introduce other officer's report. — Police officer was qualified to lay foundation for introduction of accident report prepared by another officer since testifying officer was able to testify as to the preparation and keeping of such reports. Reed v. Heffernan, 171 Ga. App. 83, 318 S.E.2d 700 (1984).

Any alleged inaccuracies in a ledger would go to weight and not to admissibility. Murphy v. State, 182 Ga. App. 791, 357 S.E.2d 147 (1987).

Compliance with provisions of statute prohibiting drunk driving not necessary for admission of blood-alcohol test. — When the blood-alcohol test was performed pursuant to the medical treatment of the plaintiff and recorded in the regular course of hospital business, and it was not administered for the purpose of determining whether plaintiff violated O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391, it was not necessary that defendant establish compliance with § 40-6-391 to render the test results admissible; the blood test results thus recorded in the regular course of hospital business were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14. Bynum v. Standard (Chevron) Oil Co., 157 Ga. App. 819, 278 S.E.2d 669, cert. dismissed, 248 Ga. 429, 285 S.E.2d 186 (1981).

Medical records in drunk driving case. — Medical records certified by the records custodian of a hospital showing the results of an independent chemical test requested by defendant in a drunk driving case were not admissible without further foundational evidence that would satisfy the requirements of the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Brahm v. State, 230 Ga. App. 407, 497 S.E.2d 240 (1998).

Presumption on review. — Mere recital in the motion for a new trial that the preliminary proof of the requirements for admissibility of documentary evidence was lacking is insufficient to show that as a matter of fact such preliminary proof was not made, and the reviewing court must presume that such preliminary proof was made and affirm the action of the trial judge in admitting the evidence. Gray v. General Fin. Corp., 108 Ga. App. 586, 134 S.E.2d 58 (1963).

State laid the proper foundation for the admission of certificates of equipment testing when two witnesses testified to them having been made within a reasonable time of the testing, and the notary jurat for each certificate confirmed the certificate was filled out on the day of inspection. Davis v. State, 236 Ga. App. 32, 510 S.E.2d 889 (1999).

When a patrolman testified that certificates of inspection were generated in the police department's ordinary course of business, made at the time the breath analyzer was inspected, and kept along side the machine, this evidence was sufficient to satisfy the foundational requisites for the admission of the certificates as business records. Brandon v. State, 236 Ga. App. 203, 511 S.E.2d 573 (1999).

Proper foundation found. — Professional association did not fail to lay the proper foundation for admission of computer printouts under the business records exception to the hearsay rule in order to establish the amount owed to a client for professional services since the president of the firm described of the president's own personal knowledge how the computer printouts were developed and how the printouts were used in determining what a client owed. Reisman v. Martori, Meyer, Hendricks, & Victor, 155 Ga. App. 551, 271 S.E.2d 685 (1980).

Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence two accident reports created by a driver's supervisor because the supervisor made the reports in the regular course of business shortly after the collision occurred based on what the driver had told the supervisor, and both the driver and the supervisor testified at trial and were available for cross examination. Lee v. Thomason, 277 Ga. App. 573, 627 S.E.2d 168 (2006).

In a criminal case where the victim was robbed of a cellular telephone, the telephone records were properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14; the testimony of the telephone company's records custodian provided the necessary foundation for the records to be introduced into evidence, and the custodian's lack of personal knowledge as to how the records were actually printed out affected their weight, not their admissibility. Santana v. State, 283 Ga. App. 696, 642 S.E.2d 390 (2007).

State laid the foundation for admission of a hospital-administered blood alcohol test as a routine business record with the testimony of two witnesses, and admission of the results of the test was proper; a custodian of medical records testified that when a blood test was completed in the hospital, the results were printed out then entered into the hospital computer system in the normal course of business, the printout was stored as a hard copy, and the printout contained only the factual data of the test results and a lab manager familiar with the usual practices and policies of the emergency room testified that it was the normal procedure of emergency room personnel to draw a patient's blood once the patient was admitted, before the patient has been seen by an attending physician. The certified copy of the test results printout showed that the defendant's blood was drawn within the normal procedures of the hospital. Daniel v. State, 298 Ga. App. 245, 679 S.E.2d 811 (2009).

A "cash for keys" agreement entered into between a former owner's tenant and the new owner following a foreclosure sale was admissible in the former owner's wrongful eviction suit under the business record exception to the hearsay rule; the agreement was authenticated in the affidavit of the person who signed the agreement and witnessed the tenant sign the agreement, and the custodian testified by affidavit that the agreement was one of the custodian's own business records that were maintained in the regular course of business. Steed v. Fed. Nat'l Mortg. Corp., 301 Ga. App. 801, 689 S.E.2d 843 (2009).

Proper foundation not laid. — Trooper testified that the trooper was familiar with the book in which the records were maintained, but the trooper did not know if the documents were made contemporaneously with the testing; therefore, the trooper's testimony did not satisfy the foundational requirements. Mullinax v. State, 231 Ga. App. 534, 499 S.E.2d 903 (1998).

Disciplinary reports of a Diversion Center were not admissible as business records absent inquiry as to whether it was in the regular course of the Center's control officer to make an incident or disciplinary report and whether the reports were in fact made in the regular course of the Center's business. Kendrick v. State, 240 Ga. App. 530, 523 S.E.2d 414 (1999).

State failed to lay the foundation required to admit hearsay under the business records exception when a police sergeant testified that reports were "copies of the typewritten reports submitted by an officer of the police department" and that the officer retrieved the reports from the police files, but the officer gave no testimony regarding the preparation and keeping of the reports. Johnson v. State, 247 Ga. App. 660, 544 S.E.2d 496 (2001).

Trial court properly ruled in favor of a subdivision association board of directors as to claims by the owner of a development company that the board erred in charging water service and building fees because the owner failed to show that any damages were suffered as a result of the imposition of the fees, as the trial court properly excluded computer records concerning the fees, as the records did not meet the O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14 standard for the business records hearsay exception as the owner did not testify that the writings proffered were made in the regular course of business at the time of the underlying transaction or within a reasonable time thereafter. Crawford v. Dammann, 277 Ga. App. 442, 626 S.E.2d 632 (2006).

In an action to recover the balance of the money owed under a loan, because the guarantor of the loan failed to show the lack of an adequate foundation for the admitted evidence, a claim that the trial court erred in admitting the loan history report as a business record failed; hence, the proponent bank was properly granted summary judgment on the issue. Ishak v. First Flag Bank, 283 Ga. App. 517, 642 S.E.2d 143 (2007).

Worker injured while using an elevator had not shown that reports purportedly generated by elevator maintenance company fell within the business records exception to the hearsay rule; company's service technician was unfamiliar with the reports and did not testify that the reports were made in the regular course of business. Henson v. Georgia-Pacific Corp., 289 Ga. App. 777, 658 S.E.2d 391 (2008).

Trial court erred in admitting the state's exhibits, which were copies of two traffic citations stamped "FTA," pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-5-20 without any determination that the exhibits fell within an exception to the rule prohibiting the use of hearsay because the state introduced the exhibits to prove the truth of the statement of the unidentified person who stamped "FTA" on the citations that the defendant failed to appear for the defendant's court date, and despite defendant's objection to the documents as hearsay, the state argued only the issue of authentication and never identified any exception to the rule prohibiting hearsay that would authorize admitting the documents; the state failed to lay the required foundation for the application of the business records exception, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14(b), because the state did not call any witness to provide the required foundation. McKinley v. State, 303 Ga. App. 203, 692 S.E.2d 787 (2010).

Absence of foundation held harmless. — Assuming a proper foundation was not presented for the introduction of medical records at defendant's trial for battery, any error in admitting the records was harmless since the records were not critical but merely cumulative evidence showing the extent of the victim's injuries. Flowers v. State, 181 Ga. App. 572, 353 S.E.2d 69 (1987).

2. Weight and Credibility

Questions for jury. — Credibility, both of the books and of the party, is to be weighed by the jury, and depends upon various circumstances of which the jury are the judges. Taylor v. Tucker, 1 Ga. 231 (1846); Allstate Ins. Co. v. Buck, 96 Ga. App. 376, 100 S.E.2d 142 (1957); Seaboard Coast Line R.R. v. Hart, 120 Ga. App. 492, 171 S.E.2d 383 (1969).

All circumstances may be shown to affect weight of evidence but not the admissibility of the evidence. Hurst v. Jackson, 134 Ga. App. 129, 213 S.E.2d 511 (1975); Serve v. First Nat'l Bank, 143 Ga. App. 239, 237 S.E.2d 719 (1977).

Trial court did not err in admitting a podiatrist's medical records on a patient into evidence in a medical malpractice suit as the circumstances of the making of the records could be shown to affect the weight of the evidence; but the circumstances could not affect the admissibility of the records. Kohl v. Tirado, 256 Ga. App. 681, 569 S.E.2d 576 (2002).

Physical appearance of records and their self-serving nature are questions that go to the weight of the evidence but not to admissibility. Whitehead v. Joiner, 234 Ga. 457, 216 S.E.2d 317 (1975); Hall v. State, 239 Ga. 832, 238 S.E.2d 912 (1977).

Dispute over accuracy of record and of the witness's recollection affects only the weight to be given the record by the jury. Don Howard's Music Mart, Inc. v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 154 Ga. App. 648, 269 S.E.2d 506 (1980).

Irregularities in account books sought to be introduced in evidence should be exceedingly gross and palpable to justify the court in arresting the evidence from that tribunal whose peculiar province it is to judge of the credibility of testimony. Bush v. Fourcher, 3 Ga. App. 43, 59 S.E. 459 (1907).

Gaps in chain of custody of blood sample. — When the blood-alcohol test results are properly admitted as a business record, gaps in the chain of custody of the blood sample admitted as part of the hospital record do not affect the admissibility of the test results but merely go to the weight of the evidence accorded by the jury. Bynum v. Standard (Chevron) Oil Co., 157 Ga. App. 819, 278 S.E.2d 669, cert. dismissed, 248 Ga. 254, 285 S.E.2d 186 (1981).

Impeachment. — In a suit by a bank, the defendant having introduced in evidence the books of the bank, the defendant cannot impeach the books as a whole, but may show that particular items in the books are wrong and disprove those items, and that by mistake or fraud they have been improperly kept. Merchants' Bank v. Rawls, 7 Ga. 191, 50 Am. Dec. 394 (1849).

3. Objections

When document offered in evidence is admissible in part and inadmissible in part, and objection is made to the document as a whole, it is not error to admit the whole document. Stubbs v. Daughtry, 115 Ga. App. 22, 153 S.E.2d 633 (1967).

Deletion of objectionable material. — If it is desired by either side that a police report of accident be introduced in evidence after the foundation is laid, the report will not be offered unless all parts of the report containing objectionable material are first deleted. Calhoun v. Chappell, 117 Ga. App. 865, 162 S.E.2d 300 (1968).

Failure to identify objectionable portions of record. — When defendant was offered two opportunities to identify objectionable portions of hospital records and was given time to review the records for that purpose, defendant's failure to identify objectionable portions resulted in a waiver of defendant's hearsay objection. Corbett v. State, 266 Ga. 561, 468 S.E.2d 757 (1996).

Opinions and conclusions. — If a hospital record contains diagnostic opinions and conclusions, the record cannot, upon proper objection, be admitted into evidence unless and until the proper foundation is laid, i.e., the person who entered such diagnostic opinions and conclusions upon the record must qualify as an expert and relate the facts upon which the entry was based. Cassano v. Pilgreen's, Inc., 117 Ga. App. 260, 160 S.E.2d 439 (1968).

When the document as a whole contained conclusions, opinions, estimates, impressions, and recommendations of a third party not before the court the document is not admissible as a whole. Hurt v. State, 239 Ga. 665, 238 S.E.2d 542 (1977).

Applications and Illustrations

Prima facie evidence. — When the books conform to the provisions of the statute, the books themselves stand as a witness of the correctness of the account and make a prima facie case which shifts the burden of proof to the defendant debtor to show the items contained in the books, or some of the items, are not correct. Chambers v. Williams Bros. Lumber Co., 80 Ga. App. 38, 55 S.E.2d 244 (1949); International Bus. Consulting, Ltd. v. First Union Nat'l Bank, 192 Ga. App. 742, 386 S.E.2d 400 (1989) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14).

Books of account when admitted under this statute are prima facie evidence of the facts the books state, and when not contradicted or explained may become conclusive. Wright v. Trust Co., 108 Ga. App. 783, 134 S.E.2d 457 (1963) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14).

Admission by defendant in defendant's testimony, that defendant bought of plaintiffs the articles set forth in the account sued on, the price being attached to each article, establishes prima facie the correctness of the account. F.N.B. Fin. Co. v. Glaze Tire Co., 140 Ga. App. 184, 230 S.E.2d 342 (1976).

If a business record is qualified according to the statutory standard it may be admissible to prove the truth of the fact stated therein. Moore v. State, 154 Ga. App. 535, 268 S.E.2d 706 (1980).

Primary evidence. — As a general rule, the testimony of a person who has knowledge of the facts from which books of account are made up is primary evidence as to these facts, and is admissible, whether or not the books themselves are put in evidence. Harper v. Hammond & Sons, 13 Ga. App. 238, 79 S.E. 44 (1913); Christopher v. Georgian Co., 22 Ga. App. 707, 97 S.E. 97 (1918); Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Grimes, 99 Ga. App. 774, 109 S.E.2d 890 (1959); Don Howard's Music Mart, Inc. v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 154 Ga. App. 648, 269 S.E.2d 506 (1980).

Admission against deceased debtors. — Business records that are admissible under this statute are admissible against a deceased debtor. F & W Farm Serv., Inc. v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 116 Ga. App. 757, 159 S.E.2d 190 (1967); Roberts v. Artistic Ornamental Iron Co., 124 Ga. App. 744, 186 S.E.2d 143 (1971); Glo-Ann Plastic Indus., Inc. v. Peak Textiles, Inc., 134 Ga. App. 924, 216 S.E.2d 715 (1975) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14).

Agents. — Rule that the entries of an agent, made in the course of the business, are admissible in evidence after the agent's death is recognized by statute. Turner v. Turner, 123 Ga. 5, 50 S.E. 969 (1905).

Fact that a document was not signed by an agent or representative of the party to whom the document pertains does not affect the document's admissibility. F.N. Roberts Corp. v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 132 Ga. App. 800, 209 S.E.2d 138 (1974) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14).

Business records. — Information in the affidavit of the management corporation's vice president regarding the lessor's record keeping methods fell squarely within the business records exception to the hearsay rule codified at O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14. Int'l Biochemical Indus. v. Jamestown Mgmt. Corp., 262 Ga. App. 770, 586 S.E.2d 442 (2003).

Trial court's order granting summary judgment to a collection company and against a debtor in the former's deficiency action was upheld on appeal as it was not based on inadmissible hearsay, but upon records kept in the ordinary course of business, and thus admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Boyd v. Calvary Portfolio Servs., 285 Ga. App. 390, 646 S.E.2d 496 (2007).

In a breach of contract action, a lender's witness was properly allowed to testify about the loan records involving the debtor sued under the business records exception to the hearsay rule as: (1) the witness testified that the records were kept in the ordinary course of the lender's business; (2) the witness was familiar with the records and the manner in which the records were kept; (3) the records were made at or near the time the documents were created or received by the lender; and (4) the records of the lender's predecessors became the records of the lender. Jenkins v. Sallie Mae, Inc., 286 Ga. App. 502, 649 S.E.2d 802 (2007).

Trial court properly granted summary judgment to the purchaser of real estate in a quiet title action that involved the taxpayer's home and the taxpayer's failure to pay the property taxes on the property as the property was properly levied upon and no question of fact remained that the sheriff officially seized the property. Further, the affidavits of the civil process coordinator at the time of the tax sale, and the coordinator's successor, were properly admitted into evidence as such affidavits fell within the business records exception to the rule against hearsay. Davis v. Harpagon Co., LLC, 283 Ga. 539, 661 S.E.2d 545 (2008).

In convictions of aggravated child molestation and statutory rape, defendant was not entitled to admission into evidence of a motel registration card under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14(b) because the defendant failed to present testimony of a motel employee, who was familiar with the motel registration card and the methods for generation and keeping the motel's business records. Flewelling v. State, 300 Ga. App. 505, 685 S.E.2d 758 (2009).

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the results of a hospital-administered blood test under the business record exception to the hearsay rule, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14, because the defendant acquiesced in the procedure by which a lab technician identified the computer printout but did not relate the results stated thereon, and acquiescence deprived the defendant of the right to complain of the procedure on appeal; because the lab technician testified that the document tendered was an accurate copy of the result obtained, the testimony was properly admitted as original evidence. Potter v. State, 301 Ga. App. 411, 687 S.E.2d 653 (2009).

Telephone messages. — As telephone messages made following conversations between a party opponent and a testifying witness noted the contents of a conversation, not an act, transaction, occurrence, or event, the business records exception to the hearsay rule was inapplicable; for the contents of the party's telephone conversations to be admissible, the party would have to be given the opportunity to cross-examine the employees to whom the witness spoke with regard to the potential for misrepresenting the statements. Bailey v. Edmundson, 280 Ga. 528, 630 S.E.2d 396 (2006).

Notations of a telephone conversation and testimony explaining the notation were not admissible under the business record exception to the hearsay rule, O.C.G.A. § 24-2-14(b), because such notations were not considered records of a transaction, event or occurrence as contemplated by this rule. Griffin v. Bankston, 302 Ga. App. 647, 691 S.E.2d 229 (2009).

Notice of cancellation of insurance policy. — Supervisor who was the custodian of documents showing that notice of cancellation of an insurance policy was properly mailed was not required to have actual personal knowledge of the preparation of and mailing of the notice. Stapleton v. Colonial Ins. Co., 209 Ga. App. 674, 434 S.E.2d 116 (1993).

Admission of lawyer's notes. — In an action seeking reformation of an option contract, even assuming the trial court erred in admitting a lawyer's handwritten notes indicating that an option contract was to include all of the decedent's land because such notes were inadmissible hearsay, the estate failed to show reversible error because there was other evidence to support the court's ruling. Morris v. Morris, 282 Ga. App. 127, 637 S.E.2d 838 (2006).

Documents transmitted between businesses. — When routine, factual documents are made by one business, transmitted, or delivered to a second business, and there entered or kept by the second business in the regular course of business of the receiving business, the documents can become business records of the receiving business. Moore v. State, 154 Ga. App. 535, 268 S.E.2d 706 (1980); Jackson v. State, 209 Ga. App. 217, 433 S.E.2d 655 (1993).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's convictions for two counts of theft by deception based on defendant withdrawing the contents of two bank accounts after depositing checks from other banks into the accounts that were eventually dishonored because the dishonored checks were properly admitted into evidence without testimony from the payor banks as the checks became the business records of the bank from which funds were withdrawn, since there was testimony that the bank received, relied upon, and retained the checks in the regular course of the bank's business, as well as testimony from the bank establishing a foundation for admitting the checks. Ross v. State, 298 Ga. App. 525, 680 S.E.2d 435 (2009).

Opinions. — Statute does not authorize the introduction of papers containing the opinions of experts or the diagnosis of physicians. Knudsen v. Duffee-Freeman, Inc., 95 Ga. App. 872, 99 S.E.2d 370 (1957). For comment, see 20 Ga. B.J. 381 (1958); Meeks v. Lunsford, 106 Ga. App. 154, 126 S.E.2d 531 (1962).

Cantex Mfg. Co.*, 97 Ga. App. 438, 103 S.E.2d 138 (1958), for comment, see 22 Ga. B.J. 100 (1959).

Even though an affidavit in support of a motion for summary judgment did not recite that the affidavit was made from the affiant's personal knowledge, it was admissible because the affidavit set forth the affiant's title and responsibilities and included attached documents made and kept in the ordinary course of business. Kondo v. Marietta Toyota, Inc., 224 Ga. App. 490, 480 S.E.2d 851 (1997).

As the affidavits of an assignee's chief financial officer (CFO) showed that the CFO's knowledge of the facts sworn to was based on the CFO's review of the attached business records and not personal knowledge, the affidavits were inadmissible hearsay. Nyankojo v. North Star Capital Acquisition, 298 Ga. App. 6, 679 S.E.2d 57 (2009).

Contents of records. — Since there was no testimony to the effect that a card or record was customarily made in the due course of business and since the card or record was not introduced in evidence as a record made in the due course of business, the admission of testimony as to the contents of the card or record was erroneous. Hardy v. Waits, 97 Ga. App. 580, 104 S.E.2d 136, rev'd on other grounds, 214 Ga. 495, 105 S.E.2d 719 (1958).

International Bus. Inv., Inc.*, 193 Ga. App. 86, 386 S.E.2d 918 (1989).

Summaries. — When pertinent and essential facts can be ascertained only by an examination of a large number of entries in books of account, an auditor or an expert accountant who has made an examination and analysis of the books and figures may testify as a witness and give summarized statements of what the books show as a result of the expert's investigation, provided the books themselves are accessible to the court and the parties. Bible v. Somers Constr. Co., 197 Ga. 761, 30 S.E.2d 623 (1944); Cotton v. John W. Eshelman & Sons, 137 Ga. App. 360, 223 S.E.2d 757 (1976); Vaughn & Co. v. Saul, 143 Ga. Bank v. Davis*, 203 Ga. App. 473, 416 S.E.2d 899 (1992).

(see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14) to permit the admission in evidence of a letter in which is contained the diagnosis of a party's condition by a witness who has not been qualified as an expert, and a memorandum opinion not signed by any person but simply enclosed in the letter, when the party whose interest the letter and memorandum opinion are offered is not afforded the opportunity to examine either the author of the letter or the maker of the memorandum would in effect repeal former Code 1933, § 38-1705 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-9-64), relating to the right of cross-examination, and ignore opinions of the Supreme Court and of this court. *Knudsen v. ment motion affidavit was hearsay and should not have been considered by the trial court in the court's grant of summary judgment; the holder failed to contradict the assignee's claim, made in the assignee's affidavit, that the statement fell under the business records exception to the hearsay rule under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14. Bozeman v. CACV of Colo., LLC, 282 Ga. App. 256, 638 S.E.2d 387 (2006).

When a plaintiff purchased advertising time from media providers on behalf of the defendant, invoices received from the media providers and kept by the plaintiff as part of the plaintiff's own records were business records of the plaintiff under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14(b), and testimony from the plaintiff's president could lay a foundation for their introduction into evidence. Walter R. Thomas Assocs. v. Media Dynamite, Inc., 284 Ga. App. 413, 643 S.E.2d 883 (2007).

Department of Labor records. — In a prosecution for fraudulently obtaining public housing, computer printouts of defendant's wage records received by the county housing authority from the Department of Labor were admissible as business records. Robertson v. State, 210 Ga. App. 834, 437 S.E.2d 816 (1993).

Timeline prepared by a Georgia Department of Children and Families case worker was not a business record as it was prepared for a termination of parental rights proceeding, was not prepared in the regular course of business, and was not prepared and maintained pursuant to a routine practice; however, the admission of the timeline was harmless error. In re C.M., 258 Ga. App. 387, 574 S.E.2d 433 (2002).

Computer printouts. — Absence of original daily time sheets did not render computer printouts inadmissible; this may have gone to their credit but not to their admissibility. Reisman v. Martori, Meyer, Hendricks, & Victor, 155 Ga. App. 551, 271 S.E.2d 685 (1980).

Computer printouts are clearly admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14. WGNX, Inc. v. Gorham, 185 Ga. App. 489, 364 S.E.2d 621 (1988).

Subcontractor agreement forms. — Because a limited liability company did not object to the admission of subcontractor agreement forms at trial on the ground that the forms did not fall within the business records exception to the hearsay rule, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14, an appellate court would not consider that argument on appeal. Forrest Cambridge Apts., LLC v. Redi-Floors, Inc., 295 Ga. App. 840, 673 S.E.2d 318 (2009).

Operating record of intoximeter operator admissible. — Operating record of an intoximeter operator who gave a test to a driver, subsequently accused of driving while intoxicated, was a writing in proof of an act or transaction and, thus, was admissible as direct evidence of the manner in which a scientific test was conducted and results thereby obtained. Munda v. State, 172 Ga. App. 857, 324 S.E.2d 799 (1984).

Breath testing device certificates. — Breath testing device certificates provided for in O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(f) are records made within the regular course of business. Brown v. State, 268 Ga. 76, 485 S.E.2d 486 (1997); Payne v. State, 232 Ga. App. 591, 502 S.E.2d 526 (1998); Jackson v. State, 233 Ga. App. 568, 504 S.E.2d 505 (1998).

Proper foundation for admitting an inspection certificate was provided through testimony of the trooper who actually tested the machine. Mealor v. State, 233 Ga. App. 193, 504 S.E.2d 29 (1998).

"Self-authenticating" provision, itself, of O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(f) contains the proper foundation for admission of a certificate of inspection, and a further foundation under the "business records" exception of subsection (b) of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14 is not necessary. Jackson v. State, 233 Ga. App. 568, 504 S.E.2d 505 (1998).

Admission of self-authenticating certificates of inspection for the Intoxilyzer 5000 used to test defendant's breath was proper as the certificates were required by O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(f), the certificates qualified as business records under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14, and the certificates did not violate defendant's confrontation rights under U.S. Const., amend. 6. Neal v. State, 281 Ga. App. 261, 635 S.E.2d 864 (2006).

As certificates of inspection regarding an Intoxilyzer 5000 used in defendant's criminal matter were properly admitted pursuant to the business records exception to the hearsay rule under O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-14 and 40-6-392(f), the trial court's refusal to give the limiting instruction regarding their use, as requested by defendant, was not reversible error. Neal v. State, 281 Ga. App. 261, 635 S.E.2d 864 (2006).

Fingerprints. — An adequate foundation was laid for the admission of evidence of defendant's fingerprints since the trial record reflected that everybody arrested had a folder on them and the fingerprints were kept in the folder, the fingerprint card was a part of the record and was generally made at the time of a subject's arrest during the booking procedure, the name of the person who took the prints was on the card, and the card normally was maintained in the file jacket of the subject's arrest record at the sheriff's department. Davis v. State, 194 Ga. App. 902, 392 S.E.2d 327 (1990).

Evidence established that the defendant's 1991 fingerprint card was made in the regular course of business when the card bore the defendant's full name, date of birth, description, and signature and when the officer who conducted the fingerprinting and signed the card testified that the officer would have obtained the information on the card from written identification. The defendant's assertion that the prints on the 1991 card could be those of someone else purporting to be the defendant and using the defendant's identification at the time the prints were obtained amounted to mere speculation, and the state was under no obligation to re-fingerprint the defendant. Hurst v. State, 285 Ga. 294, 676 S.E.2d 165 (2009).

Trial court did not err in allowing the testimony of the state's fingerprint expert, an employee of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation (GBI), who identified the victim based on the victim's comparison of a post-mortem fingerprint card belonging to the victim and a fingerprint card bearing the victim's known fingerprints because a proper foundation was laid, and the fingerprints cards were properly admitted in evidence as business records under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14; the expert testified that the expert was familiar with GBI's methods of recordkeeping, that the GBI maintained post-mortem fingerprint cards in the regular course of business, and that the fingerprint cards were made contemporaneously with autopsies of dead persons conducted at the morgue. Rowe v. State, 302 Ga. App. 239, 690 S.E.2d 884 (2010).

Police report. — Narratives contained in police reports generated in connection with police investigations are not the appropriate subject of the business records exception to the hearsay rule. To the extent that any case holds that a police report narrative is admissible as a business record, those cases are overruled. Brown v. State, 274 Ga. 31, 549 S.E.2d 107 (2001).

Because a form document, entitled the "Henry County Police Department Roadblock & Safety Checkpoint Record," introduced at a motion to suppress hearing by the state was properly admitted as a business record under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14, and the testimonial evidence regarding the primary purpose of the roadblock passed constitutional muster, in that it was legitimately conducted as part of a statewide "zero tolerance" campaign, the defendant's motion to suppress the evidence seized as a result was properly denied. Yingst v. State, 287 Ga. App. 43, 650 S.E.2d 746 (2007).

Even if the trial court in a nuisance and trespass case erred in admitting narrative portions of a police officer's reports as business records, the error was harmless because the officer was available for cross-examination and because the reports were cumulative of the officer's testimony. Stanfield v. Waste Mgmt. of Ga., Inc., 287 Ga. App. 810, 652 S.E.2d 815 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 228 (Ga. 2008).

There is no error in the admission of a police report showing that the defendant had a large amount of change in the defendant's possession when the defendant was apprehended inside a store. Johnson v. State, 168 Ga. App. 271, 308 S.E.2d 681 (1983).

Police officer's receipt for property constituted business record. — When an undercover officer who purchased marijuana from defendant testified regarding the purchase, opined that the substance was marijuana, and also identified the receipt for property and testified that the official filled out the receipt in the normal course of business, the receipt for property was clearly identified as a business record and was properly admitted as such over defendant's hearsay objection. Green v. State, 165 Ga. App. 702, 302 S.E.2d 604 (1983).

Police officer's letter containing compilation of figures furnished by another showing the number of accidents involving left-turning vehicles at an intersection over a three-year period was not admissible as a business record. Loper v. Drury, 211 Ga. App. 478, 440 S.E.2d 32 (1994).

With regard to proof of transmittal of contraband to state crime lab by certified mail, the state could only produce a photostatic copy of the certification receipt in lieu of the original and the defendant urged that, without an adequate explanation for the absence of the original certified mail receipt as required by O.C.G.A. § 24-5-4, the chain of custody was not sufficiently proven, but a deputy sheriff testified that the deputy would always make a copy of the certified mail receipt when the deputy mailed contraband to the state crime lab, but had been unable to locate the original receipt for this particular mailing, and identified the deputy's handwriting on the photostatic copy and noted that the certification number was identical to that on the state crime lab report, the trial court was authorized to conclude that the copy of the receipt had been made in the regular course of business so as to be admissible pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-14 and 24-5-26. Spead v. State, 187 Ga. App. 359, 370 S.E.2d 213 (1988).

1. Foundation for Admission

Business records admissible to prove crime. — Defendant's conviction for theft by taking in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-8-2 was proper under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14 because the business records exception did not require that the person laying the foundation for the admission of business records be the custodian of the records. Instead, the statute required only that the record offered to prove an act or transaction be made in the regular course of business and that it was the regular course of business to make the record at the time of the act or transaction; the witness's lack of personal knowledge regarding how the records were created did not render the records inadmissible, but merely affected the weight given to the evidence. Loyal v. State, 300 Ga. App. 65, 684 S.E.2d 124 (2009).

Pawn ticket admissible as business record. — Pawn ticket constitutes a contemporaneous record of a transaction made in the regular course of business pursuant to regular business practices, and thus is admissible as evidence of the transaction under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14. Baxter v. State, 254 Ga. 538, 331 S.E.2d 561 (1985), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 935, 106 S. Ct. 269, 88 L. Ed. 2d 275 (1985); 498 U.S. 1041, 111 S. Ct. 714, 112 L. Ed. 2d 703 (1991).

Report containing opinions of party not before court. — Even if a proper foundation was laid to introduce a laboratory report as a business record, it was still not admissible as a whole if the report contained the opinions or conclusion of a third party not before the court. Department of Human Resources v. Corbin, 202 Ga. App. 10, 413 S.E.2d 484 (1991), cert. denied, 202 Ga. App. 905, 413 S.E.2d 484 (1992).

Trial court did not err by refusing to admit medical records of non-testifying physicians who had treated plaintiff because defendant failed to lay a proper foundation. Hodson v. Mawson, 227 Ga. App. 490, 489 S.E.2d 855 (1997).

Records which contain diagnostic opinions of third parties not before the court are not admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Baker v. State, 251 Ga. 464, 306 S.E.2d 917 (1983).

Testimonials from customers. — In a suit between a manufacturer and a purchaser, the testimony of one of the purchaser's customers was properly excluded as hearsay because the testimony did not contain the type of routine facts whose accuracy was not affected by bias, judgment, and memory, as contemplated for the admission of business records under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14(b). Pendley Quality Trailer Supply, Inc. v. B&F Plastics, Inc., 260 Ga. App. 125, 578 S.E.2d 915 (2003).

Medical records. — Medical records regarding plaintiff's injuries and treatment were not admissible in the absence of testimony satisfying foundational requirements. Buford v. Benton, 232 Ga. App. 102, 501 S.E.2d 272 (1998).

Blood-alcohol test as hospital business record. — When the doctor who treated plaintiff-driver in the hospital emergency room following the accident detected what the doctor thought was the odor of alcohol about the plaintiff-driver and, without a request or direction by the officer, ordered a blood-alcohol test to be performed upon the plaintiff-driver in order to determine the type of anesthesia to use on plaintiff-driver, the blood-alcohol test results were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14 as part of a hospital record made in the regular course of hospital business, and thus, compliance with O.C.G.A. § 40-6-392(a)(2) and (3) was not a prerequisite to the admission of the blood test results. Bynum v. Standard (Chevron) Oil Co., 157 Ga. App. 819, 278 S.E.2d 669, cert. denied, 248 Ga. 254, 285 S.E.2d 186 (1981).

Trial court properly admitted, at defendant's trial for vehicular homicide, the results of a blood test performed by a hospital, since the test was administered for the purpose of assisting in defendant's medical treatment, was requested by the treating physician and not by a law enforcement officer, and was not obtained for the purpose of showing that defendant was in violation of the driving-under-the-influence statute. Jackson v. State, 196 Ga. App. 724, 397 S.E.2d 13 (1990).

Blood alcohol test performed by officer. — There was adequate foundation to admit printouts of test results of defendant's breath test as business records under subsection (b) of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14, in that it was in the regular course of the trooper's business to perform such a test, and these printouts were the result of one of those tests conducted in the regular course of the trooper's duties; consequently, there was no violation of defendant's right of confrontation. Sisson v. State, 232 Ga. App. 61, 499 S.E.2d 422 (1998).

Blood test results. — Hospital record showing blood test results was properly admitted as a business records exception to the hearsay rule. Dixon v. State, 227 Ga. App. 533, 489 S.E.2d 532 (1997).

Videotape of surgical procedure. — Videotape of arthroscopic surgical procedure performed on plaintiff's shoulder was admissible as a business record since the doctor was available for cross-examination. Freeland v. Baker, 205 Ga. App. 470, 422 S.E.2d 315 (1992).

Summary prepared in support of demand for payment not "business record". — When a witness's testimony concerning the amount of alleged indebtedness under a lease is derived not from an examination of any books of account or other records prepared in the ordinary course of business, but rather from a summary prepared in support of a demand for payment, this summary is not a "business record" within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14. Gateway Leasing Corp. v. Heath, 168 Ga. App. 858, 310 S.E.2d 549 (1983).

Tax assessments did not fall under the business record exception to hearsay. Sheppard v. Sheppard, 229 Ga. App. 494, 494 S.E.2d 240 (1997).

List of promissory notes, not made according to regular business procedure, which was offered in evidence to support the witness's contention that such notes existed and to alert the jury of the amount of the notes, was improperly admitted under the business records exception. Growth Properties of Fla., Ltd. v. Wallace, 168 Ga. App. 893, 310 S.E.2d 715 (1983).

Bulldozer operator's worksheets prepared in anticipation of litigation were not admissible as evidence since the operator had not kept a contemporaneous record of the operator's hours or expenses. Goss v. Mathis, 188 Ga. App. 702, 373 S.E.2d 807, cert. denied, 188 Ga. App. 911, 373 S.E.2d 807 (1988).

Automobile repair estimates were not admissible in a personal injury action arising out of an automobile collision. Moore v. Graham, 221 Ga. App. 616, 472 S.E.2d 152 (1996).

Billing statements. — Proof of attorney fees did not require the testimony of the attorneys or paralegals who performed the work; sufficient evidence was presented by a witness who introduced billing statements that were admissible as business records. Santora v. American Combustion, Inc., 225 Ga. App. 771, 485 S.E.2d 34 (1997).

Minutes from meeting of church members. — Minutes of a meeting of church members were not admissible as business records in the absence of a statement that it was the regular course of business to create the minutes. White Missionary Baptist Church v. Trustees of First Baptist Church, 268 Ga. 668, 492 S.E.2d 661 (1997).

Fiber counts. — There was no evidence that skill of observation or judgment was a significant factor affecting the reliability of fiber counts performed for the former employer by an independent laboratory, or that the accuracy of the counts was affected by bias, so the trial court did not err by admitting the fiber counts under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. Stewart v. CSX Transp., Inc., 268 Ga. App. 434, 602 S.E.2d 665 (2004).

Affidavit by creditor's "recovery specialist." — An affidavit supported by a creditor in support of the creditor's motion for summary judgment satisfied the business records exception when the affiant, a "recovery specialist," stated that the affiant was familiar with the creditor's books and records, that the books and records were kept in the ordinary course of business, that it was the ordinary course of business to keep such books and records, that the entries on the books and records concerning the debtor were posted at or about the time of the transaction, and that the documents named in the affidavit and identifiable in the record showed the terms of the contract between the parties and provided the financial history of the debtor's personal credit line account. Gerben v. Beneficial Ga., Inc., 283 Ga. App. 740, 642 S.E.2d 405 (2007).

Preprinted form documents admissible. — As preprinted form documents contained very specific information concerning goods purchased, and bore signatures on behalf of the buyer and the seller, the trial court was authorized to find sufficient circumstantial evidence of authentication to admit the documents as business records. Nyankojo v. North Star Capital Acquisition, 298 Ga. App. 6, 679 S.E.2d 57 (2009).

Sales acknowledgment. — In a suit against a carrier by a shipper's insurer under 49 U.S.C. § 14706 of the Interstate Commerce Act, the shipper's "sales acknowledgment" business records were admissible to show the sale of the goods to a third party, but were not sufficient to establish the necessary element of proof that the goods were delivered to the carrier in good condition. Transp. Solutions, Inc. v. St. Paul Mercury Ins. Co., 297 Ga. App. 757, 678 S.E.2d 201 (2009).

Evidence was properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-14 in the following cases. — See Haygood v. Smith, 80 Ga. App. 461, 56 S.E.2d 310 (1949); Guthrie v. Berrien Prods. Co., 91 Ga. App. 45, 84 S.E.2d 596 (1954); Crooke v. Elliott, 96 Ga. App. 314, 99 S.E.2d 842 (1957); Home Fin Co. v. Smith, 116 Ga. App. 76, 156 S.E.2d 522 (1967); Calhoun v. Chappell, 117 Ga. App. 865, 162 S.E.2d 300 (1968); Huff v. State, 141 Ga. App. 66, 232 S.E.2d 403 (1977); Tucker v. Whitehead, 155 Ga. App. 104, 270 S.E.2d 317 (1980); Head v. State, 246 Ga. 360, 271 S.E.2d 452 (1980); Anderson v. Chatham, 190 Ga. App. 559, 379 S.E.2d 793 (1989); Johnson v. State, 266 Ga. 775, 470 S.E.2d 637 (1996); Tolver v. State, 269 Ga. 530, 500 S.E.2d 563 (1998).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Computer printout sheets. — Although computer printout sheets are generally classified as hearsay, and to be admissible into evidence the sheets must fall within an exception to the well-known hearsay rule, subject to the discretion of the court, computer printout sheets or records stored in an electronic computer may be admissible into evidence when such are permanent records made in the regular course of business. 1973 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 73-91.

General Consideration

No clear dividing line. — Admissions may be of such character as to render it difficult to say whether the admissions amount to confessions or to mere incriminating statements. The dividing line is not always clear, though the legal distinction is apparent. Covington v. State, 79 Ga. 687, 7 S.E. 153 (1887); Weaver v. State, 135 Ga. 317, 69 S.E. 488 (1910).

Terms “admissions” and “confessions” are interchangeable and the probative value of a declaration that the defendant did the main fact charged is the same whether called a confession or an admission. Lumpkin v. American Sur. Co., 69 Ga. App. 887, 27 S.E.2d 412 (1943).

Inference of guilt. — A confession is direct evidence of guilt, while an admission is circumstantial evidence from which guilt can be inferred. Riley v. State, 1 Ga. App. 651, 57 S.E. 1031 (1907); Thomas v. State, 18 Ga.

App. 101, 88 S.E. 917 (1916); Kinard v. State, 19 Ga. App. 624, 91 S.E. 941 (1917); Stephens v. State, 127 Ga. App. 416, 193 S.E.2d 870 (1972).

When a person only admits certain facts from which the jury may or may not infer guilt, there is no confession. Chappell v. State, 71 Ga. App. 147, 30 S.E.2d 289 (1944); Braswell v. State, 87 Ga. App. 430, 74 S.E.2d 106 (1953).

Effect of admission of main fact. — An admission of the main fact, from which the essential elements of the criminal act may be inferred, amounts to an admission of the crime itself. Powers v. State, 172 Ga. 1, 157 S.E. 195 (1931); Secrist v. State, 145 Ga. App. 391, 243 S.E.2d 599, cert. dismissed, 242 Ga. 69, 248 S.E.2d 157 (1978).

Admissions

An admission in the law of evidence is a statement by a party of the existence of a fact which is relevant to the cause of the party's adversary. Brooks v. Sessoms, 47 Ga. App. 554, 171 S.E. 222 (1933).

An admission, as applied to a criminal case, is the statement by the defendant of a fact or facts pertinent to the issues, and tending, in connection with proof of other facts or circumstances, to prove the guilt of the accused, but which is of itself insufficient to authorize conviction. Ranson v. State, 2 Ga. App. 826, 59 S.E. 101 (1907); Easterling v. State, 24 Ga. App. 424, 100 S.E. 727 (1919); Morris v. State, 176 Ga. 243, 167 S.E. 509 (1933); Teague v. State, 48 Ga. App. 225, 172 S.E. 571 (1934); Roberts v. State, 59 Ga. App. 192, 200 S.E. 233 (1938); Timbs v. State, 71 Ga. App. 141, 30 S.E.2d 290 (1944); Braswell v. State, 87 Ga. App. 430, 74 S.E.2d 106 (1953); Stephens v. State, 127 Ga. App. 416, 193 S.E.2d 870 (1972); Pendergrass v. State, 245 Ga. 626, 266 S.E.2d 225 (1980).

An admission is to be scanned with care, but it is evidence which, with other evidence, may and often does justify a conviction. Stephens v. State, 127 Ga. App. 416, 193 S.E.2d 870 (1972).

An admission of a fact not in itself involving criminal intent is not a confession. Carter v. State, 90 Ga. App. 61, 81 S.E.2d 868 (1954).

Confessions

Confession defined. — A confession is a voluntary statement made by a person charged with the commission of a crime, wherein the person acknowledges personally to be guilty of the offense charged. Owens v. State, 120 Ga. 296, 48 S.E. 21 (1904); Ranson v. State, 2 Ga. App. 826, 59 S.E. 101 (1907); Reed v. State, 15 Ga. App. 435, 83 S.E. 674 (1914); Easterling v. State, 24 Ga. App. 424, 100 S.E. 727 (1919); Teague v. State, 48 Ga. App. 225, 172 S.E. 571 (1934); Grubbs v. State, 53 Ga. App. 377, 186 S.E. 140 (1936); Braswell v. State, 87 Ga. App. 430, 74 S.E.2d 106 (1953); Carter v. State, 90 Ga. App. 61, 81 S.E.2d 868 (1954); Reece v. State, 212 Ga.

609, 94 S.E.2d 723 (1956); Stephens v. State, 127 Ga. App. 416, 193 S.E.2d 870 (1972).

A confession is rather a fact to be proved by evidence, than evidence to prove a fact. Powers v. State, 172 Ga. 1, 157 S.E. 195 (1931).

Waiver of technical proof. — A confession is not so much proof that a particular thing took place as it is a waiver by the party charged of the party's right to have certain facts alleged against that party technically proven. Powers v. State, 172 Ga. 1, 157 S.E. 195 (1931).

Entire criminal act must be confessed to find a confession. Owens v. State, 120 Ga. 296, 48 S.E. 21 (1904); Goolsby v. State, 133 Ga. 427, 66 S.E. 159 (1909); Hart v. State, 14 Ga. App. 714, 82 S.E. 164 (1914); Neal v. State, 24 Ga. App. 148, 100 S.E. 12 (1919), cert. denied, 24 Ga. App. 817 (1920); Powers v. State, 172 Ga. 1, 157 S.E. 195 (1931); Carter v. State, 90 Ga. App. 61, 81 S.E.2d 868 (1954).

True determinant of whether the defendant has made a confession or merely has given a statement is whether the statement is offered by the accused as exculpatory or inculpatory. Kennedy v. State, 156 Ga. App. 792, 275 S.E.2d 339 (1980); Wells v. State, 247 Ga. 792, 279 S.E.2d 213 (1981).

Justification not confession. — Statement which admits the commission of an act, but which also gives legal excuse or justification, is not a confession. Owens v. State, 120 Ga. 296, 48 S.E. 21 (1904); Reed v. State, 15 Ga. App. 435, 83 S.E. 674 (1914); Powers v. State, 172 Ga. 1, 157 S.E. 195 (1931); Logue v. State, 149 Ga. App. 797, 256 S.E.2d 31 (1979); Kennedy v. State, 156 Ga. App. 792, 275 S.E.2d 339 (1980); Wells v. State, 247 Ga. 792, 279 S.E.2d 213 (1981).

Incriminating statements distinguished. — There is a difference between an incriminating statement and a confession of guilt, since in the former only one or more facts entering into the criminal act is admitted, while in the latter the entire criminal act is confessed. Owens v. State, 120 Ga. 296, 48 S.E. 21 (1904); Goolsby v. State, 133 Ga. 427, 66 S.E. 159 (1909); Powers v. State, 172 Ga. 1, 157 S.E. 195 (1931); Cumberlander v. State, 53 Ga. App. 276, 185 S.E. 379 (1936); Carter v. State, 90 Ga. App. 61, 81 S.E.2d 868 (1954); Logue v. State, 149 Ga. App. 797, 256 S.E.2d 31 (1979).

Guilty Pleas

Confessions distinguished. — Plea of guilty differs from a full and voluntary confession in that while the latter is merely evidence of guilt, the former is a formal confession before the court on which judgment may be rendered. Lumpkin v. American Sur. Co., 69 Ga. App. 887, 27 S.E.2d 412 (1943).

Use in civil actions. — Plea of guilty in a federal court is competent as an admission in a civil action in a state court. Lumpkin v. American Sur. Co., 69 Ga. App. 887, 27 S.E.2d 412 (1943).

When a civil action is instituted for damages on the grounds of negligence for the violation of penal ordinances or statutes, and the defendant has previously confessed or pleaded guilty to the violation of such penal statutes whether it be in or out of court, these confessions are competent evidence as admissions against the defendant in the civil action with reference to the same transaction; and on cross-examination it is competent for the opposite party to inquire of the defendant if the defendant made such confessions. If the defendant admits in the civil action having made such confessions, it is unnecessary to produce an authenticated copy of the proceedings in the criminal case and such admissions may be considered in determining the civil action. Roper v. Scott, 77 Ga. App. 120, 48 S.E.2d 118 (1948).

Instructions

Failure to charge on a confession, in the absence of a request, is no cause for a new trial. Wilson v. State, 74 Ga. App. 42, 38 S.E.2d 750 (1946).

Reversible error. — If a defendant has made only incriminating statements and not a confession, it is reversible error to charge the law of confession. Logue v. State, 149 Ga. App. 797, 256 S.E.2d 31 (1979).

Proper instruction. — Charge that “admissions usually refer to civil cases and confessions to criminal cases, all admissions should be scanned with care, and confessions of guilt received with great caution,” was not confusing and misleading to the jury and unsound as an abstract principle of law. Reece v. State, 212 Ga. 609, 94 S.E.2d 723 (1956).

Evidence sufficient to authorize instructions on law of confessions in the following cases. — See Harris v. State, 207 Ga. 287, 61 S.E.2d 135 (1950); Patrick v. State, 209 Ga. 645, 74 S.E.2d 848 (1953); Reece v. State, 212 Ga. 609, 94 S.E.2d 723 (1956); Kennedy v. State, 156 Ga. App. 792, 275 S.E.2d 339 (1980).

Evidence sufficient to authorize instructions on law of admissions in the following case. — See Morris v. State, 176 Ga. 243, 167 S.E. 509 (1933).

Evidence insufficient to authorize instructions in the following cases. — See Reed v. State, 15 Ga. App. 435, 83 S.E. 674 (1914); Chappell v. State, 71 Ga. App. 147, 30 S.E.2d 289 (1944); Braswell v. State, 87 Ga. App. 430, 74 S.E.2d 106 (1953).

24-3-16. Testimony as to child's description of sexual contact or physical abuse.

A statement made by a child under the age of 14 years describing any act of sexual contact or physical abuse performed with or on the child by another or performed with or on another in the presence of the child is admissible in evidence by the testimony of the person or persons to whom made if the child is available to testify in the proceedings and the court finds that the circumstances of the statement provide sufficient indicia of reliability. (Code 1981, § 24-3-16, enacted by Ga. L. 1986, p. 668, § 1; Ga. L. 1995, p. 937, § 1.)

Constitutionality. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 is not constitutionally deficient. Rayburn v. State, 194 Ga. App. 676, 391 S.E.2d 780 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 969, 111 S. Ct. 434, 112 L. Ed. 2d 417 (1990); Toledo v. State, 216 Ga. App. 480, 455 S.E.2d 595 (1995).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 is not unconstitutional by allowing the state to bolster the testimony of the victim while denying the same opportunity to the defendant. Weathersby v. State, 262 Ga. 126, 414 S.E.2d 200 (1992).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 does not violate the due process clause of the Georgia Constitution, Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. I, on its face and is not void for vagueness and uncertainty. Weathersby v. State, 262 Ga. 126, 414 S.E.2d 200 (1992).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 is not violative of the federal sixth amendment. McLelland v. State, 203 Ga. App. 93, 416 S.E.2d 340, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 907, 416 S.E.2d 340 (1992); Fuller v. State, 211 Ga. App. 104, 438 S.E.2d 183 (1993).

Retroactivity. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 became effective on July 1, 1986. When trial was held on April 1, 1986, the section was inapposite. Lynn v. State, 181 Ga. App. 461, 352 S.E.2d 602 (1986).

Applicability at date of trial. — Testimony concerning an outcry made by the victim some four months after the last incident of child molestation was properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. While the outcry occurred prior to the effective date of § 24-3-16, the determinative date as to the applicability of § 24-3-16 was the date of trial. Vargas v. State, 184 Ga. App. 650, 362 S.E.2d 461 (1987).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 is unconstitutional with regard to child witness, as opposed to child victim. — The 1995 amendment of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, allowing the admission into evidence of hearsay statements made by a child under the age of 14 years who witnessed an act of physical or sexual abuse inflicted upon another, violates constitutional principles of equal protection. Woodard v. State, 269 Ga. 317, 496 S.E.2d 896 (1998).

Defendant's constitutional rights not violated. — Admission of videotapes in child molestation cases does not infringe upon a defendant's sixth amendment right to confront witnesses if the child victim testified. Frazier v. State, 195 Ga. App. 109, 393 S.E.2d 262 (1990); Toledo v. State, 216 Ga. App. 480, 455 S.E.2d 595 (1995).

Admission of a child molestation victim's out-of-court statements did not violate the defendant's sixth amendment right to confrontation since the statements bore sufficient "indicia of reliability." Smith v. State, 199 Ga. App. 378, 405 S.E.2d 78, cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 907, 405 S.E.2d 78 (1991).

Constitutional right of confrontation. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 is not constitutionally deficient. The defendant need not be placed in the position of calling the alleged victim to the stand in order to exercise the defendant's rights under the sixth amendment. Rather, the court will call the alleged victim at the request of either party, informing the jury that it is the court which has called the child and that both parties will have an opportunity to examine the child. Eberhardt v. State, 257 Ga. 420, 359 S.E.2d 908 (1987), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 1069, 108 S. Ct. 1036, 98 L. Ed. 2d 999 (1988).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 contemplates testimony about what a child victim said and did relevant to the alleged sexual contact from both the child and those witnessing the child's later reaction. The purpose of this procedure is to allow a defendant to exercise the defendant's right to confrontation without requiring the defendant to be cast unfavorably before the jury for forcing the child to testify; any "bolstering" by other witnesses can be explored by the defendant on cross-examination. Rayburn v. State, 194 Ga. App. 676, 391 S.E.2d 780 (1990), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 969, 111 S. Ct. 434, 112 L. Ed. 2d 417 (1990).

Statute valid despite equal protection challenge. — Defendant asserted that defendant was similarly situated to all other criminal and civil litigants and that O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 created an irrational and arbitrary class of litigants because only persons charged with physical and/or sexual abuse of a child under the age of 14 were subject to the exception contained therein. These assertions were not enough to overcome the presumptive validity of § 24-3-16. Dobbins v. State, 262 Ga. 161, 415 S.E.2d 168 (1992).

O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-16 and 24-9-5 must be construed together. Bright v. State, 197 Ga.

App. 784, 400 S.E.2d 18 (1990); McGarity v. State, 212 Ga. App. 17, 440 S.E.2d 695 (1994).

Competency of children to testify in a divorce action could be established only by demonstrating that the children understood the nature of an oath, as required by O.C.G.A. § 24-9-5(a). Woodruff v. Woodruff, 272 Ga. 485, 531 S.E.2d 714 (2000).

Procedure upon invocation of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. — If the prosecution invokes O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 to introduce out-of-court declarations by the alleged victim, the court shall do as follows: before the state rests, the court shall, at the request of either party, cause the alleged victim to take the stand. The court shall then inform the jury that it is the court who has called the child as a witness, and that both parties have the opportunity to examine the child. The court shall then allow both parties to examine and cross-examine the child as though § 24-3-16 has not been invoked. Sosebee v. State, 257 Ga. 298, 357 S.E.2d 562 (1987).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 does not require the court to make a finding of necessity before admitting into evidence the statement of a child under the age of 14 describing sexual contact. Newberry v. State, 184 Ga. App. 356, 361 S.E.2d 499 (1987).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 does not require that a hearing to determine indicia of reliability be held prior to receiving the testimony. Moreover, there is no requirement that the trial court make a specific finding of sufficient indicia of reliability in order for the out-of-court statements of child victims to be admissible. Xulu v. State, 256 Ga. App. 272, 568 S.E.2d 74 (2002).

Admission of videotape. — In a child molestation case, defendant knew that the videotaped interview of one of the children was to be played for the jury, that the child would not be testifying for the state, and that defendant had the opportunity to call the child, but defendant did not inquire about the child's availability to testify at trial, nor did defendant request that the child be produced to testify; thus, the failure of the child to testify at trial did not make the videotaped statements inadmissible at trial. Baker v. State, 252 Ga. App. 238, 555 S.E.2d 899 (2001).

State proffered substantial evidence to establish the reliability of children's videotaped statements accusing defendant of molestation, and the proffer was then supported by evidence presented at trial; thus, the state fulfilled its burden in demonstrating that the children's statements had the "requisite degree of trustworthiness" to be admitted at trial and the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting the videotapes. Baker v. State, 252 Ga. App. 238, 555 S.E.2d 899 (2001).

Reliability of a child's videotaped statement was established since the child was not subjected to repeated questioning by different people, nor was evidence presented that the child was coached, the child's mother called the police almost immediately after discovering the molestation, and the fact that an interview took place some time after the incident, did not, without more, make the statement unreliable; the juvenile had ample opportunity to cross-examine the victim and question the child about the child's memory of and the circumstances surrounding the child's statement. In the Interest of A.H., 259 Ga. App. 608, 578 S.E.2d 247 (2003).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion when the court allowed the state to show the jury videotapes of interviews police made with children who accused defendant of touching their genitals, or when the court allowed the children's parents to testify about statements their children made to them, and the appellate court held that evidence which showed that defendant touched the genitals of several children who were enrolled in tae kwon do classes defendant taught and sodomized three children was sufficient to sustain defendant's convictions on 18 counts of child molestation and three counts of aggravated child molestation. Fiek v. State, 266 Ga. App. 523, 597 S.E.2d 585 (2004).

Trial court did not err in admitting the videotaped statement of the child victim in the defendant's trial for child molestation since the child was 11 years old when the statement was made, the clinical psychologist who conducted the interview assessed and commented on the child's demeanor and emotional state, and testified that the child's language and vocabulary were generally within normal range, that the child gave sensory and contextual details about the incidents, that the child did not appear to have been coached, and that it was unnecessary to ask the child leading questions because the child provided sufficient details on the child's own; moreover, the child's out-of-court statements were detailed and consistent, the defendant had the opportunity to cross-examine the child in the presence of the jury, and had the opportunity to allow the jury to judge the child's demeanor, and the defendant also cross-examined the psychologist extensively regarding the statement. Harris v. State, 279 Ga. App. 241, 630 S.E.2d 853 (2006).

In a child molestation case involving defendant's 13-year-old child, defense counsel was not ineffective for not requesting that the trial court determine the reliability of the victim's videotaped statement under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 or for not objecting to the statement's admission; the victim spontaneously told the victim's foster mother about the incidents when the victim was upset, and the victim repeatedly expressed love for the defendant and a desire not to get the defendant into trouble. Foster v. State, 286 Ga. App. 250, 649 S.E.2d 322 (2007), cert. dismissed, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 875 (Ga. 2007).

In admitting the videotaped interview under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, and allowing the defendant to cross-examine the victim at trial, the trial court determined that there were sufficient indicia of reliability surrounding the victim's out-of-court statements to justify the statement's admission. Phillips v. State, 284 Ga. App. 224, 644 S.E.2d 153 (2007).

In a child molestation prosecution, videotaped interviews by the police with a defendant's victim had sufficient indicia of reliability to be admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 because the victim was interviewed outside the presence of the victim's parent and the victim's recounting of the events remained consistent; an additional safeguard was provided by the fact that the victim testified at the defendant's trial and, thus, was subject to cross-examination. Hughes v. State, 297 Ga. App. 581, 677 S.E.2d 674 (2009).

In a conviction of aggravated child molestation and aggravated sodomy involving a four-year-old child, there was sufficient indicia of reliability to admit a videotape of a forensic interview of the child because the interviewer developed a rapport with the child, and there were no threats or promises for the child's answers. Brown v. State, 300 Ga. App. 359, 685 S.E.2d 377 (2009).

Dual burden in determining reliability. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 imposes a dual burden on the trial court and the proponent of child hearsay testimony. The state must present evidence proving the child's reliability, and the court must assess that evidence. But § 24-3-16 does not authorize the state to eviscerate the rule against improper bolstering. Roberson v. State, 241 Ga. App. 226, 526 S.E.2d 428 (1999).

Burden is on the state to show that the state's evidence falls within the hearsay exception created by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 for the admission of out-of-court hearsay statements of a child victim of sexual abuse; O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 imposes a dual burden on the trial court and the proponent of child hearsay testimony, as the state must present evidence proving the child's reliability, and the trial court must assess that evidence. Ferreri v. State, 267 Ga. App. 811, 600 S.E.2d 793 (2004).

Court could consider factors in determining reliability. — Trial court could consider certain factors when deciding if a child's statement's provided sufficient indicia of reliability pursuant to the statute; any bolstering could be explored by a defendant in cross examination. Howard v. State, 252 Ga. App. 465, 556 S.E.2d 536 (2001).

Factors considered in determining reliability. — Indicia of reliability must spring from the circumstances of the statement. The factors which the court may consider, when applicable, include but are not limited to the following: (1) the atmosphere and circumstances under which the statement was made (including the time, the place, and the people present); (2) the spontaneity of the child's statement to the people present; (3) the child's age; (4) the child's general demeanor; (5) the child's condition (physical or emotional); (6) the presence or absence of threats or promise of benefits; (7) the presence or absence of drugs or alcohol; (8) the child's general credibility; (9) the presence or absence of any coaching by parents or other third parties before or at the time of the child's statement, and the type of coaching and circumstances surrounding the statement and, the nature of the child's statement and type of language used therein; and (10) the consistency between repeated out-of-court statements by the child. Gregg v. State, 201 Ga. App. 238, 411 S.E.2d 65, cert. denied, 201 Ga. App. 903, 411 S.E.2d 65 (1991); Williams v. State, 204 Ga. App. 878, 420 S.E.2d 781 (1992); Gentry v. State, 213 Ga. App. 24, 443 S.E.2d 667 (1994); Heard v. State, 221 Ga. App. 166, 471 S.E.2d 22 (1996).

Statement about contact with other child inadmissible. — Statements made by the victim to a witness about sexual contact between the defendant and another child were not admissible evidence. Riddle v. State, 208 Ga. App. 8, 430 S.E.2d 153 (1993).

Age of child at time witness testifies irrelevant. — It is plain from the face of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 that the age of the child at the time the witness testifies is irrelevant as long as the child's statement about which the witness testifies was made while the child was under 14 years of age. Greer v. State, 201 Ga. App. 775, 412 S.E.2d 843, cert. denied, 201 Ga. App. 903, 412 S.E.2d 843 (1991).

In a child molestation case where similar transaction evidence about alleged sexual abuse of the defendant's child was admitted, testimony of the child's other parent and a videotaped interview with the child were properly admitted under the child hearsay statute because the child was ten when the child made the statements; it was immaterial that the child was 19 at the time of the trial. Slade v. State, 287 Ga. App. 34, 651 S.E.2d 352 (2007), cert. denied, 129 S. Ct. 56, 172 L.Ed.2d 24 (2008).

Age of the child at the time the statements were made is determinative of their admissibility under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Darden v. State, 206 Ga. App. 400, 425 S.E.2d 409 (1992).

Statements about which the friend testified concerning the molestation of the victim by the victim's stepfather were made when the victim was 13 years old and so were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Geiger v. State, 258 Ga. App. 57, 573 S.E.2d 85 (2002).

Because the child was not under the age of 14 when the child made the alleged hearsay statement at issue, the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, did not apply; moreover, because the contested witness's testimony was substantially the same as to what the child victim testified to, the evidence was cumulative and any error in admission was harmless. Currington v. State, 270 Ga. App. 381, 606 S.E.2d 619 (2004).

As a child was 15 when the child told an officer that the defendant had molested the child, the officer's testimony about the child's accusation was not admissible under the Georgia Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Cash v. State, 294 Ga. App. 741, 669 S.E.2d 731 (2008).

Trial court did not err in permitting the victim's mother to testify to the victim's prior consistent statements about what happened on the night the defendant had sexual intercourse with the victim over the defendant's bolstering objection because the victim was thirteen years old at the time the victim made the statements, the mother's testimony relating those statements was admissible under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Davis v. State, No. A10A0868, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 403 (Apr. 21, 2010).

Mental ability equivalent to child below 14 years. — Although there was evidence that the 15-year-old victim was mildly mentally handicapped with intellectual abilities and social skills equivalent to an average child below 14 years of age, the trial court improperly ruled that O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 applied. Foster v. State, 216 Ga. App. 26, 453 S.E.2d 482 (1995).

When the state called the child as a witness and the child was fully cross-examined, there was no error. McLelland v. State, 203 Ga. App. 93, 416 S.E.2d 340, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 907, 416 S.E.2d 340 (1992).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 was inapplicable as the child testified at trial and was fully cross-examined by the defendant. Hayes v. State, 274 Ga. 875, 560 S.E.2d 656 (2002).

Five-year-old child's out-of-court statements to the child's grandmother and aunt regarding a sexual assault were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 because: (1) the child was upset when making the statement to the aunt; (2) the child was at home when making the statements, and there was no evidence that the child was forced to make the statements or that the child was coached regarding what to say; (3) the child used age-appropriate language; (4) the statements were consistent; and (5) the child testified and defense counsel had the opportunity to cross-examine the child. Ingram v.

State, 262 Ga. App. 304, 585 S.E.2d 211 (2003).

Age of witness irrelevant. — Any competent person may present testimony under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16; thus, a 13-year-old friend properly testified. Peters v. State, 206 Ga. App. 143, 424 S.E.2d 372 (1992).

Demeanor is one of the factors used to determine the reliability of a child's statement. Keller v. State, 221 Ga. App. 846, 473 S.E.2d 194 (1996).

Finding as to reliability not a condition precedent. — While the court must find that "the circumstances of the statement provide sufficient indicia of reliability," such finding is not a condition precedent to the admissibility of the statement; rather, the requirement of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 is met if after both parties have rested, the record contains evidence which would support such a finding. Gregg v. State, 201 Ga. App. 238, 411 S.E.2d 65, cert. denied, 201 Ga. App. 903, 411 S.E.2d 65 (1991); Tidwell v. State, 219 Ga. App. 233, 464 S.E.2d 834 (1995).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 does not require a hearing to determine "indicia of reliability" be held prior to receiving the testimony. Holden v. State, 202 Ga. App. 558, 414 S.E.2d 910 (1992).

With regard to a defendant's convictions on several counts of child molestation, the trial court properly admitting the tape recorded statement of the child victim under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 as by stating that the court found no reason to question the reliability of the child's statement, the trial court, in effect, made the required finding that the tape was reliable. There was no requirement that the trial court make a specific finding of sufficient indicia of reliability for the out-of-court statement of the child victim to be admissible. Taylor v. State, 292 Ga. App. 846, 666 S.E.2d 85 (2008), overruled on other grounds, Adams v. State, 299 Ga. App. 39, 681 S.E.2d 725 (2009).

Questions regarding victim's credibility not allowed. — Trial court erred in asking the witness, in the presence of the jury, whether the victim had exhibited "a general attitude of credibility" during the interview process. Buice v. State, 239 Ga. App. 52, 520 S.E.2d 258 (1999), aff'd, 528 S.E.2d 788 (2000).

Reliability of videotaped statements not established. — Circumstances surrounding the making of videotaped statements of 4 ½ year old alleged child molestation victim failed to establish the inherent reliability of those statements, even though the victim used terminology which would not be expected of a child the child's age and although the child had no apparent motive to fabricate, the child's statements did not meet the test of "spontaneity and consistent repetition," some of the assertions made by the child during the two videotaped interviews were inconsistent with the known facts, and the interviews were conducted by persons acting in a law enforcement capacity, with the clear intention of gathering evidence for use against the defendant. Rolader v. State, 202 Ga. App. 134, 413 S.E.2d 752 (1991), cert. denied, 202 Ga. App. 907, 413 S.E.2d 752 (1992).

Reliability hearing required. — Defendant's child molestation conviction was reversed as given that the child victim was three-years-old, that the victim gave inconsistent statements, that the victim might have been coached by defendant's estranged wife, that law enforcement was involved in the child's interviews, that 75 out-of-court hearsay statements of the child were introduced by the state, and that the child's hearsay statements formed the bulk of the evidence against defendant, a pretrial Gregg hearing on the reliability of the statements was required under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Ferreri v. State, 267 Ga. App. 811, 600 S.E.2d 793 (2004).

Corroboration of testimony not required. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 requires only that the child be available to testify; it does not require the child to corroborate the hearsay testimony. Jones v. State, 200 Ga. App. 103, 407 S.E.2d 85 (1991); Braddy v. State, 205 Ga. App. 424, 422 S.E.2d 260 (1992); Bookout v. State, 205 Ga. App. 530, 423 S.E.2d 7, cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 899, 423 S.E.2d 7 (1992); Kapua v. State, 228 Ga. App. 193, 491 S.E.2d 387 (1997).

Child molestation and aggravated child molestation convictions were upheld on appeal as a videotaped statement from the victim of those crimes accusing the defendant of requiring the victim to place the defendant's penis in the victim's mouth was corroborated by another witness; hence, the defendant was not denied due process and the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A.

§ 24-3-16, did not require corroboration of child hearsay. Simpson v. State, 282 Ga. App. 456, 638 S.E.2d 900 (2006).

Spontaneous statement admissible. — Phrase "available to testify" means "competent to testify under O.C.G.A. § 24-9-5." In re K.T.B., 192 Ga. App. 132, 384 S.E.2d 231 (1989); In re K.G.L., 198 Ga. App. 891, 403 S.E.2d 464 (1991).

Hearsay testimony of a social worker was properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 as a child was with a parent in a comfortable non-threatening environment when the child said, "(The defendant) hurt me. I don't like (the defendant. The defendant's) mean"; the statement was not made in response to any inquiry, but was a spontaneous reaction to something said by the parent. Revells v. State, 283 Ga. App. 59, 640 S.E.2d 587 (2006).

Child "available to testify" in § 24-3-16 means one competent to testify under § 24-9-5. For offenses occurring before April 19, 1989, including child molestation, a child incompetent as a witness is not available to testify and any out-of-court statements are not rendered admissible by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Hunnicut v. State, 194 Ga. App. 714, 391 S.E.2d 790 (1990), later appeal, 198 Ga. App. 572, 402 S.E.2d 534 (1991).

Child is considered "available to testify" under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 only if the child is "competent" to testify within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-9-5. Shaver v. State, 199 Ga. App. 428, 405 S.E.2d 281, cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 907, 405 S.E.2d 281 (1991).

Availability of child for pretrial interview. — When the witness is a child, it is permissible for the legal custodian to decide whether the child will be made available to defense counsel for a pretrial interview. Kelly v. State, 197 Ga. App. 811, 399 S.E.2d 568 (1990).

Defendant's right to notice of statements before trial. — There is no requirement in O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 that the state provide the defense with pretrial notice of the state's intention to introduce child hearsay statements in evidence. Schwindler v. State, 254 Ga. App. 579, 563 S.E.2d 154 (2002), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 1016, 123 S. Ct. 1935, 155 L. Ed. 2d 854 (2003).

Evidence admissible although child available to testify. — In a prosecution for child molestation, hearsay evidence was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 because the child was clearly available to testify, and the defendant did not challenge the existence of indicia of reliability. Trew v. State, 244 Ga. App. 76, 534 S.E.2d 804 (2000).

Child's own statements about molestation were admissible under the child hearsay statute. Phillips v. State, 251 Ga. App. 179, 553 S.E.2d 847 (2001).

Tape recorded police interview with an eight year old female victim was properly admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 at defendant's trial for child molestation. The child testified at trial and the defendant had the opportunity to cross examine the child regarding the child's memory and the circumstances surrounding the child's out-of-court statements, and the judge and jury had an opportunity to evaluate the child's veracity. The police officer testified about the manner in which the child's mother came to the officer and about the officer's involvement in recording the interview. There was no evidence that the child was forced to make the child's statements or that the child was coached regarding what to say. Hayes v. State, 252 Ga. App. 897, 557 S.E.2d 468 (2001).

Although a trial court stated that a child witness would not testify at trial because the child kept crying, because the child was present and available to testify at trial, inadmissibility of the child's hearsay statements was not present under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16; the judge's comment that the witness would not testify was not an improper comment on the evidence under O.C.G.A. § 17-8-57. Brock v. State, 270 Ga. App. 250, 605 S.E.2d 907 (2004).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in denying defendant's motion in limine to exclude statements that the 13-year-old male child molestation victim made to the parents as such statements were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 because sufficient indicia of reliability were established; the victim was present at trial and testified on direct examination as to why the victim initially denied the molestation when the victim was first confronted by the parents, and then why the victim finally admitted the molestation. Steverson v. State, 276 Ga. App. 876, 625 S.E.2d 476 (2005).

Evidence presented at trial was sufficient to establish the reliability of the statement that the child victim made to an aunt, and the trial court did not err in finding that the statement had the requisite degree of trustworthiness to be admitted at trial; moreover, admission of the statement was harmless because all the child victims testified about the incident at trial and the defendant was acquitted of an aggravated child molestation charge. Nelson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 859, 632 S.E.2d 749 (2006).

In the sexual molestation case, the trial court did not err in allowing into evidence the out-of-court statements of the six-year-old victim via the parent's hearsay testimony; the statements were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 as the victim's out-of-court statements were made under circumstances that provided sufficient indicia of reliability in that the statements were made immediately after the incident and remained consistent, and the victim testified at trial and was cross-examined. Mikell v. State, 281 Ga. App. 739, 637 S.E.2d 142 (2006).

No abuse of discretion resulted from the admission of testimony from the investigating officer, the child victim's mother, and the child victim's sister, about the alleged child molestation committed by the juvenile as: (1) the child was available to testify; (2) cross-examination of the child victim in the judge's chambers was attempted, but proved unsuccessful; and (3) the judge ruled that no further purpose would be served by having the child examined in the open courtroom. In the Interest of S.S., 281 Ga. App. 781, 637 S.E.2d 151 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient for the jury to find a defendant guilty of child molestation beyond a reasonable doubt as it was within the jury's province to reject the defendant's defense denying the crime with regard to the victim as well as with regard to the witnesses who testified as to similar transactions with the defendant. The testimony of the victim was corroborated by an investigator and a forensic interviewer, who testified as to what the victim had told had occurred; the victim's statements were corroborated by the sheriff's investigator; and the jury was entitled to consider the victim's out-of-court statements as substantive evidence under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Lamb v. State, 293 Ga. App. 65, 666 S.E.2d 462 (2008).

Recanting of child victim's testimony. O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 does not require the child to corroborate the hearsay testimony, and conflicts between the videotaped statement and the testimony of the child at trial do not necessarily render the former inadmissible, but rather present a question of credibility of the witness to be resolved by the trier of fact; despite a child victim's apparent recantation of the victim's accusations of molestation at trial, sufficient evidence supported convictions of child molestation and aggravated child molestation after the victim described the molestation in a pre-trial videotaped interview, when an expert witness testified that children may recant testimony with regard to sexual abuse for reasons unrelated to falsity, including embarrassment and fear, and a doctor also testified that the doctor's examination of the victim revealed "unusual" findings that would have caused the doctor to inquire regarding sexual abuse if the findings had appeared on a routine exam. Amerson v. State, 268 Ga. App. 855, 602 S.E.2d 857 (2004).

Witnesses testified pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 that the defendant's stepchild, then 12, told the witnesses about being repeatedly raped and molested by the defendant. That the stepchild recanted these statements at trial did not render the hearsay inadmissible under § 24-3-16, and as the stepchild's credibility was for the jury to decide, the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions for rape, incest, and child molestation. Harvey v. State, 295 Ga. App. 458, 671 S.E.2d 924 (2009).

Evidence admissible because victim took stand. — Direct testimony of the victim and out-of-court statements the victim made to others were admissible since the victim took the stand and was examined and cross-examined by both parties. Fields v. State, 194 Ga. App. 149, 390 S.E.2d 71 (1990).

Because a child victim testified of defendant's sexual abuse and that defendant showed the victim "pictures or movies where people didn't have any clothes on," the trial court properly admitted the videotapes and determined that a psychotherapist's testimony was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16; consequently, defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective. Johnson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 69, 616 S.E.2d 848 (2005), cert. denied, 547 U.S. 1116, 126 S. Ct. 1917, 164 L. Ed. 2d 671 (2006); overruled on other grounds, Miller v. State, 285 Ga. 285, 676 S.E.2d 173 (2009).

In a case where a defendant was convicted of cruelty to children in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-70, the trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for a mistrial or in refusing to strike certain testimony because hearsay statements by the defendant's daughter were admissible pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 since the daughter was available to appear at trial and, in fact, took the witness stand. Stegall v. State, 297 Ga. App. 425, 677 S.E.2d 441 (2009).

Defendant denied right of confrontation. — Trial court erroneously and over objection allowed the state to ask defendant's daughter, in a prosecution for child molestation and incest, whether she had heard her brothers tell her mother what defendant had done to them, as this evidence was hearsay and double hearsay not falling the exception of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 because the brothers were not available to testify. Cobb v. State, 209 Ga. App. 708, 434 S.E.2d 513 (1993).

Defendant was not denied the right of confrontation, even though the defendant was unable to confront the victim when the victim's statements were originally made since the victim actually testified at trial and was subject to a thorough cross-examination. Reynolds v. State, 257 Ga. 725, 363 S.E.2d 249 (1988); Sticher v. State, 209 Ga. App. 423, 433 S.E.2d 660 (1993); White v. State, 213 Ga. App. 429, 445 S.E.2d 309 (1994).

When the victim had been called by the state and the defendant had an opportunity to cross-examine without having to call the victim to the stand, the application of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 did not violate the defendant's right to due process to confront the witness. Lawhorn v. State, 257 Ga. 780, 364 S.E.2d 559 (1988).

Child witness's unresponsiveness to a number of questions as put by defendant did not constitute a deprivation of defendant's constitutional confrontation right so as to require that the witness's out-of-court statements be stricken since defendant was not denied the right to a thorough and sifting cross-examination of a witness who appeared to answer as well as the witness was capable of answering. Bright v. State, 197 Ga. App. 784, 400 S.E.2d 18 (1990).

Defendant's right to confront and cross-examine a child witness was protected in spite of the child's unresponsiveness on cross-examination as to the merits of the case brought against the defendant; the child's unresponsiveness did not preclude the defendant from thoroughly cross-examining the child as to the veracity of hearsay statements made against the defendant's interests by the child's parents and the caseworker. Byrd v. State, 204 Ga. App. 252, 419 S.E.2d 111 (1992).

Reliability of statement established. — Victim's statement to the victim's friend had a sufficient indicia of reliability to render the statement admissible pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 since both young women were 13 years old, there was no evidence to suggest the victim had a tendency to exaggerate or falsify information, the victim's friend testified that discussing the acts of molestation obviously upset the victim and the victim began to cry, and all of the victim's out-of-court statements and the victim's in-court testimony were consistent. Peters v. State, 206 Ga. App. 143, 424 S.E.2d 372 (1992).

Victims' statements made to their mother and social caseworker were sufficiently reliable in light of: (1) their repeated consistency over the course of three separate occasions; (2) the children's apparent uncoached and generally relaxed demeanor; (3) the lack of any promises or threats made to the children; and (4) their full availability to the defendant's cross-examination at trial. Tucker v. State, 208 Ga. App. 441, 430 S.E.2d 811 (1993).

There was a sufficient showing of reliability when the victim's statements, introduced through hearsay at trial, were made originally by the victim in a spontaneous manner without apparent coaching and, although there was evidence presented that the victim had originally named other possible perpetrators, the victim's later statements consistently named the defendant. White v. State, 211 Ga. App. 694, 440 S.E.2d 68 (1994).

Trial court properly admitted child hearsay testimony after the victim's version of events as recounted to the victim's mother to sheriff's department officials, to Department of Family & Children Services representatives, in the victim's grand jury testimony, and in the victim's trial testimony was not shown by defendant to be inconsistent. Tidwell v. State, 219 Ga. App. 233, 464 S.E.2d 834 (1995).

Testimony of several witnesses regarding what the 11-year-old victim told the witnesses about an incident soon after the incident happened was admissible and the court was not required to make an explicit finding of sufficient indicia of reliability. Wells v. State, 222 Ga. App. 587, 474 S.E.2d 764 (1996).

Considering the child's age; the immediacy and spontaneity of the outcry to the child's mother; the general consistency of the child's statements to numerous adults trained to work with abused children (police, medical personnel, and a DFACS worker); the lack of time between the incident and the outcry, thereby demonstrating the absence of "coaching"; the child's fear of the defendant; and the physical manifestations of possible abuse consistent with the child's statements, the record established a sufficient showing of indicia of reliability within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 so as to support the admission of the outcry testimony. Medina v. State, 234 Ga. App. 13, 505 S.E.2d 558 (1998).

Although the child gave differing accounts as to the number of times the defendant had molested the child, under the totality of the circumstances, the child's out-of-court statements bore sufficient indicia of reliability to authorize the statement's admission in evidence. Jenkins v. State, 235 Ga. App. 53, 508 S.E.2d 710 (1998).

Taped statement of the young victim was properly found to be reliable, notwithstanding that the victim was interviewed after the victim's mother was interviewed in the victim's presence, since the interviewing officer testified that the victim was not coached and spoke voluntarily and no evidence was presented showing that the tape was unreliable or inadmissible. Scroggins v. State, 237 Ga. App. 122, 514 S.E.2d 252 (1999).

Considering the immediacy and spontaneity of the child's outcry to the father, the child's age, the limited time between the child's return home and the initial outcry, thus demonstrating the absence of coaching, and the general consistency of the child's statements to several adults, sufficient indicia of reliability was established to support the admission of the challenged statements. Herrington v. State, 241 Ga. App. 326, 527 S.E.2d 33 (1999).

Considering the atmosphere and circumstances under which a child made out-of-court statements, the spontaneity of a number of the statements, the absence of any threats, promise of benefits, or coaching, the consistency of the statements with one another, and the child's provision of certain details which could have been found corroborative, the trial court was authorized to find that sufficient indicia of reliability warranted admission of the statements in evidence. Croy v. State, 247 Ga. App. 654, 545 S.E.2d 80 (2001).

There was no abuse of discretion in the decision of the court to admit testimony concerning a child's statements about sexual abuse by the child's father where the child's mother's testimony corroborated the statements made by the child to others and the foster mother never suggested to the child that the child's father had abused the child. In re J.W., 249 Ga. App. 849, 549 S.E.2d 802 (2001).

Circumstances surrounding a six-year-old victim's out-of-court statements to the victim's mother and a nurse practitioner regarding being sexually molested contained sufficient indicia of reliability under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 to allow the mother and the nurse practitioner to testify about the statements since: (1) there was no evidence that the victim was forced to make the statements or was coached regarding what to say; (2) there was a lack of contact with anyone concerning the incidents until the victim made the initial out-cry to the victim's mother; (3) the language the victim used was appropriate for a six-year-old; (4) the statement to the victim's mother was consistent with the statement that the victim made to the nurse practitioner; (5) the victim's demeanor during both statements showed that the victim was obviously upset by the acts of molestation; and (6) there was no evidence that the victim had been exposed to any sexually explicit material. In re K.C., 258 Ga. App. 363, 574 S.E.2d 413 (2002).

Sufficient indicia of reliability existed for a trial court to have admitted a child victim's out-of-court statements regarding sexual abuse by the victim's father where, inter alia, the victim's description of the incidents were consistent every time the victim gave a statement to an adult prior to trial and the medical evidence corroborated the victim's testimony. Ivey v. State, 258 Ga. App. 719, 574 S.E.2d 908 (2002).

Trial court permitted the state to introduce the testimony of the victim under the provisions of the child hearsay statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, in a trial on a charge of child molesting because the victim was made available for cross-examination, and the trial court took sufficient steps to ensure that the victim's testimony was reliable. Howell v. State, 278 Ga. App. 634, 629 S.E.2d 398 (2006).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in concluding that a child's hearsay statements regarding abuse contained sufficient indicia of reliability to support their admission because the victim was nine years old at the time of the alleged incidents, there was no evidence that the child was forced to make the statements or coached regarding what to say, and the statements were made in a therapeutic setting without provocation or intervention from the state; although some of the statements were inconsistent with statements given to others regarding the defendant's participation in the abuse, the statements were also consistent with statements given to others. Finally, the victim was available in court, but defense counsel elected not to call the victim. Pickle v. State, 280 Ga. App. 821, 635 S.E.2d 197 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 110, 111 (Ga. 2007).

In the sexual abuse case, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in finding, without a hearing, the child victim's videotape hearsay to be reliable under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16; the victim, age 12 at the time, did not refuse to speak with the interviewing detective, the victim was not coached, led, pressured, threatened, or induced, and the victim testified at trial and was subject to cross-examination. Newton v. State, 281 Ga. App. 549, 636 S.E.2d 728 (2006), overruled on other grounds, McCart v. State, 289 Ga. App. 830, 658 S.E.2d 465 (2008).

During a defendant's trial for criminal charges arising out of sexual offenses committed against the defendant's 11-year-old child, the Georgia Child Hearsay Statute,

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, permitted the admission of the testimony of a caseworker that a sibling of the child saw the rapist having sex with the child and reported it several times to the defendant and the testimony of a neighbor to whom the victim said that the defendant had not tried to stop the rapist from molesting the victim; no hearing or express judicial findings of reliability were required, the defendant did not object at trial to the admission of the statements, and the defendant failed to explain on appeal how the record lacked evidence of reliability. Johnson v. State, 283 Ga. App. 99, 640 S.E.2d 644 (2006).

In defendant's trial for child molestation, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion by admitting the victim's statements made to the victim's mother, brother, a child forensic investigator, and the investigating officer as the statements were spontaneous when made and were remarkably consistent and corroborated at trial by the testimony of the victim's siblings, the victim's videotaped interview, and defendant's confession. Simmons v. State, 291 Ga. App. 642, 662 S.E.2d 660 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's convictions for child molestation and related crimes arising from actions the defendant took toward three children and those that the defendant forced the children to engage in amongst each other by gunpoint while the defendant was a babysitter for the children, the trial court did not err by allowing one of the victim's best friend to testify that the victim told the witness that the defendant had a gun and had made the victim do stuff as the testimony was properly admitted under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. The victim's disclosure to the friend occurred in the relaxed setting of a private conversation between two friends, there was no evidence of any threats, promise of benefits, coaching, drugs, or alcohol that would have influenced the victim's disclosure, and there was no evidence that the victim had a tendency to exaggerate or falsify information or otherwise lacked general credibility. Sullivan v. State, 295 Ga. App. 145, 671 S.E.2d 180 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0624, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 215 (Ga. 2009).

In a conviction for aggravated child molestation and child molestation for acts committed upon defendant's four-year-old daughter, the victim's statements had sufficient indicia of reliability because the victim made several spontaneous disclosures regarding the acts committed upon the victim by defendant using age-appropriate language, which did not appear to have been the result of adult coaching, and the videotaped statements were consistent with statements made to the victim's mother and therapist, which were made in a neutral location and without any threats or promises. Romani v. State, No. A10A0856, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 412 (Apr. 23, 2010).

Testimony of officer admitted. — There was sufficient evidence of reliability of a child's statement to a police officer based on the officer's testimony that the child left the child's residence and reported the molestation immediately after the molestation occurred, that the officer spoke with the child the same evening, that the officer saw no evidence that the child was coached, and the officer did not lead the child in making a statement. Crider v. State, 246 Ga. App. 765, 542 S.E.2d 13 (2000).

No error in failing to determine reliability. — Because every event described by the detective and the investigator was confirmed by the victim in much greater detail, there was no error in failing to determine the reliability of the victim's statements. Nelson v. State, 255 Ga. App. 315, 565 S.E.2d 551 (2002).

Credibility of witness within jury's purview. — Despite defendant's argument that expert testimony showed it as likely that statements of defendant's grandson to the lead detective regarding defendant's sexual molestation of the grandson were coached, those were deemed admissible pursuant to the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, in that they were statements by a child available to testify in the proceedings that described abuse of a child under 14 which provided sufficient indicia of reliability; determinations as to the credibility of a witness were a matter solely within the jury's purview and would not be disturbed on appeal. Wright v. State, 259 Ga. App. 74, 576 S.E.2d 64 (2003).

Hearsay testimony of an investigator was properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 as the trial court listened to the audiotape of an interview with a child and concluded there had been no excessive coaching or planting of information and that there was sufficient indicia of reliability; moreover, the child was available for cross-examination by defense counsel concerning the child's claimed memory lapses and confusion, but counsel chose not to cross-examine the child. Revells v. State, 283 Ga. App. 59, 640 S.E.2d 587 (2006).

Procedure employed by court satisfactory. — When the trial court ultimately found a child victim's statements reliable and admitted the statements, and obviously would have done the same following a separate hearing, any conceivable error arising from the procedure employed by the trial court would have been of the defendants' own making since the defendant's persuaded the trial court to review the child's video-recorded statements and assured the court at the time that the procedure was satisfactory. Newman v. State, 286 Ga. App. 353, 649 S.E.2d 349 (2007).

Statements of four-year-old properly admitted. — Trial court did not err in exercising the trial court's broad discretion to admit a four-year-old child's out-of-court statements under the child hearsay statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, with regard to defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation and two counts of child molestation. Given the totality of the circumstances, the trial court was authorized to find sufficient indicia of reliability to admit the child's hearsay statements based on: (1) the child's tender years; (2) a therapist testifying that there was no indication that the child had been coached; and (3) an interview report that purportedly raised questions about coaching and the reliability of the statements was never introduced into evidence at trial. Brumbelow v. State, 289 Ga. App. 520, 657 S.E.2d 603 (2008).

Interval of time between offenses and interview. — Passage of an interval of time between the commission of the offenses and the making of the videotape does not preclude any possibility of spontaneity; the relevance of such chronological intervals must be considered along with other factors, but there is no authority for a bright line rule precluding admission of an interview. Knight v. State, 210 Ga. App. 228, 435 S.E.2d 682 (1993).

Statement made days, weeks, or months after incident. — Fact that the statement is made days, weeks, or even several months after the alleged incident, in and of itself, does not make the statement unreliable. Gregg v. State, 201 Ga. App. 238, 411 S.E.2d 65, cert. denied, 201 Ga. App. 903, 411 S.E.2d 65 (1991).

Admission of similar transactions. — Nothing in O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 restricts the statement to use solely in connection with the prior incident, and in child molestation cases, this court has consistently upheld the admission of similar transactions involving incidents for which the defendant was not on trial. Guest v. State, 216 Ga. App. 457, 454 S.E.2d 622 (1995).

Fathers of the two similar transaction victims were allowed to give hearsay testimony about the victims' statements that defendant had molested the victims, because this sort of hearsay testimony, describing a child's statement about sexual abuse, is admissible similar transaction evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Deal v. State, 241 Ga. App. 879, 528 S.E.2d 289 (2000).

Statements admissible as substantive evidence. — In a criminal prosecution for sexual and non-sexual acts committed against a child, the jury was allowed to consider the child's out-of-court statements as substantive evidence under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, and conflicts between the child's testimony at trial and out-of-court statements were for the jury to resolve. Manders v. State, 281 Ga. App. 786, 637 S.E.2d 460 (2006).

Subsequent report of molestation by another not admissible. — Subsequent report by the victim of molestation by another was neither prior to nor necessarily inconsistent with the victim's earlier report that the defendant was the victim's only molester, and was not admissible as impeaching evidence. Thompson v. State, 187 Ga. App. 152, 369 S.E.2d 523 (1988).

Testimony of child sodomy victim's accusation allowed. — Trial court did not err in allowing testimony of the child's accusation that defendant committed the acts which constitute the crime of aggravated child molestation since the victim told the victim's grandmother that defendant orally sodomized the victim and that defendant forced the victim to perform acts of oral sodomy and the victim's mother's testimony that she had never discussed oral sodomy with the three-year-old victim and that she had never known the child to make up stories. Williams v. State, 204 Ga. App. 878, 420 S.E.2d 781 (1992).

Child sodomy victim's statements qualified as "outcry" arguably so near to the event and so free of afterthought and forethought, connivance, or "reflective thought," as to be part of the res gestae, and so as to be evidence of the crime itself, and not merely a later statement by the child about the crime, as it might have been under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, where these outcries occurred while the child was asleep the night the child returned home after the child's mother picked the child up at the child's grandfather's house where the crime allegedly occurred. Godfrey v. State, 187 Ga. App. 319, 370 S.E.2d 183 (1988).

Statement as part of res gestae of child molestation charge. — Child's statement to an investigative agent regarding a "game" in which the defendant, the child victim, and others removed articles of their clothing were admissible as describing part of the res gestae of the crime of child molestation. Berry v. State, 235 Ga. App. 35, 508 S.E.2d 435 (1998).

Testimony by the mother of a child-molestation victim concerning allegations made by her child to her against defendant was properly admitted since the court considered atmosphere, circumstances, spontaneity, and demeanor in judging the reliability of the statement. Ortiz v. State, 188 Ga. App. 532, 374 S.E.2d 92, cert. denied, 188 Ga. App. 912, 374 S.E.2d 92 (1988).

Testimony of victim's mother concerning statements made to her by victim was admissible. Dupree v. State, 206 Ga. App. 4, 424 S.E.2d 316 (1992).

Mother's testimony following victim's recanting of original statement. — Although the victim was not under the age of 14 at the time the statements were made, this did not affect the admissibility of the testimony of the victim's mother and a detective because the victim's veracity was placed in issue after the victim signed an affidavit recanting the victim's original statement, and the victim was present at trial and was thoroughly cross-examined about the truthfulness of the victim's original statement. Frady v. State, 245 Ga. App. 832, 538 S.E.2d 893 (2000).

Statement made through interpreter admissible. — Statements made through an interpreter by an 11-year-old victim of child molestation to witnesses who asked the victim questions were admissible through testimony of the witnesses even though the interpreter did not testify at the trial. Davis v. State, 214 Ga. App. 360, 448 S.E.2d 26 (1994).

Witness statements admissible despite child's unresponsiveness. — Trial court did not err in refusing to strike the testimony of adult witnesses who related a child molestation victim's statements to the witnesses in spite of the victim's unresponsiveness as a witness when called by the court. Smith v. State, 228 Ga. App. 144, 491 S.E.2d 194 (1997).

Child who told adults that defendant placed the defendant's finger inside her vagina was not unavailable within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 because she was unresponsive when she was asked questions in court, and the trial court's decision allowing adults to testify about out-of-court statements the child made to the adults was correct. Bell v. State, 263 Ga. App. 894, 589 S.E.2d 653 (2003).

Physical appearance of victim at trial all that is required. — Availability requirement of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 is met even if the victim takes the stand and is incapable of reiterating the accusations against the defendant or is uncommunicative or unresponsive; the child need only physically appear at trial. Jenkins v. State, 235 Ga. App. 53, 508 S.E.2d 710 (1998).

Victim/witness director allowed to testify regarding conversation with victim. — In an incest and child molestation trial, there was no error in the trial court's decision allowing the victim/witness director to testify regarding the contents of a conversation the director had with the victim. Chambers v. State, 205 Ga. App. 78, 421 S.E.2d 326 (1992).

Witnesses' testimony regarding statements of victim's mother admissible. — Witnesses' testimony that older victim said when she told her mother what defendant was doing, the mother said to pray and not tell anyone, was not beyond permissible hearsay under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 because it was not offered to show the truth of matters asserted therein. Mother's response to her daughter was not an assertion but a request, and the testimony concerning her response was presented not to prove prayer and silence on the subject of defendant's conduct were desirable, but simply to show the mother's request for prayer and silence was made. Gibby v. State, 213 Ga. App. 20, 443 S.E.2d 852 (1994).

Mother's and other professional witnesses' statements admissible. — Trial court properly allowed hearsay testimony about statements made by the victim to the victim's mother, the school counselor, and the nurse practitioner who examined the victim pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 in defendant's child molestation trial; defendant's arguments that there was no evidence that the statements were spontaneous and that there were two inconsistencies in the victim's statements, giving differing answers when asked how many times defendant had molested the victim and describing the incidents in a different order in two different statements, were not sufficient to show that the trial court abused the court's discretion in admitting the statements. Flowers v. State, 255 Ga. App. 660, 566 S.E.2d 339 (2002).

Statements of victim's mother held inadmissible. — In a child custody proceeding, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 did not apply to allow mother to present hearsay testimony regarding harassment of her children by their stepbrother. Martin v. True, 232 Ga. App. 435, 502 S.E.2d 285 (1998).

Evidence inadmissible where child unavailable to testify. — Child was not available within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16; therefore, the child's mother's testimony regarding the child's out-of-court statements was inadmissible since the trial court excused the child without the child ever being sworn and examined as a witness because the child was distraught. Hines v. State, 248 Ga. App. 752, 548 S.E.2d 642 (2001).

Statements as to the circumstances in which appellant chased appellant's son down the hall while carrying a maul constitutes statements regarding any act of physical abuse within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Brewton v. State, 216 Ga. App. 346, 454 S.E.2d 558 (1995), rev'd on other grounds, 266 Ga. 160, 465 S.E.2d 668 (1996).

Child molestation victim's statements included in expert witness testimony are admissible. — Trial court did not err in allowing into evidence the testimony of the prosecution's expert witness as to statements made to the witness by the child molestation victim, which statements were incriminating of defendant, since the record shows that the victim was not only available to testify in the proceedings, but was called as the prosecution's first witness and that, prior to the admission of the expert witness's testimony, the trial court determined that the circumstances surrounding the victim's statements provided sufficient indicia of reliability. Knopp v. State, 190 Ga. App. 266, 378 S.E.2d 703 (1989).

Statements admissible when victim available. — In a prosecution for child molestation, testimony by two witnesses regarding statements made by one of the victims about seeing the defendants engaged in sex was admissible since the victim, although not called by the state, was available to be called as a witness. Grimsley v. State, 233 Ga. App. 781, 505 S.E.2d 522 (1998).

Statements made to government agency investigator admissible. — Trial court did not err in admitting out-of-court statements made by a five-year-old victim to her aunt and a Department of Family Services investigator. McCormick v. State, 228 Ga. App. 467, 491 S.E.2d 903 (1997).

In a proceeding to terminate the parental rights of a father who had been convicted of molesting his children, the trial court did not err in allowing a child protective services investigator, women's shelter manager, and a therapist to testify as to statements made by the children. In re S.M.L., 228 Ga. App. 81, 491 S.E.2d 186 (1997).

Defendant's claim of error in the admission of an investigator's testimony regarding a child victim's statements to a forensic interviewer was rejected as the investigator was behind a two-way mirror when the victim made the statements and the victim knew that the investigator was listening. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 884, 635 S.E.2d 240 (2006).

In an action wherein two parents were found to have deprived an adopted child due to one parent's sexual abuse of the child and the other parent's failure to protect the child from such abuse, the juvenile court did not abuse the court's discretion by allowing the testimony of a forensic interviewer regarding statements made by the child as the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, permitted such testimony, despite the parents' challenges to the competency of the child. In the Interest of B.H., 295 Ga. App. 297, 671 S.E.2d 303 (2008).

Question regarding victim's credibility properly admitted. — Trial court properly admitted testimony from a psychologist who stated that the psychologist treated an 11-year-old girl after the girl told several people that her stepfather molested her and believed that the girl had not made up her story because the testimony was offered to rehabilitate the girl's credibility after the stepfather attacked the girl's credibility. Horne v. State, 262 Ga. App. 604, 586 S.E.2d 13 (2003).

With regard to a defendant's convictions on four counts of aggravated child molestation and three counts of child molestation, the trial court did not err by failing to hold a hearing outside of the jury's presence with regard to the testimony of a social worker who made an audiotape of the victim's statement, and by allowing the social worker to testify as to the general credibility assessment of the victim because the defendant failed to object at trial to the social worker's testimony. By waiting to raise the issue on appeal, the defendant waited too late and such failure amounted to a waiver of any objection that might have been raised. Hargrove v. State, 289 Ga. App. 363, 657 S.E.2d 282 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 500 (Ga. 2008).

Spontaneous statement admissible. — When the victim, a 14-year-old, in a spontaneous, unprompted, crying event told the residential manager of the mobile home park in which the victim lived that the victim's father was abusing the victim and later that same day the victim made substantially the same statements to a government social worker, the statements bore sufficient indicia of reliability. Smith v. State, 207 Ga. App. 55, 427 S.E.2d 48 (1993).

Videotape of interview between child victim and investigating officer. — When the circumstances surrounding the videotape of an interview between a child victim and an investigating officer provided sufficient indicia of reliability of the statements therein, any conflicts between the videotaped statement and the testimony of the child at trial would not necessarily render the former inadmissible, but would rather present a question of credibility of the witness to be resolved by the trier of fact. Ware v. State, 191 Ga. App. 896, 383 S.E.2d 368 (1989).

Taped interview with a child is admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 if it describes acts of sexual contact or physical abuse, if the child is available to testify in court, and if the circumstances of the statement are shown to have sufficient indicia of reliability. Vick v. State, 194 Ga. App. 616, 391 S.E.2d 455 (1990); Heidler v. State, 273 Ga. 54, 537 S.E.2d 44 (2000), cert. denied, 532 U.S. 1029, 121 S. Ct. 1979, 149 L. Ed. 2d 771 (2001).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 does not require a hearing for the determination that reliability of the videotaped interviews of a four-year-old child was indicated by the neutrality of the interviewer and place of interview, and the spontaneity of the interviews conducted shortly after the alleged molestation. King v. State, 194 Ga. App. 662, 391 S.E.2d 660, cert. denied, 194 Ga. App. 912, 391 S.E.2d 660 (1990).

When two videotapes of interviews with a child were showed to a jury, the child was called as the court's witness and testified similarly, and the child was examined by all parties, there was no abuse of the court's discretion in finding the child qualified to testify, nor in admitting the videotapes. Frazier v. State, 195 Ga. App. 109, 393 S.E.2d 262 (1990) (trial held prior to April 19, 1989); Dupree v. State, 206 Ga. App. 4, 424 S.E.2d 316 (1992); Lindo v. State, 218 Ga. App. 756, 463 S.E.2d 148 (1995).

Requirement of a neutral interviewer and place of interview should be recognized as relating to the atmosphere, circumstances, and manner in which the interview was conducted. Interviews by police officers of young victims of sexual abuse are not barred; such cases merely require that the officer conduct the interview in a manner conducive to eliciting the truth. Knight v. State, 210 Ga. App. 228, 435 S.E.2d 682 (1993).

In a case where defendant was tried for first degree cruelty to children for allegedly burning the three-year-old victim's back with a cigarette, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting the victim's videotaped interview; although several factors weighed against admitting the videotaped interview, such as the victim's tender age, the length of time between the event and the videotaped interview, and the fact that police officers conducted the interview, these factors did not require that the videotaped interview be excluded as a matter of law, and because the victim testified at trial, defendant had the opportunity to cross-examine the victim regarding the victim's memory of the interview and the circumstances surrounding the interview. Conley v. State, 257 Ga. App. 563, 571 S.E.2d 554 (2002).

In defendant's conviction for child molestation, trial court properly denied defendant's motion for directed verdict of acquittal as sufficient evidence existed based on testimony of the child victim's parent, who testified as to discovery of defendant on top of the victim; further evidence in support of defendant's conviction included the child's videotaped police interviews describing what happened. Lopez v. State, 291 Ga. App. 210, 661 S.E.2d 618 (2008).

Whether videotape bolstered testimony irrelevant. — After a defendant molested a nine-year-old child, a videotape of the child's interview by a detective was properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 as a statement made by a child under the age of 14 years describing an act of sexual contact. Whether the videotape also bolstered the child's trial testimony was immaterial. Whitaker v. State, 293 Ga. App. 427, 667 S.E.2d 202 (2008).

Trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in admitting a videotaped forensic interview of a child molestation victim because the victim testified at trial and was subject to cross-examination about the circumstances surrounding the videotaped interview and statements the victim made during the interview, and it was the jury's responsibility, as the trier of fact, to resolve any inconsistencies in the victim's statements and judge the victim's credibility; there was no evidence to support the defendant's claim that the victim recanted the allegations the victim made or that the victim falsely accused the defendant of molesting the victim's sister; the videotape showed that the victim was sufficiently credible for the interview to be shown to the jury, and the interview in question took place at a neutral location with only the interviewer present. Lynn v. State, 300 Ga. App. 170, 684 S.E.2d 325 (2009).

Victim's testimony not bolstered by videotape. — Playing of the videotape of the interview with the victim before the jury did not constitute an impermissible bolstering of the victim's testimony. Knight v. State, 210 Ga. App. 228, 435 S.E.2d 682 (1993).

Videotape of interview between child victim and psychotherapist. — Admission of a videotaped interview with a child victim of defendant's sexual offenses was proper under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, although defendant was not indicted for offenses requiring proof of sexual contact or physical abuse as the statute applied to descriptions of physical abuse or sexual contact, which could have been merely verbal. Carolina v. State, 276 Ga. App. 298, 623 S.E.2d 151 (2005).

Audio tape of victim's testimony recorded by social worker was admissible even though the tape was stopped and restarted several times during the interview; the victim was available to testify and testimony of the social worker established sufficient indicia of reliability. Martin v. State, 205 Ga. App. 591, 422 S.E.2d 876, cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 900, 422 S.E.2d 876 (1992).

In child molestation case, videotape of victim was properly admitted after the trial court conducted a lengthy hearing outside the presence of the jury to determine the tape's reliability. Court considered the atmosphere and circumstances of the interview, the spontaneity of the victim's responses, and the demeanor of the victim during the interview. Penaranda v. State, 203 Ga. App. 740, 417 S.E.2d 683, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 907, 417 S.E.2d 683 (1992); Allen v. State, 263 Ga. 60, 428 S.E.2d 73 (1993).

Trial court did not err in admitting a videotaped statement of a defendant's daughter describing incidents of molestation committed by defendant when she was four years old because the daughter was available for cross-examination at trial, although she was not very responsive to the state's questions on direct examination. Conn v. State, 300 Ga. App. 193, 685 S.E.2d 745 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0226, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 131 (Ga. 2010).

Showing of necessity to support the admission of a videotape of a police interview of the victim under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 was satisfied by the fact that the victim was a witness at the trial whom the defendant was permitted to cross-examine. Knight v. State, 210 Ga. App. 228, 435 S.E.2d 682 (1993).

When one of two victims was ruled incompetent to testify, but a pediatrician's testimony established that both girls had been sexually molested, and the other child testified that the defendant molested her and that she saw him molest her sister, the defendant's conviction was not based on inadmissible hearsay. Mantooth v. State, 197 Ga. App. 797, 399 S.E.2d 505 (1990), overruled on other grounds, Wilson v. State, 277 Ga. 195, 586 S.E.2d 669 (2003).

Cumulative testimony concerning victim's statements held harmless error. — After a witness was allowed to testify as to statements which were not made directly to the witness but which the witness observed and heard by watching a monitor during the taping, the testimony was not admissible. However, the testimony was merely cumulative of other testimony presented at trial, and the error consequently presented no ground for reversal. Kelly v. State, 197 Ga. App. 811, 399 S.E.2d 568 (1990).

Trial court erroneously admitted under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, the foster mother's statement that the foster mother overheard the children making remarks to one another that allegedly implicated the defendant in sexually abusing the children as the foster mother could not testify under § 24-3-16 since the statement was not made to the foster mother; the evidence was cumulative of other evidence of abuse, however, so the error was harmless. Clemmons v. State, 282 Ga. App. 261, 638 S.E.2d 409 (2006).

More than one statement admissible. — Trial court did not err in allowing the introduction of the victim's prior consistent statements before the victim testified. Wooten v. State, 244 Ga. App. 101, 533 S.E.2d 441 (2000).

Erroneous admission of the child's statements is only reversible if it appears likely that the hearsay contributed to the guilty verdict. Estep v. State, 238 Ga. App. 170, 518 S.E.2d 176 (1999).

Judge was not required to conduct a hearing to determine whether there existed any indicia of reliability surrounding statements made by a child to a psychologist in a parental rights termination proceeding. In re D.R.C., 198 Ga. App. 348, 401 S.E.2d 754 (1991).

Trial court did not need to make an express finding that the circumstances of the statement provided sufficient indicia of reliability before admitting the statement as this statutory requirement was met if, after both parties rested, the record contained evidence which would have supported such a finding; the admission of a child victim's out-of-court statements regarding alleged sexual molestation was proper since the statements were initially spontaneous and remained consistent, and since the victim was cross-examined by defense counsel at trial. Frazier v. State, 278 Ga. App. 685, 629 S.E.2d 568 (2006), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

A trial court is not required to conduct a Gregg hearing to determine the statutory requirement of "indicia of reliability" before receiving child hearsay into evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. A defendant failed to show that any of a child victim's out-of-court statements would have been excluded from trial had trial counsel filed a motion under Gregg, and thus could not prevail on an ineffective assistance claim. Purvis v. State, 301 Ga. App. 648, 689 S.E.2d 53 (2009).

Necessary finding of admissibility implicit in judge's ruling. — Mother's testimony as to what the victim told her was properly admitted in evidence, even though the judge did not make a specific finding of "sufficient indicia of reliability." Implicit in any ruling by a judge is that the judge has made the necessary finding of admissibility before admitting such evidence. Windom v. State, 187 Ga. App. 18, 369 S.E.2d 311 (1988).

It is implicit in the admission of statements pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 that the trial court made the necessary finding. Calloway v. State, 202 Ga. App. 816, 415 S.E.2d 533 (1992); Green v. State, 212 Ga. App. 250, 441 S.E.2d 689 (1994); Roberson v. State, 214 Ga. App. 288, 447 S.E.2d 640 (1994).

Proffer required to appeal exclusion of testimony. — Defendant's failure to make a proffer at trial showing that testimony should have been admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 precluded consideration on appeal of the issue of the exclusion of such testimony. Jones v. State, 232 Ga. App. 505, 502 S.E.2d 345 (1998).

Effective assistance of counsel. — Alleged failure of counsel to demand a reliability ruling for those witnesses who were called to testify about hearsay statements made by the victim did not constitute ineffective assistance since counsel did demand a reliability ruling regarding the pediatrician's repetition of the victim's statement, counsel filed a motion to invoke the procedures of Sosebee v. State, 257 Ga. 298, 357 S.E.2d 562 (1987), and when the motion was heard the state indicated that the victim would testify. Also, there was a sufficient showing of indicia of reliability, within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, as to all out-of-court statements made by the victim, which were testified to by witnesses in the presence of the jury. Williamson v. State, 207 Ga. App. 565, 428 S.E.2d 628 (1993).

Defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel at a trial for aggravated child molestation because it would have been futile to object to the 10-year old victim's videotaped statement, which was admissible under the statute's exception for a child's statement of sexual abuse, since there were sufficient indicia of reliability and the child was available to testify at trial. Campos v. State, 263 Ga. App. 119, 587 S.E.2d 264 (2003).

Defendant did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel for counsel's failure to object to a psychologist's testimony that it was uncommon for a child to be able to specify incident dates if there was a recurrence of events over a prolonged period; the psychologist did not improperly bolster the victim's testimony and the psychologist's testimony was not a comment on an ultimate issue of fact; the trial court was authorized to find that the conclusion drawn by the expert was beyond the ken of the jurors. Maddox v. State, 275 Ga. App. 869, 622 S.E.2d 80 (2005).

Decision as to whether to call an expert witness concerning interviewing techniques of children in a child molestation case is one of trial strategy and in a case where trial counsel testified at the second hearing on the motion for new trial that trial counsel did not consult an expert on interviewing techniques because after reviewing the videotape, trial counsel determined that the factors outlined in case law had been met, trial counsel had filed three pretrial motions seeking to exclude or restrict child hearsay statements, and required the state to lay a proper foundation for the use of child hearsay, trial counsel's performance was not deficient in that regard. Nichols v. State, 288 Ga. App. 118, 653 S.E.2d 300 (2007).

Defendant failed to establish ineffective assistance of counsel with regard to defendant's trial and conviction for child molestation based on trial counsel's failure to object and conceding to the issue of reliability for the admission of the child victim's hearsay testimony as: (1) defendant failed to point to any evidence indicating that the victim's statements were unreliable since the statements were videotaped at a neutral location in a room alone with a professional forensic interviewer; (2) the forensic interviewer testified that the victim was very bright and articulate and did not appear to be coached; (3) the victim's videotaped statements were spontaneous, voluntary, and not coerced; (4) the victim's videotaped statements were consistent with other out-of-court statements; and (5) significantly, the victim's statements were consistent with defendant's statements to police. Williams v. State, 290 Ga. App. 841, 660 S.E.2d 740 (2008).

Although defendant's trial counsel's performance fell below the objective standard of reasonableness under the first prong of the Strickland ineffective assistance of counsel test, the error however was harmless because although defendant's trial counsel performed deficiently in failing to raise a hearsay objection to admission of the victim's statements contained in the videotaped interview, defendant did not show that trial counsel's error prejudiced the defense since statements made by the victim during the videotaped interview were merely cumulative of testimony the victim offered at trial and for which the victim was cross-examined by trial counsel. Forde v. State, 289 Ga. App. 805, 658 S.E.2d 410 (2008).

Speculation does not support ineffective assistance of counsel claim. — Defendant's ineffective assistance of counsel claim was rejected as the defendant's claim that trial counsel was not knowledgeable about the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, and failed to highlight the unreliability of the child victim's statement to a nurse was based on mere speculation that a more thorough cross-examination would have altered the outcome at trial. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 884, 635 S.E.2d 240 (2006).

Defendant's right to notice of statements before trial. — There was no requirement that the state provide defendant with pretrial notice of the state's intention to introduce child hearsay statements and, when defendant was notified in advance that there was nothing exculpatory in videotaped interviews with children and defendant was allowed to view tapes during the trial, defendant's due process rights were not violated by not being permitted to view the tapes prior to trial. Thornton v. State, 264 Ga. 563, 449 S.E.2d 98 (1994).

Evidence sufficed for aggravated child molestation conviction. — Evidence and testimony from several adults that the victim reported defendant's sexual assault in the manner charged in the indictment was sufficient to convict for aggravated child molestation, although the victim testified that the criminal act occurred while the victim was wearing jeans. McGuire v. State, 209 Ga. App. 813, 434 S.E.2d 802 (1993).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of child molestation, even if much of the evidence was hearsay repetition of the child's out-of-court statements, as defendant failed to argue that the evidence did not satisfy the reliability criteria set forth in O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Brown v. State, 267 Ga. App. 826, 600 S.E.2d 774 (2004).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation, child molestation, and false imprisonment with regard to allegations that the defendant forced a romantic friend's minor child to perform oral sex on the defendant several times over a three year period, based on the testimony of the victim (which alone was sufficient), the videotaped forensic interview of the victim, the testimony of the police investigator and the victim's mother concerning what the victim told them, as well as the testimony of the victim's siblings, who were eyewitnesses to one incident. Further, the testimony of the victim that the defendant locked the victim in the house and would not let the victim leave supported the conviction on the false imprisonment charge, and the videotaped forensic interview and the testimony of the police investigator and the victim's mother concerning what the victim told them were admissible as substantive evidence under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Metts v. State, 297 Ga. App. 330, 677 S.E.2d 377 (2009).

Statement regarding defendant masturbating in child's presence admissible. — Child's statement to an investigative agent regarding the defendant paying the child to remove the child's clothing while the defendant masturbated in the child's presence was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, even absent contact with the child, since defendant's masturbation was an action performed "with or on another in the presence of the child." Berry v. State, 235 Ga. App. 35, 508 S.E.2d 435 (1998).

Failing to object to the testimony of the state's witnesses regarding what the victim told the witnesses was not a deficiency by counsel because these statements would have been admissible under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, since the victim, age ten, was a witness at trial whom the defendant cross-examined. Silcox v. State, 241 Ga. App. 845, 528 S.E.2d 271 (2000).

Parents' testimony admissible. — When the record shows the victims testified at trial and were subject to examination and cross-examination, the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, by admitting the parents' testimony about things the victims said to the parent's about defendant. Kight v. State, 242 Ga. App. 13, 528 S.E.2d 542 (2000).

Statement made to therapist admissible. — Court properly admitted hearsay testimony by a child's therapist that the defendant "put his thing" in the child's mouth where the statement was made in a child-friendly, one-on-one therapy session, not an investigative interview, and the statement was made in response to a non-leading question. Guzman v. State, 273 Ga. App. 819, 616 S.E.2d 142 (2005).

Statement during medical examination admissible. — Nurse's testimony as to a 13-year-old victim's statements that defendant forced intercourse upon the victim made during the medical examination was properly admissible under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Bell v. State, 294 Ga. App. 779, 670 S.E.2d 476 (2008).

Statements admissible. — In a child molestation case, the trial court properly allowed a deputy to read the statements of three of the teenagers involved into evidence; while all of the teenagers and their parents were present when the teenagers wrote out their statements for the deputy, the record reflected no evidence of undue pressure or influence, and the deputy was not directly involved in later videotaped interviews. Krirat v. State, 286 Ga. App. 650, 649 S.E.2d 786 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 745 (Ga. 2007).

After a trial court properly admitted sufficiently reliable videotaped statements made by three siblings who were the victims of a defendant's cruelty, there was no error in also admitting testimony from nurses from the hospital where the children were taken regarding statements the children made to the nurses as the matters testified to by the nurses were the same matters detailed in the videotaped statements. Williams v. State, 293 Ga. App. 617, 668 S.E.2d 21 (2008).

Under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16, the trial court properly allowed a school counselor to testify about the victim's out-of-court statements to the counselor. The victim was available to testify and did in fact testify and was thoroughly cross-examined as was the counselor; furthermore, because the statements were admissible, counsel was not ineffective for failing to object to the statements. Hilliard v. State, 298 Ga. App. 473, 680 S.E.2d 541 (2009).

Victim's testimony alone was sufficient to prove defendant guilty of child molestation (O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)) and aggravated child molestation (O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b)), pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. The testimony of the victim's cousin, two school friends, and the interviewing detective, was admissible as substantive evidence under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Vaughn v. State, 301 Ga. App. 391, 687 S.E.2d 651 (2009).

Plain error doctrine inapplicable. — Plain error doctrine had been limited to capital cases and to criminal cases in which the trial judge allegedly intimated an opinion of the defendant's guilt in violation of O.C.G.A. § 17-8-57 and had no application to a defendant's claims that a child molestation victim's hearsay statements served to bolster the victim's credibility and lacked sufficient indicia of reliability. Brown v. State, 280 Ga. App. 884, 635 S.E.2d 240 (2006).

Harmless error. — If the trial court erroneously allowed under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16 the testimony of the psychologist in the child molestation case, any error was harmless; although the defendant argued that the testimony was the only evidence of the defendant's mental state, there was ample evidence that the defendant had the propensity to molest children, including the victim's detailed statements, the corroborating medical examination, and the testimony of the children's parent that the defendant had molested the children's parent when the children's parent was very young. Clemmons v. State, 282 Ga. App. 261, 638 S.E.2d 409 (2006).

With regard to a defendant's convictions for child molestation and related crimes arising from actions the defendant took toward three children and those that the defendant forced the children to engage in by gunpoint while the defendant was a babysitter for the children, although the testimony of the mother of one of the victims that the victim was forced to have sex with the defendant was double hearsay and inadmissible, the error was not reversible since other legally admissible evidence of the same fact was introduced, therefore, the error was harmless. Sullivan v. State, 295 Ga. App. 145, 671 S.E.2d 180 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0624, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 215 (Ga. 2009).

24-3-17. Admissibility of certified copies of records of Department of Public Safety or Department of Driver Services or comparable agencies in other states; admissibility of computer transmitted records.

(a) A certified copy of any record of the Department of Public Safety or the Department of Driver Services or comparable agency in any other state is admissible in any judicial proceedings or administrative hearing in the same manner as the original of the record.

(b) Any court may receive and use as evidence in any case information otherwise admissible from the records of the Department of Public Safety or the Department of Driver Services obtained from any terminal lawfully connected to the Georgia Crime Information Center without the need for additional certification of those records.

(c) Any court may receive and use as evidence for the purpose of imposing a sentence in any criminal case information otherwise admissible from the records of the Department of Driver Services obtained from a request made in accordance with a contract with the Georgia Technology Authority for immediate on-line electronic furnishing of information. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Records obtained from Georgia Crime Information Center. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-17 provides for self-authentication where the document sought to be admitted was obtained from a computer terminal lawfully connected to the Georgia Crime Information Center. Thomas v. State, 196 Ga. App. 88, 395 S.E.2d 615 (1990).

There was an inadequate foundation for the introduction of an uncertified driver's record since the prosecutor merely represented in argument that the record was from a computer connected to the Georgia Crime Information Center, but no witness testified that it was so obtained. Waters v. State, 210 Ga. App. 305, 436 S.E.2d 44 (1993); Tipton v. State, 213 Ga. App. 764, 445 S.E.2d 860 (1994).

An uncertified copy of defendant's driving record was properly introduced in evidence since the state adduced a sworn witness to identify the printout as a report from the Georgia Crime Information Center. Jackson v. State, 228 Ga. App. 877, 492 S.E.2d 897 (1997).

In a prosecution for possession of vehicles with an altered vehicle identification number (VIN), the trial court properly permitted the introduction into evidence of four computer printouts that listed the make, model, VIN, and owner of four of the cars that allegedly had altered VINs where the printouts came from the Georgia Crime Information Center (GCIC) computer and the state laid a proper foundation when a certified GCIC operator testified that the computer printouts were obtained from a GCIC terminal. Brennan v. State, 247 Ga. App. 515, 544 S.E.2d 210 (2001).

In a case where defendant, who had been convicted of driving with a suspended license, claimed that the state had not laid a proper legal foundation for the admission of the defendant's driving record, there was no error in the driving record's admission as there was at least circumstantial evidence that the driving record was connected to the Georgia crime information computer. Worthy v. State, 252 Ga. App. 852, 557 S.E.2d 448 (2001).

Defendant's challenge to the admission of a Georgia Crime Information Center (GCIC) report was rejected as the state complied with the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-17 and the caselaw; the evidence was sufficient to show identity for purposes of the admission of the GCIC report as the GCIC record bore defendant's name, and defendant did not deny that it was defendant's. Evans v. State, 267 Ga. App. 706, 600 S.E.2d 671 (2004).

Record from Georgia Department of Public Safety. — Driving with a suspended license conviction was affirmed after the state proved that defendant received notice of defendant's license suspension by introducing defendant's driving record; an officer testified that the officer was certified to run driving histories and that the officer obtained a printout of defendant's driving history from an approved computer terminal at the Georgia Department of Public Safety. Fannin v. State, 267 Ga. App. 413, 599 S.E.2d 355 (2004).

National Crime Information Center printout of defendant's criminal record was competent, admissible evidence that defendant had three prior shoplifting convictions, one in Georgia and two in Arizona. State v. Sterling, 244 Ga. App. 328, 535 S.E.2d 329 (2000).

Printout establishing date of license suspension properly admitted. — When the defendant was charged with driving with a suspended license, a certified copy of the defendant's notice of suspension prepared in connection with an earlier driving-under-the-influence conviction and a computer printout establishing the date of the suspension were properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-17. Before the printout was submitted to the jury, the trial court required that the prejudicial information on the printout be redacted. Hann v. State, 292 Ga. App. 719, 665 S.E.2d 731 (2008).

Insufficient foundation for admission of evidence. — Testimony of an employee of the county solicitor's (now district attorney) office that the employee had obtained a copy of defendant's driving record from the state patrol office was not sufficient foundation for admission of the record. Tolbert v. State, 227 Ga. App. 647, 490 S.E.2d 183 (1997).

Cited in Allman v. State, 258 Ga. App. 792, 575 S.E.2d 710 (2002).

24-3-18. Admissibility of medical reports; qualifications of person signing reports; right of adverse party to cross-examine person signing reports.

(a) Upon the trial of any civil case involving injury or disease, any medical report in narrative form which has been signed and dated by an examining or treating licensed medical doctor, dentist, orthodontist, podiatrist, physical or occupational therapist, doctor of chiropractic, psychologist, advanced practice nurse, social worker, professional counselor, or marriage and family therapist shall be admissible and received in evidence insofar as it purports to represent the history, examination, diagnosis, treatment, prognosis, or interpretation of tests or examinations, including the basis therefor, by the person signing the report, the same as if that person were present at trial and testifying as a witness; provided, however, that such report and notice of intention to introduce such report must first be provided to the adverse party at least 60 days prior to trial. A statement of the qualifications of the person signing the report may be included as part of the basis for providing the information contained therein, and the opinion of the person signing the report with regard to the etiology of the injury or disease may be included as part of the diagnosis. Any adverse party may object to the admissibility of any portion of the report, other than on the ground that it is hearsay, within 15 days of being provided with the report. Further, any adverse party shall have the right to cross-examine the person signing the report and provide rebuttal testimony. The party tendering the report may also introduce testimony of the person signing the report for the purpose of supplementing the report or otherwise.

(b) The medical narrative shall be presented to the jury as depositions are presented to the jury and shall not go out with the jury as documentary evidence. (Code 1981, § 24-3-18, enacted by Ga. L. 1997, p. 945, § 1.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Admission of records in medical malpractice action. — Trial court did not err in admitting the podiatrist's medical records on the patient into evidence in the patient's medical malpractice case. Kohl v. Tirado, 256 Ga. App. 681, 569 S.E.2d 576 (2002).

Records properly excluded when 60-day notice requirement not met. — In a premises liability suit, the trial court properly excluded certified copies of some of an invitee's medical records under O.C.G.A. § 24-7-8 because the invitee had not provided the requisite 60-day notice under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-18. O.C.G.A. § 24-7-8 concerned only the authentication of medical records and did not allow the invitee to circumvent other evidentiary rules; furthermore, the invitee failed to provide a record citation for the specific medical records that the invitee claimed should have been admitted and thus it was unclear whether those records were narratives, to which § 24-3-18(a) applied, or other types of records. Fuller v. Flash Foods, Inc., 298 Ga. App. 217, 679 S.E.2d 775 (2009).

Admissibility on summary judgment. — In a wrongful death suit brought by a minor child's parents, alleging negligence and police misconduct arising out of an incident in which emergency surgery on their child was delayed due to police detention of the doctor who was to perform the surgery, summary judgment was improperly granted; the medical narrative report prepared by the doctor was admissible evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-18(a) and could be considered in opposition to a motion for summary judgment under O.C.G.A. § 9-11-56(c), in that the doctor's opinion in the report that the son, "in all likelihood," would have survived had the doctor not been prevented from caring for the son constituted a properly expressed medical opinion. Dalton v. City of Marietta, 280 Ga. App. 202, 633 S.E.2d 552 (2006).

Neurologist's notes improperly admitted. — In a personal injury suit, it was error to admit a neurologist's notes under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-18, as the notes were replete with unexplained medical terms and test results and thus did not comprise a medical narrative "in story form" as contemplated by the statute; the error was not harmless, as the notes constituted the vast majority of appellees' medical evidence and for the most part were not cumulative of other testimony. Lott v. Ridley, 285 Ga. App. 513, 647 S.E.2d 292 (2007).

Report prepared by others inadmissible. — Trial court did not err in refusing to permit the manufacturer's two expert witnesses to testify to asbestos fiber counts on the manufacturer's packing in decedent's case against the manufacturer for decedent's exposure to asbestos that allegedly was in the manufacturer's packing material used in the plant where decedent worked as that testimony was inadmissible hearsay since neither of the expert witnesses were involved in preparing those counts; absent a witness from the laboratory that performed the counts of a report that complied with O.C.G.A. § 24-3-18, such testimony was inadmissible. John Crane, Inc. v. Jones, 262 Ga. App. 531, 586 S.E.2d 26 (2003).

Chiropractor's report properly admitted. — In a personal injury suit, it was proper to admit a chiropractor's report under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-18; as the report was in a narrative form, summarized a patient's injuries and treatment, and presented the relevant aspects of the patient's injury, diagnosis, treatment, and prognosis in a logical form; although it contained medical terms, it attempted to explain those terms in the context of the report. Lott v. Ridley, 285 Ga. App. 513, 647 S.E.2d 292 (2007).

Recitation of records was not a narrative. — In a personal injury suit, a bare recitation of a doctor's unedited records was not a medical narrative in story form, as contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-18(a); therefore, a trial court committed reversible error by allowing plaintiffs' counsel to merely read into the record the doctor's notes, with no attempt to organize the doctor's notes or structure the notes to make the notes more readily understandable to the jury. Lott v.

Ridley, 285 Ga. App. 513, 647 S.E.2d 292 (2007).

Medical narrative in undue influence claim. — In a probate action, an oncologist's opinion, when considered along with other evidence of a testator's mental impairment and weakness after being prescribed drugs, was relevant in determining the amount of influence necessary to dominate the testator's mind and destroy free agency and willpower. Bailey v. Edmundson, 280 Ga. 528, 630 S.E.2d 396 (2006).

Cited in Ambling Mgmt. Co. v. Purdy, 283 Ga. App. 21, 640 S.E.2d 620 (2006); Mason v. Home Depot U.S.A., Inc., 283 Ga. 271, 658 S.E.2d 603 (2008).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Writing not required. — Fact that admissions were not reduced to writing does not make them inadmissible. Myrick v. State, 155 Ga. App. 496, 271 S.E.2d 637 (1980).

Justifying statements. — If the accused makes an extra judicial statement in which the accused admits the homicide of which the accused is charged, but couples the admission with a statement of facts or circumstances which shows excuse or justification, such statement is not a confession of guilt, and it is error to charge the law of confession. Pressley v. State, 201 Ga. 267, 39 S.E.2d 478 (1946).

Tax return is admissible in evidence to show the amount and value of the property admitted by the taxpayer to be the taxpayer's; but if such a return contains assessments made by someone other than the taxpayer, the assessments are not admissible. Seagraves v. Seagraves, 193 Ga. 280, 18 S.E.2d 460 (1942).

Suggestion in admission that party carries insurance does not exclude answer. — According to the generally accepted rule, the fact that the defendant is insured or otherwise indemnified against loss in the event of a recovery against the defendant cannot be shown as an independent fact by plaintiff, although it may be shown where it is brought out as an incident to the proof of some other fact properly involved; thus, if the answer would be admissible as an admission, the fact that it also contains a suggestion that the party carries insurance would not exclude the answer. Ideal Pool Corp. v. Champion, 157 Ga. App. 380, 277 S.E.2d 753 (1981).

Instructions. — After certain of defendant's statements, and defendant's statement in response to a police officer's inquiry could be construed by the jury to constitute admissions, the charge on admissions was relevant and properly adjusted to the evidence. Mangrum v. State, 155 Ga. App. 334, 270 S.E.2d 874 (1980).

It would be error for the court to instruct on the law of confessions since defendant's statements amount to admissions only. Royals v. State, 155 Ga. App. 378, 270 S.E.2d 906 (1980).

24-3-30. Admissions in pleadings.

Without offering the same in evidence, either party may avail himself of allegations or admissions made in the pleadings of the other. (Civil Code 1895, § 5188; Civil Code 1910, § 5775; Code 1933, § 38-402.)

History of Code section. — This Code section is derived from the decisions in Wood v. Isom, 68 Ga. 417 (1882) and East Tenn., V. & Ga. Ry. v. Kane, 92 Ga. 187, 18 S.E. 18 (1893).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

History of statute. — Statute is a codification of the principle announced in East Tenn., V. & Ga. Ry. v. Kane, 92 Ga. 187, 18 S.E.2d 18, 22 L.R.A. 315 (1893), and a number of prior cases, in which it was asserted that “certainly a party should be relieved from proving that which his adversary distinctly alleges,” and this a party may do “without formally tendering the pleading in evidence.” Greene v. Gulf Oil Corp., 119 Ga. App. 87, 166 S.E.2d 626 (1969); Carver v. Saye, 198 Ga. App. 146, 400 S.E.2d 683 (1990), cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 897, 400 S.E.2d 683 (1991).

An admission in the pleadings is to be taken as true, and the record should not be burdened by proof of the fact admitted. Greene v. Gulf Oil Corp., 119 Ga. App. 87, 166 S.E.2d 626 (1969).

Pleader is bound by the allegations of the pleader's own pleadings, and what the pleader alleges in the pleader's pleadings to be true is evidence that the pleader is not even permitted to deny. State Hwy Dep't v. Lumpkin, 222 Ga. 727, 152 S.E.2d 557 (1966).

When the plaintiff never sought to amend or withdraw averments of fact made in plaintiff's declaratory judgment petition, plaintiff was bound by those admissions and could not put up evidence over objection to contradict them. Keeley v. Cardiovascular Surgical Assocs., 236 Ga. App. 26, 510 S.E.2d 880 (1999).

When the trial court accepted into evidence tenants' affidavits which directly contradicted earlier admissions made by the tenants in their pleadings, those earlier admissions were considered withdrawn. Therefore, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment to the landlord as a matter of law under the termination clause of the lease based on the tenants' earlier admissions that the tenants were the ones who had terminated the lease. Michel v. Abrahams, 254 Ga. App. 293, 562 S.E.2d 194 (2002).

When the pleading is inconsistent, the admission, not the denial, prevails. Taylor v. Crawford, 119 Ga. App. 262, 167 S.E.2d 404 (1969); Johnson v. Daniel, 135 Ga. App. 926, 219 S.E.2d 579 (1975).

Effect of conflicting evidence on pleadings. — Party is not prevented, per se, from making an admission in judicio in the party's pleadings as to a fact merely because conflicting evidence may exist as to that issue of fact. If the trial court admits that conflicting evidence and either the court (e.g., when ruling on a motion for summary judgment) or the jury (when reaching a verdict) considers the conflicting evidence on the merits, the pleadings at that point become amended to conform to such evidence. Walker v. Jack Eckerd Corp., 209 Ga. App. 517, 434 S.E.2d 63 (1993).

When the trial court does not allow conflicting evidence to be admitted or, when applicable, elects not to consider the issue on the merits, the admission of fact made in the pleadings remains in full force and effect as an admission in judicio and is conclusive of the fact admitted. Walker v. Jack Eckerd Corp., 209 Ga. App. 517, 434 S.E.2d 63 (1993).

Admissions of fact in the pleadings can always be taken advantage of by the opposite party, and can be used as evidence, even though the pleadings should be stricken or withdrawn. Improved Fertilizer Co. v. Swift & Co., 15 Ga. App. 601, 84 S.E. 132 (1914); Clift & Goodrich, Inc. v. Mincey Mfg. Co., 41 Ga. App. 38, 152 S.E. 136 (1930); Carver v. Carver, 199 Ga. 352, 34 S.E.2d 509 (1945); Stallings v. Britt, 204 Ga. 250, 49 S.E.2d 517 (1948); Cummings v. State, 84 Ga. App. 698, 67 S.E.2d 156 (1951); Spurlock v. Commercial Banking Co., 151 Ga. App. 649, 260 S.E.2d 912 (1979); Lawson v. Duke Oil Co., 155 Ga. App. 363, 270 S.E.2d 898 (1980).

When the pleading has been stricken, the admission contained in the pleading remains to be utilized as evidence of fact which the admitting party can explain but may be unable to conclusively refute. Strozier v. Simmons U.S.A. Corp., 192 Ga. App. 601, 385 S.E.2d 677, cert. denied, 192 Ga. App. 903, 385 S.E.2d 677 (1989).

In an action seeking damages from an insurance company based on a claim that the company acted in bad faith when the company failed to settle an injured party's claim against an insured, the insurance company admission, in the company's answer to the complaint, that the injured party offered to settle the case for the policy limits of the insured's policy was properly offered to the jury as an admission that there was a policy of insurance. VFH Captive Ins. Co. v. Cielinski, 260 Ga. App. 807, 581 S.E.2d 335 (2003).

Defendants were bound by admissions which were never expressly withdrawn. — Defendants, who never expressly withdrew the admissions contained in the pleadings, were bound by the admissions, and even if the amendment to their answer impliedly withdrew the admissions, the defendants would still be faced with the admissions as evidence. Strozier v. Simmons U.S.A. Corp., 192 Ga. App. 601, 385 S.E.2d 677, cert. denied, 192 Ga. App. 903, 385 S.E.2d 677 (1989).

Alternative pleadings. — Civil Practice Act, O.C.G.A. Ch. 11, T. 9, which permits alternative pleadings does not change the rule of evidence that a party is bound by the party's judicial admissions. Ditch v. Royal Indem. Co., 205 Ga. App. 478, 422 S.E.2d 868, cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 899, 422 S.E.2d 868 (1992).

Considered as evidence in record. — When matter is contained in a pleading, from which inferences may be drawn beneficial to the opposite party, it may be considered as evidence in the record in the party's favor. Johnson v. Daniel, 135 Ga. App. 926, 219 S.E.2d 579 (1975); Lawson v. Duke Oil Co., 155 Ga. App. 363, 270 S.E.2d 898 (1980); Metro Leasing, Inc. v. Health Educ. & Research Servs., Inc., 193 Ga. App. 157, 387 S.E.2d 399 (1989).

Can be explained or disproved. — When the answer admitted an allegation of the petition but was later amended by striking the admission, the admission, though introduced as evidence for the plaintiff, was not conclusive, and could be explained or disproved by the defendant. Watkins v. Price Mercantile Co., 45 Ga. App. 272, 164 S.E. 231 (1932).

Admission must be withdrawn from record. — Party to a suit will not even be allowed to disprove an admission made in the party's pleadings without first withdrawing the admission from the record. Clift & Goodrich, Inc. v. Mincey Mfg. Co., 41 Ga. App. 38, 152 S.E. 136 (1930); Maryland Cas. Co. v. Sammons, 67 Ga. App. 83, 19 S.E.2d 314 (1942); Head v. Lee, 203 Ga. 191, 45 S.E.2d 666 (1947); Dye v. Hirsch, 92 Ga. App. 803, 90 S.E.2d 332 (1955); Plymouth

Record Corp. v. Books, Inc., 92 Ga. App. 753, 90 S.E.2d 336 (1955); Grigsby v. Fleming, 96 Ga. App. 664, 101 S.E.2d 217 (1957); Greene v. Gulf Oil Corp., 119 Ga. App. 87, 166 S.E.2d 626 (1969); Sambo's of Ga., Inc. v. First Am. Nat'l Bank, 152 Ga. App. 899, 264 S.E.2d 330 (1980); Strozier v. Simmons U.S.A. Corp., 192 Ga. App. 601, 385 S.E.2d 677, cert. denied, 192 Ga. App. 903, 385 S.E.2d 677 (1989).

Rule only applies to factual admissions. —

Rule that a party cannot disprove an admission in pleadings without first withdrawing the admission from the record applies to admissions of fact, and is not applicable when the admission is merely the opinion on the part of the party making the admission as to the legal effect of the instrument sued on. Clift & Goodrich, Inc. v. Mincey Mfg. Co., 41 Ga. App. 38, 152 S.E. 136 (1930); Scott v. Jefferson, 174 Ga. App. 651, 331 S.E.2d 1 (1985); Perry & Co. v. New S. Ins. Brokers of Ga., Inc., 182 Ga. App. 84, 354 S.E.2d 852 (1987); Ellerbee v. Interstate Contract Carrier Corp., 183 Ga. App. 828, 360 S.E.2d 280 (1987).

Pleading "admission" that a particular person was an heir at law of the deceased was not conclusive against the pleader. Scott v. Jefferson, 174 Ga. App. 651, 331 S.E.2d 1 (1985).

Pleading that was replete with a party's opinions and legal conclusions could not be considered an admission in judicio that would be effectively binding upon other parties. Mountain Bound, Inc. v. Alliant Foodservice, Inc., 242 Ga. App. 557, 530 S.E.2d 272 (2000).

Appellants made admission in judicio, in their motion for new trial or in the alternative motion to amend judgment, of the fact that the probate court "entered a judgment styled 'Final Order'"; this admission in judicio expressed the fact that the order was entered on the date specified. Jabaley v. Jabaley, 208 Ga. App. 179, 430 S.E.2d 119 (1993).

Use of withdrawn pleadings. — When a part of a petition or of a plea is stricken by amendment, the stricken part may, if pertinent to any issue remaining in the case, be offered in evidence; but, unless so offered and admitted in evidence, it is not evidence for the consideration of the jury or proper matter for argument of counsel, save only when the amendment is made after the evidence is closed. Lydia Pinkham Medicine Co. v. Gibbs, 108 Ga. 138, 33 S.E. 945 (1899); Alabama Midland Ry. v. Guilford, 114 Ga. 627, 40 S.E. 794 (1902); Continental Trust Co. v. Bank of Harrison, 36 Ga. App. 149, 136 S.E. 319 (1926).

Withdrawal of admission by amendment of pleadings. — In an action against a negligent driver's father, the father's initial admission that the vehicle was a family purpose vehicle was made regarding a legal opinion, i.e., agency under the family purpose doctrine, and, therefore, it could not be an admission in judicio or an admission against interest, because the admission was a legal opinion or conclusion that had been withdrawn by amendment from the pleadings. Wahnschaff v. Erdman, 232 Ga. 77, 502 S.E.2d 246 (1998).

Defendant could not cross-examine plaintiff on allegations in plaintiff's complaint since the complaint was amended and the contentions therein were no longer solemn admissions in judicio. Crosby v. Cooper Tire & Rubber Co., 240 Ga. App. 857, 524 S.E.2d 313 (1999).

If the party amended the party's pleadings to withdraw the party's judicial admissions, the party could introduce evidence contravening the admissions, and if such contradictory evidence was admitted, even over the objection of the other party, then under O.C.G.A. § 9-11-15(b), such evidence could be deemed to amend the pleadings to withdraw the admissions. SAKS Assocs., LLC v. Southeast Culvert, Inc., 282 Ga. App. 359, 638 S.E.2d 799 (2006).

In passengers' negligence suit against a taxicab company, to the extent the company's initial answer contained an admission under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-30 that the driver was the company's employee, such admission was withdrawn by timely amendment, allowing positive evidence of the contrary to overcome it as an admission. Lopez v. El Palmar Taxi, Inc., 297 Ga. App. 121, 676 S.E.2d 460 (2009).

Averments negating existence of right claimed. — If the averments of a complaint expressly negative the existence of a right claimed therein, or show the impossibility of its existence, they are to be regarded as evidence deposited in the record in favor of the opposite party, and demand the finding thereon in the party's favor. New Zealand Fire Ins. Co. v. Brewer, 29 Ga. App. 773, 116 S.E. 922 (1923).

Admissions not binding on codefendant when interests adverse. — Any admissions in judicio as to amounts owed to lenders by a corporation made by the first borrower were not binding on the corporation under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-30 as the borrowers' interests were not joint but adverse as the first borrower was not a shareholder, officer, or director of the corporation. Walker v. Ace Auto Sales & Leasing, Inc., 294 Ga. App. 267, 668 S.E.2d 877 (2008).

Effect of pretrial order. — In a personal injury suit, a company explicitly preserved the company's argument that the company was not a proper party in the consolidated pretrial order which the trial court signed. Under Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 7.2, this order expressly superseded the pleadings and established the issues in litigation; thus, the company was not estopped under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-30 from asserting at trial that the company was not the proper party to be sued. First Support Servs. v. Trevino, 288 Ga. App. 850, 655 S.E.2d 627 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 388 (Ga. 2008).

Judicial admission. — Trial court did not err in granting summary judgment to the materialman on the materialman's action to recover under a lien discharge bond, as the surety admitted in surety's response to the materialman's amended complaint that the materialman had performed all conditions precedent to bring the materialman's action; the surety's admission was a judicial admission that bound the surety and contradicted its defense that the materialman had not fulfilled a lien statute notice requirement. Washington Intl Ins. Co. v. Hughes Supply, Inc., 271 Ga. App. 50, 609 S.E.2d 99 (2004).

Inconsistent defenses. — Defendant may, of course, file inconsistent defenses; but the plaintiff may take advantage of the contradictory nature of the defenses, and may use, as an admission against the defendant, a statement made is one of the pleas, although in another of the pleas there is set up a contradictory state of facts. The jury is not bound to accept the testimony of a witness which is contradictory to a plea one has filed. Wheeler v. Salinger, 33 Ga. App. 300, 125 S.E. 888 (1924); Myers v. Woodson, 33 Ga. App. 748, 127 S.E. 888 (1925).

Estoppel. — When upon a suit on a contract, the plaintiff obtains a judgment or relief amounting to an adjudication in the plaintiff's favor, and is afterwards sued for a subsequent breach of plaintiff's own part of the contract, the plaintiff is estopped to deny the essential terms of the contract as pleaded in the former petition under which the plaintiff recovered. Florence, Phillips & Co. v. Newsome, 26 Ga. App. 501, 106 S.E. 619 (1921).

Reviewing court on appeal will not consider the question of whether a plaintiff's alleged bill of sale was sufficient to constitute a valid lien or claim of title to the proceeds of the sale since the defendant had conceded in the court below, by a solemn admission in judicio, that the bill of sale of the plaintiff constituted a prior claim on the proceeds of the sale, and the defendant defended upon the sole ground of estoppel. C.I. & M. Dingfelder v. Georgia Peach Growers Exch., 182 Ga. 521, 186 S.E. 425 (1936).

Estoppel not applicable in later and different action. — Statements in pleadings are considered as judicial and not as evidentiary admissions, and for these purposes, until withdrawn or amended, are conclusive; but estoppels by admissions made in pleading apply only between parties and privies to the suit or litigation in which the admissions relied on as an estoppel were made; when such admissions in pleadings are introduced as evidence in a later and different action, they no longer operate as admissions in judicio but, rather, as evidentiary admissions and, as evidence, such admissions may be explained or contradicted. Foster v. State, 157 Ga. App. 554, 278 S.E.2d 136 (1981).

Objection invalid. — When the defendant admits in the defendant's plea the execution by the defendant of an instrument which forms a part of the plaintiff's abstract of title, in view of the statute it is not a good objection to the admission of the instrument in evidence that the instrument's execution has not been proved. Vizard v. Moody, 119 Ga. 918, 47 S.E. 348 (1904).

Incorporating admission in brief of evidence. — Admissions in pleading were properly incorporated in the brief of evidence, though stricken by amendment after evidence closed. Lydia Pinkham Medicine Co. v. Gibbs, 108 Ga. 138, 33 S.E. 945 (1899).

Instructions. — If a party desires instructions to the jury touching admissions made in the other party's pleadings, the party should present a proper request therefor. Georgia Power Co. v. Rabun, 111 Ga. App. 63, 140 S.E.2d 568 (1965).

In the absence of a proper request, a trial court does not err in failing to instruct the jury specifically that various portions of the opposite party's pleadings should be considered by the jury as admissions against that party. Crane v. Doolittle, 116 Ga. App. 572, 158 S.E.2d 426 (1967).

Cited in Whelchel v. Roark, 31 Ga. App. 75, 119 S.E. 451 (1923); Pullman Co. v. Bullard, 44 F.2d 347 (5th Cir. 1930); Terrell v. Harris, 42 Ga. App. 760, 157 S.E. 387 (1931); *Field v. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

 PARTIES
 DEFENDANTS IN EXECUTION IN CLAIM CASES
 EXAMPLES

General Consideration

Nature of evidence. — Admissions by parties as to a matter relevant to the case on trial are not to be regarded as inferior evidence, but when satisfactorily proven they constitute grounds of belief on which the mind justly reposes with strong confidence. Mayo v. Owen, 208 Ga. 483, 67 S.E.2d 709 (1951).

Admission in judicio. — Claimant’s admissions in judicio against the claimant’s own interests were binding upon the claimant since a solemn admission in judicio is conclusive as a matter of law on the matter stated and cannot be contradicted by other evidence unless it is withdrawn or amended on formal motion. Piedmont Aviation, Inc. v. Washington, 181 Ga. App. 730, 353 S.E.2d 847 (1987).

Admissions in judicio as to matters of fact against one party’s interest are binding on another party when the interests of the two are joint but not when their interests are adverse. Batchelor v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 240 Ga. App. 366, 526 S.E.2d 68 (1999).

Personal knowledge not required. — To be admissible in evidence, admissions do not necessarily have to be founded on the personal knowledge of the party making the admissions. Brooks v. Sessoms, 47 Ga. App. 554, 171 S.E. 222 (1933).

Admissions do not come in, on the ground that the party making the admissions is speaking from the party’s personal knowledge, but upon the ground that a party will not make admissions against oneself unless the admissions are true; the fact that the party makes the admissions against the party’s interest can be reasonably explained only on the supposition that the party is constrained to do so by the force of the evidence. Mayo v. Owen, 208 Ga. 483, 67 S.E.2d 709 (1951).

Prior admissions of a party to an action may be offered in evidence although not against interest when made and, if believed by the jury, may be considered as substantive evidence of the fact sought to be proved. W.T. Harvey Lumber Co. v. J.M. Wells Lumber Co., 104 Ga. App. 498, 122 S.E.2d 143 (1961).

Introduction of admissions contained in a stricken plea. — Such admissions when thus made are to be taken as true, because the admissions are asserted by the party personally; and while the party may withdraw the admissions formally from the pleadings, the party cannot by a mere withdrawal avoid the effect of the admissions since the admissions may still be used as evidence against the party. Stallings v. Britt, 204 Ga. 250, 49 S.E.2d 517 (1948).

While one may withdraw admissions formally from the pleadings, one cannot by a mere withdrawal avoid the effect of the admissions made as the admissions remain admissible into evidence. Richmond County v. Sibert, 218 Ga. 209, 126 S.E.2d 761 (1962).

Estimates. — An admission in the testimony of a party is not, as a matter of law, to be taken as conclusively true, when the admission is in the nature of an estimate or guess; in such case it may be overcome by evidence of the facts and circumstances which form the basis of the admission. Hansberger Motor Transp. Co. v. Pate, 51 Ga. App. 877, 181 S.E. 796 (1935).

Charge by court. — Court is not required to charge on the effect of admissions without a special request to that effect. Hawkins v. Kermod, 85 Ga. 116, 11 S.E. 560 (1890); Wrightsville & Tennille R.R. v. Lattimore, 118 Ga. 581, 45 S.E. 453 (1903).

App. 214, 146 S.E. 512 (1929); Jett v. Securities Inv. Co., 68 Ga. App. 454, 23 S.E.2d 265 (1942); Bailey v. Warlick, 196 Ga. 642, 27 S.E.2d 322 (1943); Sconyers v. Pierce, 82 Ga. App. 123, 159 S.E.2d 730 (1968); Hardee's Food Sys. v. Bowers, 121 Ga. App. 316, 173 S.E.2d 439 (1970); Overnite Transp. Co. v. Hart, 126 Ga. App. 566, 191 S.E.2d 308 (1972); Carter v. Madray, 128 Ga. App. 40, 195 S.E.2d 685 (1973); Jackson v. Riviera Dev. Corp., 130 Ga. App. 146, 202 S.E.2d 545 (1973); Thomason v. Genuine Parts Co., 156 Ga. App. 1, 660 S.E.2d 810 (2008); Morgan v. Howard, 285 Ga. 512, 678 S.E.2d 882 (2009).

Parties

Joint parties. — Admissions of one of two or more parties to the record are not admissible to bind the others, until a joint interest is proven by other testimony. Boswell v. Blackman, 12 Ga. 591 (1853); Kirk v. Barnes, 147 Ga. App. 423, 249 S.E.2d 140 (1978).

Because no joint interest existed between an LLC and its sole managing member, but instead the evidence showed that the two had separate and distinct positions in a lawsuit, the interest of both were not so joint and coextensive so as to justify treating the judicial admissions of the LLC as binding on the managing member. Milk v. Total Pay & HR Solutions, Inc., 280 Ga. App. 449, 634 S.E.2d 208 (2006).

Rapist's admission to entering an apartment building through a broken gate was admissible evidence that could be used against the rapist's co-defendants, a landlord and a security company, in the victim's premises liability action against the landlord and security company. The admission could be used to establish the rapist's conduct even though the conduct could not be imputed to the landlord and security company. Walker v. Aderhold Props., No. A09A1951, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 304 (Mar. 25, 2010).

When the personal representative of a deceased person is a substantial party to a suit, the testimony of a witness as to statements made by the deceased to the witness, concerning the vital issue in the cause, adverse to the contention of such personal representative, when offered by the opposite party, the witness not being incompetent to testify, is admissible in evidence as admissions. Ferrell v. Wight, 187 Ga. 360, 200 S.E. 271 (1938); Fuller v. Fuller, 107 Ga. App. 429, 130 S.E.2d 520 (1963).

Wills. — Admission of an executor before qualification, or of a legatee, unless the sole legatee, shall not be admissible in evidence to impeach the will. To this general rule there is an exception: if the admission be in reference to the conduct or the acts of the executor or legatee personally as to some matter relevant to the issue on trial, the same will be admitted to impeach the will, although made by the executor before qualification, or by a legatee who is not the sole legatee. Brown v. Kendrick, 163 Ga. 149, 135 S.E. 721 (1926).

Admissions of nominal defendant as error. — Although the reception in evidence of the admissions of a nominal defendant was error, in view of former Civil Code 1910, §§ 5776 and 6083 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 5-5-22 and 24-3-31), it will not work the grant of a new trial, since the judge below, in the exercise of the judge's discretion, refused to grant a new trial on this ground. Jenkins v. Lane, 154 Ga. 454, 115 S.E. 126 (1922).

When admission by person not party to action is admissible. — Rule, as to parties to a suit is that a plea of guilty may be shown as an admission against interest; admissions by persons not a party to an action, however, are admissible in evidence only when the party making the admission is the real party in interest, although not a party to the record, or when a party to the record refers another to such third party for information, or when there is an admission by a third person against that person's interest as to a fact collateral to the main issue between the litigants but essential to the adjudication of the cause. Cobb v. Garner, 158 Ga. App. 110, 279 S.E.2d 280 (1981).

Defendants in Execution in Claim Cases

Term "litigation," as employed in statute, is not confined merely to the determination of a possible issue which may arise after levy, between the plaintiff in fi. fa. and some possible claimant, but the term includes also the previous suit in which the fi. fa. had its origin. Smith v. Johnson, 13 Ga. App. 837, 80 S.E. 1051 (1913).

Not relevant to competency. — Provision upon the subject of the admissibility of admissions of defendants in fi. fa. in claim cases has no reference to the competency of a defendant in fi. fa. as a witness in the trial of such a case, and would be no authority for excluding one's testimony on objection of the plaintiff in fi. fa. when offered by the claimant. Cornelia Bank v. Taylor, 37 Ga. App. 538, 140 S.E. 901 (1927).

Admissions before litigation pending. — Admissions of a defendant in execution against the defendant's interest, before the pendency of litigation, are admissible in evidence in favor of either the claimant or the plaintiff in execution. Smith v. Cox, 20 Ga. 240 (1856). See also Horn v. Ross & Leitch, 20 Ga. 210, 65 Am. Dec. 621 (1856); James v. Taylor, 93 Ga. 275, 20 S.E. 309 (1893); Rountree v. Gaulden, 128 Ga. 737, 58 S.E. 346 (1907).

Admission for impeachment purposes. — Extrajudicial statement respecting the title to the property levied on, made by the defendant in fi. fa. in a claim case, is not inadmissible as being an admission, when the statement is offered and admitted in evidence solely for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of such defendant. Nesmith v. Nesmith, 37 Ga. App. 779, 142 S.E. 176 (1928).

Testimony from previous trials. — Declarations of the defendant in fi. fa. made under oath as a witness at a former trial of the same case in disparagement of the claimant's title were not admissible in evidence against the claimant. Tillman v. Fontaine, 98 Ga. 672, 27 S.E. 149 (1896).

Declarations as to title. — Declarations by a defendant in fi. fa. against the defendant's title to property in the defendant's possession are not admissible in behalf of a claimant, if made after the judgment was obtained or while the litigation was pending and with reference thereto. James v. Taylor, 93 Ga. 275, 20 S.E. 309 (1893).

Declarations of the defendant in fi. fa. as to the ownership of the property levied on, made after the filing of the suit which resulted in the rendition of the judgment against the defendant, are admissions after the pendency of the litigation, and are excluded by the terms of statute. Smith v. Johnson, 13 Ga. App. 837, 80 S.E. 1051 (1913).

Evidence as to a declaration made by the defendant in fi. fa. after the levy that the property levied on belonged to the claimant and that the defendant in fi. fa. bought the property merely as the claimant's agent, was improperly admitted, since it was a declaration made by the defendant in fi. fa. after the pendency of the litigation. Alford v. Sharber, 41 Ga. App. 707, 154 S.E. 463 (1930).

Possession. — In the trial of a claim case, declarations of a defendant in execution made after the pendency of litigation and prior to the time of levy, but at a time when the defendant was not in possession of the property levied on, that the defendant owned such property, are not admissible as evidence and of no probative value even if admitted without objection. Nelson v. Brannon, 32 Ga. App. 455, 123 S.E. 735 (1924); McSwain v. Estroff, 34 Ga. App. 183, 129 S.E. 16 (1925).

Sale of property. — Declarations of the defendant in fi. fa. made after the suit was brought which resulted in the judgment the plaintiff was then seeking to enforce, and shortly before that judgment was rendered, to the effect that the defendant had sold the lands in question to the claimant, were not admissible in the latter's favor. Tillman v. Fontaine, 98 Ga. 672, 27 S.E. 149 (1896).

Recital in deed as to payment of purchase money. — While, in a deed from defendant in fi. fa. to claimant, the receipt or recital of the payment of purchase money may be evidence of payment, when the deed was made before the suit in which the judgment was obtained, was commenced, yet it is but prima facie evidence, and a charge that it is not evidence will not necessitate the grant of a new trial, if the other facts of the case required the verdict as found. Bonner v. Metcalf, 58 Ga. 236 (1877).

Examples

Tax digest as evidence. — In a claim case the tax digest, showing the returns of the defendant in execution before the pendency of litigation, is admissible in evidence as an admission of the defendant. It is competent also to show that the claimant did not make any return of property for taxation during the year in which the judgment was rendered. McLendon v. Dunlap Hdwe. Co., 3 Ga. App. 206, 59 S.E. 718 (1907).

Letters as evidence. — Letters written by the defendant in execution during the year in which the judgment was rendered, both before and after its date, to an overseer, giving directions as to the cultivation of the crop subsequently under levy and as to the management of the farm during that year, and relating to other like matters, were admissible in evidence for the plaintiff as acts of the defendant tending to show possession and control by the defendant. Tillman v. Fontaine, 98 Ga. 672, 27 S.E. 149 (1896). See also Mixon v. Lacey, 26 Ga. App. 542, 107 S.E. 259 (1921).

In an action by a customer who ate a muffin, which allegedly contained an industrial staple, against the franchisor of the restaurant and the company which allegedly manufactured the muffin mix, a letter from the franchisee's insurer to the customer's attorney, in which the attorney identified the alleged manufacturer of the muffin mix, was inadmissible hearsay as the franchisee's insurer was neither a party nor a privy of a party. Jackson v. Dunkin' Donuts, Inc., 211 Ga. App. 596, 440 S.E.2d 56 (1994).

Telephone messages. — As telephone messages made following conversations between a party opponent and a testifying witness noted the contents of a conversation, not an act, transaction, occurrence, or event, the business records exception to the hearsay rule was inapplicable; for the contents of the party's telephone conversations to be admissible, the party would have to be given the opportunity to cross-examine the employees to whom the witness spoke with in regard to the potential for misrepresenting the statements. Bailey v. Edmundson, 280 Ga. 528, 630 S.E.2d 396 (2006).

Recorded telephone conversations with an informant. — There was circumstantial evidence that a defendant was the participant in recorded phone conversations with an informant; therefore the conversations were admissible as admissions of a party opponent under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-31, and the entirety of the calls were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-38. Kimble v. State, 301 Ga. App. 237, 687 S.E.2d 242 (2009).

Admission of liability. — Upon the trial of a suit in which the plaintiff alleged that the plaintiff suffered personal injuries as a result of the negligent operation by the defendant of an automobile in which the plaintiff was traveling, which caused a collision between plaintiff's vehicle and another automobile, a statement afterwards made by the defendant to the plaintiff that the defendant wanted the plaintiff to have all the treatment and attention necessary and would pay for such, and would probably pay something extra to the plaintiff on account of the plaintiff's suffering, was relevant and admissible as tending to show admission of liability. Rentz v. Collins, 51 Ga. App. 782, 181 S.E. 678 (1935).

Statements against interest. — Plaintiff's statement to the police officer at the scene of an accident that the plaintiff did not see the truck before the collision was admissible as a statement against interest. Cleveland v. Bryant, 236 Ga. App. 459, 512 S.E.2d 360 (1999).

Because the injured party admitted, after the fact, to the coworker that the injured party did not place the hot coffee, that later spilled on the injured party's lap, on the floor because the injured party did not want anything to get on the coworker's new car, the statement was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-31 as a party's admission. Bernath v. People Success, Inc., 274 Ga. App. 880, 619 S.E.2d 378 (2005).

Undercover detective's testimony regarding a conversation the detective overheard between a defendant and a confidential informant (CI) as to a drug transaction was not inadmissible hearsay as the detective could identify both parties to the conversation and the statement by the defendant fell within the hearsay exception for a statement against interest. Escobar v. State, 296 Ga.

App. 898, 676 S.E.2d 291 (2009).

Admissions against penal interest. — In a prosecution for burglary, evidence of defendant's admission that defendant had broken into a house on another occasion was admissible as an admission by defendant against the defendant's penal interest. Howard v. State, 227 Ga. App. 5, 488 S.E.2d 489 (1997).

Defendant's adoption of statements in a probation officer's disciplinary reports that defendant violated Diversion Center rules was sufficient to render the documents competent proof of the facts recited as an admission against interest by a party. Kendrick v. State, 240 Ga. App. 530, 523 S.E.2d 414 (1999).

Insurance. — Admissions against interest are such even though the admissions may contain a suggestion that the party making the admissions carry insurance, and the mere fact that insurance, or an insurance company, is mentioned as an inextricable part of the statement made by such party or conversation in which the party indulged, does not make the evidence inadmissible when offered by the opposite party, as the party making such statement has only the party to blame in referring to insurance, or to the insurance company, in making the admission against one's interest. Wade v. Drinkard, 76 Ga. App. 159, 45 S.E.2d 231 (1947).

Admissions as to gift. — Evidence of admissions by the defendant as to gift of certain property, which was involved in controversy, to the defendant's children and grandchildren, was admissible. Poullain v. Poullain, 76 Ga. 420, 4 S.E. 92 (1886).

Statements by a property owner against the owner's interest as to the location of a line in dispute are admissible in evidence. Seaboard Air Line R.R. v. Taylor, 214 Ga. 212, 104 S.E.2d 106 (1958).

Statement as to ownership of a colt. — When a horse trainer offered testimony that another trainer spoke with possessors of a colt, who admitted that the colt belonged to the trainer, such hearsay statement was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-31 as an admission of a party-opponent in the trainer's claim to possession and ownership of the colt; accordingly, a question of fact was raised on the trainer's claim which should have precluded summary judgment pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 9-11-56. Medlin v.

Statements by a dog's owner. — Affidavit by the mother of a dog-bite victim that the dog's owner told her that "she knew something like this would happen" was admissible and was evidence sufficient to preclude summary judgment for defendants. Johnson v. Kvasny, 230 Ga. App. 162, 495 S.E.2d 651 (1998).

Suit on insurance policy. — When suit is brought by a widow and child on a life policy, insuring the life of the husband and father, and the plaintiffs are the joint beneficiaries under the policy, the admissions of the widow are competent evidence for the defendant on the question of misrepresentation made in the application for insurance. Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 53 Ga. 535 (1874).

Employee's statement to an insurance adjuster was not admissible against employer as an admission of a party opponent because the individual was a "mere employee," and as such had no authority to bind the employer by the employee's statement. HCP III Woodstock, Inc. v. Healthcare Servs. Group, Inc., 254 Ga. App. 242, 562 S.E.2d 225 (2002).

Advisory study prepared by private citizens together with public employees is not necessarily admissible as being a statement against the interest of the public entity authorizing the study. To be so considered, the entity must have been constrained by the force of the evidence to issue the report, rather than issuing the report as a result of mere deliberative recognition of the problems addressed in the report. United Waste, Ltd. v. Fulton County, 184 Ga. App. 694, 362 S.E.2d 476 (1987).

24-3-32. Admissions by privies.

Admissions by privies in blood, privies in estate, and privies in law shall be admissible as against the parties themselves. However, declarations by privies in estate after the title shall have passed out of them shall not be received. (Orig. Code 1863, § 3711; Code 1868, § 3735; Code 1873, § 3788; Code 1882, § 3788; Civil Code 1895, § 5193; Civil Code 1910, § 5780; Code 1933, § 38-407.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Privy must be proved beyond reasonable doubt. — Before the sayings of one person should be received in evidence against another, it ought to have become clear beyond a reasonable doubt, that the other claims under that person, or bears to that person some relation of privy. Aiken v. Cato, 23 Ga. 154 (1857).

Privies in estate. — Defendants, subsequent owners of a sewer system, were privies in estate only with respect to the estate at the time of their purchase from the prior owners. Loftis v. Flowers, 79 Ga. App. 325, 53 S.E.2d 606 (1949).

Prejudice of title conveyed. — Sayings of the former owner are inadmissible to prejudice the title conveyed, if made subsequent to the time when the title and property are parted with. James v. Kirby, 29 Ga. 684 (1859).

Sayings and an affidavit of a grantor, that a certain deed is a forgery, were inadmissible against parties holding under the grantor. Byrd v. Aspinwall, 108 Ga. 1, 33 S.E. 688 (1899).

Disclaimer of title to land by a predecessor in title of the plaintiff, which predecessor was dead at the time of the trial, but while owner of the plaintiff's tract stated to two witnesses that the acreage involved was not a part of the plaintiff's tract but was the property of another named person, one from whom the plaintiff acquired no title was binding upon the plaintiff's successors in title. Tolnas v. Pope, 212 Ga. 50, 90 S.E.2d 420 (1955).

Deed reformation. — In a proceeding to reform a deed, on the grounds of fraud and mistake, the declarations of the grantor, made subsequent to the execution of the deed, and in the absence of the grantee, are not admissible to prove a mistake in the deed, which may be corrected in equity. Adair v. Adair, 38 Ga. 46 (1868).

Admissions of a life-tenant are not evidence against the remainderman as a life tenant is not a privy in estate. Pool v. Morris, 29 Ga. 374, 74 Am. Dec. 68 (1859).

Under a retail installment contract, a seller is in privy with the seller's assignee and any extrajudicial admission of the seller adverse to a prima facie signed delivery receipt is admissible against the assignee of the contract as evidence of nondelivery under former Code 1933, § 38-407 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-32), even though the admission qualifies as hearsay under former Code 1933, § 38-301 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1). Reese v. Termplan, Inc., 125 Ga. App. 473, 188 S.E.2d 177 (1972).

Admissions by an agent or attorney in fact, during the existence and in pursuance of his agency, shall be admissible against the principal. (Orig. Code 1863, § 3710; Code 1868, § 3734; Code 1873, § 3787; Code 1882, § 3787; Civil Code 1895, § 5192; Civil Code 1910, § 5779; Code 1933, § 38-406.)

AGENTS

ATTORNEYS

General Consideration

Former Code 1933, § 33-406 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-33) and former Code 1933, § 4-315 (see O.C.G.A. § 10-6-64) must be construed together, and the second effectively limits the scope of the first. Southern Ry. v. Allen, 118 Ga. App. 645, 165 S.E.2d 194 (1968); Brooks v. Kroger Co., 194 Ga. App. 215, 390 S.E.2d 280 (1990).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-33 must be construed together with O.C.G.A. § 10-6-64, which states an agent's declarations shall not be admissible against the principal unless the declarations were part of the res gestae of the transaction. Uniflex Corp. v. Saxon, 198 Ga. App. 445, 402 S.E.2d 67 (1991).

Cited in Bennett v. Barr, 49 Ga. App. 831, 176 S.E. 681 (1934); Thornton v. King, 81 Ga. App. 122, 58 S.E.2d 227 (1950); Allgood v. Dalton Brick & Tile Corp., 81 Ga. Newsom*, 125 Ga. App. 571, 188 S.E.2d 266 (1972); Contractors Equip. Co. v. Gottfried, 139 Ga. App. 784, 229

S.E.2d 558 (1976); Gordon v. Athens Convalescent Ctr., Inc., 146 Ga. App. 134, 245 S.E.2d 484 (1978); Hassell v. First Nat'l Bank, 218 Ga. App. 231, 461 S.E.2d 245 (1995); Butler v. Bolton Rd. Partners, 222 Ga. App. 791, 476 S.E.2d 265 (1996); Eubanks v. CSX Transp., Inc., 223 Ga. App. 616, 478 S.E.2d 387 (1996); Hagan v. Goody's Family Clothing, Inc., 227 Ga. App. 585, 490 S.E.2d 107 (1997); Lane v. Tift County Hosp. Auth., 228 Ga. App. 554, 492 S.E.2d 317 (1997).

Agents

Some proof of the agency should be submitted before declarations of an agent are admissible. Waddington v. Stores Mut. Protective Ass'n, 52 Ga. App. 331, 183 S.E. 143 (1935).

Establishment of agency. — Fact of agency may be established by proof of circumstances, apparent relations, and the conduct of the parties. Ross v. Durrence, 181 Ga. 52, 181 S.E. 581 (1935).

Agent's statements not proof. — Agent certainly cannot confer authority upon oneself, and evidence of the agent's own statements or admissions, therefore, is not admissible against the agent's principal for the purpose of establishing, enlarging, or renewing the agent's authority, nor can the agent's authority be established by showing that the agent acted as agent, or that the agent claimed to have the powers which the agent assumed to exercise. Waddington v. Stores Mut. Protective Ass'n, 52 Ga. App. 331, 183 S.E. 143 (1935).

Agent's declarations may be part of res gestae. — Where extraneous circumstances, independently of and without regard to the declarations of the alleged agent personally, clearly tend to establish the fact of agency, the agent's declarations may be admitted and considered as a part of the res gestae of the transaction. Waddington v. Stores Mut. Protective Ass'n, 52 Ga. App. 331, 183 S.E. 143 (1935).

Evidence was insufficient to show executive vice president was acting as agent and officer of defendant bank. King v. Citizens Bank, 88 Ga. App. 40, 76 S.E.2d 86 (1953).

Hearsay in an injured party's affidavit in support of summary judgment was inadmissible as the hearsay was not a statement of a party opponent; the individual never held the driver out as an agent, so there was no apparent agency. Webb v. Day, 273 Ga. App. 491, 615 S.E.2d 570 (2005).

Trial court's exclusion of a report by an emergency vehicle operator's supervisor regarding a collision that occurred between the emergency vehicle and a driver's vehicle was proper in the driver's personal injury action arising therefrom pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 10-6-64 and 24-3-33 as even if the statements contained in the report were part of the res gestae, the statements were inadmissible as admissions against interest because neither declarant was a party to the litigation; further, as the statements at issue were cumulative of other testimony that was admitted, the driver could not show prejudice by the trial court's exclusion thereof. Wynn v. City of Warner Robins, 279 Ga. App. 42, 630 S.E.2d 574 (2006).

Definite time required. — Declarations of an agent are not competent evidence against the agent's principal, when it does not appear when the declarations were made. Williams v. Harris, 105 Ga. App. 252, 124 S.E.2d 429 (1962).

Relevancy based on res gestae. — Relevancy of declarations or admissions of an agent cannot be based upon any idea that an ordinary agent or servant, by virtue of the relation to the principal, speaks in the place of the principal as the principal's alter ego;

but rests on the theory that what the principal does and says with reference to the act in controversy and while engaged in its performance is a part of the res gestae of the transaction and constitutes part of, and throws light upon, what the principal personally actually does. Baker v. H.E. Lowe Elec. Co., 47 Ga. App. 259, 170 S.E. 337 (1933).

Not admissible as part of res gestae. — Declaration of an insurance agent that the agent knew the insured had a heart condition and notified the company was not admissible because the admission covered a transaction which did not constitute a part of the res gestae of the negotiation of the sale of insurance to the insured. National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Hullender, 86 Ga. App. 438, 71 S.E.2d 754 (1952).

Testimony of witness was not admissible as part of the res gestae because the declarations of the agent were not made while the agent was engaged in a business transaction or otherwise acting for company. Swift & Co. v. Lawson, 95 Ga. App. 35, 97 S.E.2d 168 (1957).

Statement of a city clerk that the city accepted responsibility for an accident on a sidewalk was not part of the res gestae and was not admissible evidence creating a genuine issue of material fact as to the city's duty to maintain the sidewalk. Williams v. City of Social Circle, 225 Ga. App. 746, 484 S.E.2d 687 (1997).

In a premises liability action, the declaration of an employee tending to admit negligence that would be imputable to the employer made four years after the fact was not a part of the res gestae and was not admissible in evidence as an admission against interest inasmuch as the employee was not a party to the litigation. Harris v. Inn of Lake City, 285 Ga. App. 521, 647 S.E.2d 277 (2007).

Testimony excluded. — There was no evidence that a person was acting as the grantee's agent and speaking within the agent's authority so the trial court did not err in refusing to allow testimony as to a statement made by that person in a suit regarding the grantee's easement over an owner's property. A.A.L., Inc. v. Colonial Pipeline Co., 280 Ga. App. 237, 633 S.E.2d 560 (2006).

Unauthorized admissions. — Principal is not bound by the unauthorized admission of an agent unless the principal ratifies the admission. Hardware Mut. Cas. Co. v. Collier, 69 Ga. App. 235, 25 S.E.2d 136 (1943).

Action beyond scope of authority. — Although the admissions of an agent, made during the existence and in pursuance of the agent's power, are evidence against the principal the court erred in admitting the declarations of the defendant's bookkeeper with reference to the quality of the commodity furnished, where it appeared that the declarations were not made during the existence of any power delegated to the bookkeeper to act for the defendant in accepting the goods sued for, but were in fact made long after the time when the goods were received and accepted, and when it further was not made to appear that the bookkeeper was at any time clothed with authority to act for the defendant in accepting or rejecting the commodity furnished and sued for. Smith v. Vaughn, 37 Ga. App. 558, 140 S.E. 892 (1927).

Corporation can only make admissions through the corporate agents, and the admissions of such agents acting within the scope of the agent's powers and about the business of the agency are admissible. Timeplan Loan & Inv. Corp. v. Moorehead, 221 Ga. 648, 146 S.E.2d 748 (1966); White v. Front Page, Inc., 133 Ga. App. 749, 213 S.E.2d 32 (1975).

Testimony of corporate president. — While the testimony of a party in the party's own behalf must be construed most strongly against the party, if self-contradictory or equivocal, and, without other evidence of right to recover, the party is not entitled to a finding if the party's testimony, so construed, shows that the verdict should be against the party, and this rule is applicable against a corporate party, upon the testimony of the corporate president; it has never been extended beyond the president to other officers. McCoy v. Romy Hammes Corp., 99 Ga. App. 513, 109 S.E.2d 807 (1959).

Admissions of a president as the mouthpiece and alter ego of a corporation, as distinguished from an ordinary servant or agent, made even with reference to a previous transaction, are ordinarily admissible in evidence, provided the admissions are made in the due course of the president's official duties with reference to the particular transaction in controversy. Long Tobacco Harvesting Co. v. Brannen, 99 Ga. App. 541, 109 S.E.2d 90 (1959).

Corporate officer's admission in one action not binding against corporation in subsequent action. — An admission by a corporate officer in the officer's individual capacity in one action is not binding against the corporation in a subsequent action brought in the name of the corporation. Gregory v. J.T. Gregory & Son, 176 Ga. App. 788, 338 S.E.2d 7 (1985).

Conversations between employees admissible. — It was not error to allow defendant's employee to testify as to what another employee told that employee. Smoky, Inc. v. McCray, 196 Ga. App. 650, 396 S.E.2d 794, cert. denied, 196 Ga. App. 909, 396 S.E.2d 794 (1990).

Statement of one agent to another admissible. — Statements of an agent of one company, made in the course of the agent's employment, to the agent of another company, received in the course of that agent's employment, regarding the business of the two is admissible pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 10-6-64 and 24-3-33. Coffee Butler Serv., Inc. v. Sacha, 208 Ga. App. 4, 430 S.E.2d 149 (1993).

Statement made by the store manager in a slip and fall action pertaining to the identity of the slippery substance which allegedly caused the fall was admissible as an admission against interest or under the res gestae exception and was sufficient to raise a question of fact precluding summary judgment in favor of the store. Brown v. Piggly Wiggly S., Inc., 210 Ga. App. 459, 436 S.E.2d 513 (1993).

Statement of a store employee in a slip and fall action as to why the employee had not taken care of an ice patch in the parking lot was admissible as part of the res gestae when it was made directly after the plaintiff informed the employee of the plaintiff's fall and injuries. Quiktrip Corp. v. Childs, 220 Ga. App. 463, 469 S.E.2d 763 (1996).

Statement made just after plaintiff's fall by an unknown employee in the presence of the store manager that "if this floor had been mopped or kept mopped this wouldn't happen" was admissible as part of the res gestae and might also have been an admission against defendant store's interest.

Sutton v. Winn Dixie Stores, Inc., 233 Ga. App. 424, 504 S.E.2d 245 (1998).

Telephone conversations. — If the person on the other end of the telephone were sufficiently identified as an agent with authority to speak for the defendant company, then the conversation, which would have tended to prove that the defendant knew the plaintiff had been injured while a passenger in one of defendant's taxicabs, was admissible as an admission against interest for the reason that the defendant had denied in defendant's pleadings that the plaintiff was a passenger in one of defendant's taxicabs. Pope v. Associated Cab Co., 90 Ga. App. 560, 83 S.E.2d 310 (1954).

Homeowner's statement admissible in contracting case. — In a fraud and breach of contract case, testimony by a homeowner that a contractor's project supervisor told the homeowner the contractor would not repair leaks in the house was admissible for the non-hearsay purpose of explaining the homeowner's conduct in discharging the contractor and under the exception to the hearsay rule applicable to admissions by an agent. Lumpkin v. Deventer N. Am., Inc., 295 Ga. App. 312, 672 S.E.2d 405 (2008).

Erroneous admission. — Admission on the part of the agent which has the effect of imputing negligence to the principal, when not coming within one of the stated exceptions and not made by authority of the principal, is error. Southern Ry. v. Allen, 118 Ga. App. 645, 165 S.E.2d 194 (1968).

Jury questions. — In a medical malpractice action, whether a nurse anesthetist was the agent of an anesthesiology partnership, whether the partnership was the agent of the hospital, and whether there were any admissions in the medical records were for the jury to determine. Doctors Hosp. v. Bonner, 195 Ga. App. 152, 392 S.E.2d 897 (1990).

Attorneys

Attorney is such an agent of the attorney's client that the attorney's declarations made during the course of the attorney's employment may be offered against the attorney's principal. W.T. Harvey Lumber Co. v. J.M. Wells Lumber Co., 104 Ga. App. 498, 122 S.E.2d 143 (1961).

Clients are bound by statements of their attorneys made in open court. NAACP v. Pye, 96 Ga. App. 685, 101 S.E.2d 609 (1957).

Letters from attorney. — If writer of letter at the time was attorney for the plaintiff, the attorney's letter had probative value as an admission by the plaintiff through the attorney as plaintiff's attorney. Everitt v. Harris, 67 Ga. App. 64, 19 S.E.2d 545 (1942).

24-3-34. Admissions of real parties in interest.

Admissions by a real party in interest shall be admissible, even if he is not of record, subject to the exceptions stated in Code Section 24-3-31. (Orig. Code 1863, § 3708; Code 1868, § 3732; Code 1873, § 3785; Code 1882, § 3785; Civil Code 1895, § 5190; Civil Code 1910, § 5777; Code 1933, § 38-404.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

In general. — Admissions by persons not a party to an action are admissible in evidence only if the party making the admission is the real party in interest, although not a party to the record, or if a party to the record refers another to such third party for information, or if there is an admission by a third person against that person's interest as to a fact collateral to the main issue between the litigants but essential to the adjudication of the cause. Akin v. Randolph Motors, Inc., 95 Ga. App. 841, 99 S.E.2d 358 (1957); Cobb v. Garner, 158 Ga. App. 110, 279 S.E.2d 280 (1981).

Guilty pleas. — Rule, as to parties to a suit, is that, while convictions for criminal offenses are inadmissible in a civil action, a plea of guilty may be shown as an admission against interest. Akin v. Randolph Motors, Inc., 95 Ga. App. 841, 99 S.E.2d 358 (1957).

Legatee under will. — Sayings of a principal legatee under a will, though not a party to the record, are admissible in evidence to affect one's own interest only. Morris v. Stokes, 21 Ga. 552 (1857).

Holder of benefit life insurance. — Admissions or declarations by the holder of a benefit life insurance certificate, made before the certificate was issued and affecting the certificate's validity, are admissible against the person therein named as beneficiary, when the latter has no vested interest in the contract evidenced by such certificate. Supreme Conclave Knights of Damon v. O'Connell, 107 Ga. 97, 32 S.E. 946 (1899).

Conversations between employees admissible. — It was not error to allow defendant's employee to testify as to what another employee told that employee. Smoky, Inc. v. McCray, 196 Ga. App. 650, 396 S.E.2d 794, cert. denied, 196 Ga. App. 909, 396 S.E.2d 794 (1990).

Conversations not admissible. — In an action by lessors against guarantors, the affidavit of an attorney representing the guarantors, recalling a conversation the attorney had with an officer of the lessee, was not admissible because the statements therein were not against the interest of the officer, were self-serving and were not collateral to the main issue. Athens Int'l, Inc. v. Venture Capital Properties, Inc., 230 Ga. App. 286, 495 S.E.2d 900 (1998).

Admission of party opponent admissible. — Defendant's oral statement to a Georgia Bureau of Investigation agent, which outlined defendant's presence at the scene where defendant was arrested, was admissible as the admission of a party-opponent under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-34. Jewett v. State, 264 Ga. App. 571, 591 S.E.2d 459 (2003), overruled on other grounds, Vergara v. State, 283 Ga. 175, 657 S.E.2d 863 (2008).

Since a jury apparently decided to discount the defendant's involuntary intoxication defense, then the defendant's statement that the defendant felt drugged could have been viewed as incriminating, and was admissible as the admission of a party-opponent; nor was it relevant that the defendant's statement could have been used to show intoxication by either alcohol or drugs, since it was no valid ground of objection to the admission into evidence of an incriminating statement made by the accused in a criminal case that the language indicated that the accused had committed another offense. Donaldson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 407, 631 S.E.2d 443 (2006).

Admission against penal interest. — In a murder prosecution, the trial court did not err in permitting a police officer to testify as to what defendant told the officer in connection with the death of the victim; the incriminating statement was admissible as an admission against defendant's penal interest and was the admission of a party-opponent. Stanford v. State, 272 Ga. 267, 528 S.E.2d 246 (2000).

Physician's testimony that when the physician asked whether an animal or a person bit a murder defendant, the defendant said that the defendant's girlfriend did it, was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-34; a defendant's declaration against penal interest was the admission of a party opponent. Teal v. State, 282 Ga. 319, 647 S.E.2d 15 (2007).

Since defendant's voluntary, incriminating statements to third parties were admissible under an exception to the hearsay rule, as express or implied admissions against interest, defense counsel was not ineffective in failing to object to the statements. Brown v. State, 293 Ga. App. 633, 667 S.E.2d 899 (2008).

24-3-35. What admissions by third parties received in evidence.

The following admissions by third persons, strangers to a suit, shall be received in evidence:

(1) Statements made when a party refers another to such third person for information;

(2) Admissions by a third person which are against his interest, as to a fact collateral to the main issue between the litigants but essential to the adjudication of the cause;

(3) Statements by an interpreter where from any cause he cannot be sworn. (Orig. Code 1863, § 3709; Code 1868, § 3733; Code 1873, § 3786; Code 1882, § 3786; Civil Code 1895, § 5191; Civil Code 1910, § 5778; Code 1933, § 38-405.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

In general. — Sayings of one who is not a party to the case, or in privity with a party, are not admissible as evidence against either party. Bailey v. E.F. Wood & Co., 24 Ga. 164 (1858); Chastain & Luck v. Robinson, 30 Ga. 55 (1860).

When admission by person not a party to action is admissible. — Rule, as to parties to a suit, is that a plea of guilty may be shown as an admission against interest; admissions by persons not a party to an action, however, are admissible in evidence only if the party making the admission is the real party in interest, although not a party to the record, or if a party to the record refers another to such third party for information, or if there is an admission by a third person against that person's interest as to a fact collateral to the main issue between the litigants but essential to the adjudication of the cause. Cobb v. Garner, 158 Ga. App. 110, 279 S.E.2d 280 (1981).

Referral for information. — When certain documentary evidence is offered, which upon its face is not admissible, but is claimed to be admissible, it is not error to exclude such evidence when there is no evidence to show that either party had referred the other to the author of the evidence for information. Myers v. Adcock, 198 Ga. 180, 31 S.E.2d 160 (1944).

Information sought to be elicited from a witness as to the location of boundary line, having been obtained from another at the suggestion of one not a party to the case, was properly rejected by the trial court as hearsay, and was not admissible. Palmer v. Jackson, 86 Ga. App. 642, 72 S.E.2d 130 (1952).

Collateral to main issue. — Whatever may be meant by the language “collateral to the main issue but essential to the adjudication,” it is certainly not applicable if the statement bears directly upon the main issue in the case. Lewis v. American Rd. Ins. Co., 119 Ga. App. 507, 167 S.E.2d 729 (1969).

Collateral to main issue not found. — Extrajudicial admission of employee, who was not a party to the indemnity contract, nor a party to the suit, was not admissible as an admission by a stranger to the suit bearing upon a collateral issue essential to the adjudication as the admission was not collateral to the main issue involved, but bore directly upon the issue. Glens Falls Indem. Co. v. Gottlieb, 80 Ga. App. 634, 56 S.E.2d 799 (1949).

Letters. — There being evidence to authorize a finding by the jury that a conspiracy had existed as alleged, and it appearing from the uncontradicted testimony of the plaintiff that, during the existence of the conspiracy, one of the conspirators had referred the plaintiff to a third person, a stranger to the suit, for certain information connected with the subject matter of the conspiracy, it was not error to admit in evidence letters from the third person, pertaining to such information. Hill v. Reynolds, 19 Ga. App. 334, 91 S.E. 434 (1917).

Carbon copies of two letters written by parties to a case to one not a party, which are not otherwise admissible, are not admissible when there is nothing to show that either of the parties had referred the other to the letter's recipient for information. The fact that one of the parties was seeking information about the other does not bring the letter within the statute, and the letter would merely constitute hearsay evidence. Myers v. Adcock, 198 Ga. 180, 31 S.E.2d 160 (1944).

Title to account. — Plaintiff's contention being that the account sued upon was plaintiff's account, and the defendants contending that it was contracted with and belonged to others who were not parties to the suit, and there being no assignment of the account in writing, it was not competent for the plaintiff to prove oral admissions made by these strangers to the suit that the account belonged to the plaintiff, and that these strangers had no interest in the account. Churchman, Williams & Co. v. Robinson, 93 Ga. 731, 20 S.E. 215 (1894).

Entry on minutes of third party insurance company. — In an action upon a benefit certificate, an entry upon the minutes of another association to which the deceased had applied for a benefit certificate was not, in such a trial, admissible against the plaintiff, it not being shown that the deceased had anything to do with the making of this entry. Supreme Conclave Knights of Damon v. O'Connell, 107 Ga. 97, 32 S.E. 946 (1899).

An affidavit by a shooting victim urging nonprosecution of her defendant husband was not competent evidence. Freeman v. State, 233 Ga. 745, 213 S.E.2d 643 (1975).

Criminal confessions. — Statements by a third party to the effect that the third party, and not the accused, was the actual perpetrator of the offense, are not admissible in favor of the accused upon the accused's trial, nor does the fact that the party, whose confession is sought to be introduced, is in another state and unavailable as a witness, or that there is testimony tending to establish the guilt of the one making such confession, change the foregoing rule. Bryant v. State, 197 Ga. 641, 30 S.E.2d 259 (1944).

Declarations of third persons against the declarant's penal interest to the effect that the declarant, and not the accused, was the actual perpetrator of the offense, are not admissible in favor of the accused at the accused's trial, or to procure a new trial on the basis of newly discovered evidence. Timberlake v. State, 246 Ga. 488, 271 S.E.2d 792 (1980).

Witness's testimony as to a conversation the witness had with a child's mother was properly excluded as the mother testified and defendant did not ask the mother about the conversation. Georgia does not recognize a third party's admission against penal interest when that admission exculpates the defendant. Hood v. State, 273 Ga. App. 430, 615 S.E.2d 244 (2005).

Guilty pleas. — As to parties to a civil action, a guilty plea constitutes an admission against interest which is prima facie evidence of the facts admitted. Tomlinson, Inc. v. Roberts, 142 Ga. App. 134, 235 S.E.2d 721 (1977).

Party disclaiming title. — If the defendant in trover relies, amongst other things, upon paramount outstanding title in another, the acts and declarations of the third person, disclaiming title in oneself and acquiescing in the plaintiff's title, are admissible in evidence. White v. Dinkins, 19 Ga. 285 (1856).

Declaration of holder of negotiable instrument. — Party who acquires title to a bill or note, by endorsement, delivery, or otherwise, before due, but with express notice of any defect or incumbrance, insofar identified with the previous owner, that the previous owner's declarations or admissions while owner, may be received in evidence against such party. Glanton v. Griggs, 5 Ga. 424 (1848).

Affidavit of guarantor's attorney. — In an action by lessors against guarantors, the affidavit of an attorney representing the guarantors, recalling a conversation she had with an officer of the lessee, was not admissible because the statements therein were not against the interest of the officer, were self-serving, and were not collateral to the main issue. Athens Int'l, Inc. v. Venture Capital Properties, Inc., 230 Ga. App. 286, 495 S.E.2d 900 (1998).

General Consideration

Statute is a principle founded on common sense and common honesty, and administered day by day in courts of justice, not only in settling questions of property, but in deciding upon matters involving liberty and life. Markham v. O'Connor, 52 Ga. 183, 21 Am. R. 249 (1874).

Comment on silence not permitted. — In criminal cases, a comment upon a defendant's silence or failure to come forward is far more prejudicial than probative. Thus, after December 12, 1991, such a comment will not be allowed even if the defendant has not received Miranda warnings and when the defendant takes the stand in the defendant's own defense. State v. Mallory, 261 Ga. 625, 409 S.E.2d 839 (1991), overruling Fraley v. State, 256 Ga. 178, 345 S.E.2d 590 (1986). But see Clark v. State, 271 Ga. 6, 515 S.E.2d 155 (1999).

In a case in which ineffective assistance of counsel was claimed due to counsel's failure to object to a comment in the prosecutor's closing argument that the defendant could have given the defendant's version of the facts of a domestic dispute to the police, the appellate court improperly relied on exclusions to comments on a defendant's silence in Morrison v. State, 554 S.E.2d 190 (2001); the court overruled Morrison based on the bright-line rule in Mallory v. State, 409 S.E.2d 839 (1991), that, with reference to

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-36, that comment upon a defendant's silence or failure to come forward was far more prejudicial than probative. Reynolds v. State, 285 Ga. 70, 673 S.E.2d 854 (2009).

Mallory did not apply. — As the interpretation of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-36 in Mallory v. State, 409 S.E.2d 839 (1991), had only prospective application, it did not apply to the defendant's case, which was tried before Mallory was decided. Therefore, defense counsel's strategic decision not to object to the prosecutor's comment on the defendant's request for counsel was not prejudicial as a matter of law; in view of the overwhelming evidence of the defendant's guilt, the defendant did not establish a violation of the right to effective assistance of counsel. Patterson v. State, 285 Ga. 597, 679 S.E.2d 716 (2009), cert. denied, U.S. , 130 S. Ct. 1051, 175 L. Ed. 2d 892 (2010).

Reason of admission. — Ground for admission of the statement of a third person in the presence of the accused is that the omission to controvert the statement affords a basis for an inference of the statement's truth. Such statement is admissible in evidence, to show that it calls for a reply, and to show the acquiescence of the accused. Thomas v. State, 143 Ga. 268, 84 S.E. 587 (1915).

Estoppel. — When one under a duty to speak, fails to do so, one is thereafter estopped to deny what one's silence imports.

Cheek v. J. Allen Couch & Son Funeral Home, 125 Ga. App. 438, 187 S.E.2d 907 (1972).

Proof must be affirmative. — Saying of other persons are admissible against a party when it affirmatively appears that the party assented to the statements by the party's silence, or in some other way. Drumwright v. State, 29 Ga. 430 (1859); Williamson v. State, 29 Ga. App. 283, 114 S.E. 919 (1922); Ball v. State, 47 Ga. App. 844, 171 S.E. 726 (1933).

Circumstances Requiring Response

Circumstances must require an answer. — It is only when the circumstances require an answer or denial that silence may amount to an admission. Graham v. State, 118 Ga. 807, 45 S.E. 616 (1903).

Trial court did not err in granting summary judgment to manufacturer on the purchaser's breach of warranty claim regarding a copier that made more poor, unusable copies; although the purchaser wrote a letter to the manufacturer about the problems, the letter did not reference either express or implied warranties, or request any specific relief, and, thus, the manufacturer's lack of a reply could not be construed as an admission. McQueen v. Minolta Bus. Solutions, Inc., 275 Ga. App. 297, 620 S.E.2d 391 (2005).

Accused must hear statements. — When it is sought to charge a prisoner by reason of sayings of the prisoner's spouse in regard to the crime for which the prisoner is tried, and acquiesced in by the prisoner's silence, such sayings must have been in the prisoner's immediate presence, where the prisoner could hear distinctly all that was said; otherwise the statements would be inadmissible. Jones v. State, 65 Ga. 147 (1880).

Before evidence can be admitted in a criminal case to show acquiescence of the accused, by silence, in statements made by the officer who arrested the accused to another officer, as to the sayings and conduct of the accused when arrested, it must affirmatively appear that the accused was present and heard the inculpatory statements made against the accused, and by silence, acquiesced in the statements. Simmons v. State, 115 Ga. 574, 41 S.E. 983 (1902).

Admissions should be direct and call for contradiction. — Admissions of a party, which are to be inferred from the party's acquiescence in the verbal statements of others, made in the party's presence, ought to be regarded with great caution, and unless the evidence be of such direct declarations, and of that kind which naturally call for a contradiction, or some assertions made to the party with respect to the party's right, which by the party's silence the party acquiesces in, it ought not to be received at all. Rolfe v. Rolfe, 10 Ga. 143 (1851).

Proof of circumstances. — Before the sayings of a third person, made in the presence of one who is subsequently charged with the commission of a criminal offense, should be admitted in evidence against the accused, there should be proof affirmatively disclosing that the circumstances were such as to call upon the accused to make some response to what was said in the accused's presence. The circumstances must require an answer or denial, or other conduct, before silence will amount to an implied admission. Lumpkin v. State, 125 Ga. 24, 53 S.E. 810 (1906).

Person under arrest. — When a statement tending to incriminate a person is made in the person's presence and the person remains silent, the mere fact that the person is under arrest or is in custody at the time will not render evidence of such statement and silence inadmissible as an implied admission. Creel v. State, 216 Ga. 233, 115 S.E.2d 552 (1960).

Police interrogation is not such a circumstance as requires an answer or denial so as to authorize charging this statute in a criminal case. Howard v. State, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976).

Procedural Considerations

Value of admission as evidence. — Failure to controvert an accusation is not an affirmative act on the part of the accused expressive of guilt of the crime charged. Its evidentiary value is that of an incriminating admission to be considered along with the other circumstances in inferring the guilt of the accused. Thomas v. State, 143 Ga. 268, 84 S.E. 587 (1915).

Question for jury. — Question of whether the defendant in fact heard the statement in question was for the jury; and if the jury found under the fact that the defendant did hear the statement, it would be a further question for them to determine whether under the circumstances an answer or a denial or other conduct was required, and also whether the defendant's acquiescence or silence under such circumstances amounted to an admission. Perry v. State, 78 Ga. App. 273, 50 S.E.2d 709 (1948).

It is allowable to repeat an entire conversation, which occurred between the witness and a party, which consisted, amongst other things, of distinct charges made by the witness, and which were silently acquiesced in, or answered and justified. Morris v. Stokes, 21 Ga. 552 (1857); Dixon v. Edwards, 48 Ga. 142 (1873).

Since it was not the statement of a third person which was admitted as substantive evidence, but only the fact of the accused's failure to deny the statement, the admissibility of such testimony was in no way affected by the fact that the incriminating statement was uttered by one who was incompetent to testify against defendant as a witness in a criminal prosecution. Perry v. State, 78 Ga. App. 273, 50 S.E.2d 709 (1948).

Scope of instructions. — In charging a jury the rule contained in statute, the court should not fail to instruct the jury, in connection with that rule, that the jury are to determine whether or not, under all the circumstances, an answer or denial was required. Hammond v. State, 156 Ga. 880, 120 S.E. 539 (1923).

Trial court properly charged a jury regarding the O.C.G.A. § 24-3-36 evidentiary presumption arising from a limited liability company's (LLC's) agent's failure to reply to a corporation's invoices because the LLC admitted receiving some of the corporation's goods and services, only disputing the amount due, and the failure to respond to an invoice was not a declaration against the LLC's interest pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 10-6-64; in addition, the charge was supported by O.C.G.A. § 24-4-23. Forrest Cambridge Apts., LLC v. Redi-Floors, Inc., 295 Ga. App. 840, 673 S.E.2d 318 (2009).

It is reversible error to instruct the jury in a criminal case according to this statute that silence or acquiescence by a person in police custody may amount to an admission of guilt. Howard v. State, 237 Ga. 471, 228 S.E.2d 860 (1976).

Evidence was sufficient to authorize instruction based on O.C.G.A. § 24-3-36 in the following cases. — See Eberhart v. State, 88 Ga. App. 501, 76 S.E.2d 832 (1953); Bloodworth v. State, 216 Ga. 572, 118 S.E.2d 374 (1961).

Ineffective counsel not shown. — Although, under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-36, the state's witness's testimony that a defendant did not respond to a detective's questions was more prejudicial to defendant than it was probative of defendant's guilt, defendant did not show how that testimony affected the outcome of the trial such that defense counsel was ineffective for not objecting to the testimony or requesting a special instruction. Bruce v. State, 268 Ga. App. 677, 603 S.E.2d 33 (2004).

Illustrations and Applications

General denial by accused. — When the prisoner made a flat denial of any knowledge of or complicity in the offense, such denial is a disavowal of the act as the prisoner's act; and though the prisoner may not in detail deny each minor incriminating circumstance which may be charged against the prisoner, the prisoner's general denial is sufficient to exclude the idea of an implied admission. Ware v. State, 96 Ga. 349, 23 S.E. 410 (1895).

Principle that acquiescence or silence, when the circumstances require an answer or denial, may amount to an admission, has no application to a criminal cause when a person accused by another with the commission of an offense, immediately denies all knowledge of, or complicity in, its commission, even though such denial be in general terms and does not in detail extend to each of the minor incriminating circumstances charged against the person. Westberry v. State, 174 Ga. 646, 163 S.E. 729 (1932).

Witness's comment on defendant's pre-arrest silence not prejudicial. — With regard to convictions for aggravated assault and related crimes, defendant failed to show that trial counsel was ineffective for failing to object or move for a mistrial when a security officer commented on defendant's pre-arrest silence, namely that defendant did not speak up as to owning the type of vehicle used to perpetrate the crimes; even if testimony on defendant's pre-arrest silence had been objectionable, defendant failed to show any prejudice since other evidence showed that defendant drove to the police station in defendant's truck and consented to a search of that vehicle. Gibson v. State, 291 Ga. App. 183, 661 S.E.2d 850 (2008).

Admission of agents or attorneys. — Admission by agents or attorneys are not admissible in criminal cases in the sense in which the admissions are admissible in civil cases. The admissions should not be treated as evidence against the accused, unless shown to have been authorized by the accused. Farmer v. State, 190 Ga. 41, 28 S.E. 26 (1896).

Misstatement of opposing counsel. — Silence is estopped when attorney failed to deny misstatement of opposing counsel, in reply to a question of court, as to whether a certain allegation was denied by plea. Cuthbert Ice Co. v. York Mfg. Co., 20 Ga. App. 695, 93 S.E. 279 (1917).

Acquiescence by agent. — Where a son informs his father that his employer would prosecute unless the father signed a mortgage to secure the son's shortage, silence of the employer's agent, who was present, adopted the threat, and was duress. Small v. Williams, 87 Ga. 681, 13 S.E. 589 (1891).

Entries in bank pass book. — In a suit by a decedent's administrator against a bank for the recovery of a deposit claimed to be due the estate, a failure of the depositor to make objection to entries of the bank in the depositor's pass book could be accounted as an admission on the depositor's part as to the correctness of the statement. Cheney v. Bank of Bremen, 25 Ga. App. 114, 102 S.E. 903 (1920).

Silence regarding terms of agreement. — Physician had a duty and obligation to respond to limitations on the physician's privileges set forth in an agreement with a hospital, and when the physician silently exercised the privileges for several years, the physician waived the physician's right to insist on compliance with other procedural requirements pertaining to the physician's termination. St. Mary's Hosp. v. Cohen, 216 Ga. App. 761, 456 S.E.2d 79 (1995).

Advertising person as partner. — An advertisement in a local newspaper, which contained the statement that a certain person was a member of a named partnership and which was paid for by such person, was admissible to show an ostensible partnership, though such person did not authorize the statement in the advertisement that the person was a partner. English v. Moore, 28 Ga. App. 265, 110 S.E. 737, later appeal, 29 Ga. App. 307, 114 S.E. 921 (1922).

Admitting responsibility for personal injuries. — Statements made by one person in the presence of another to the effect that the latter was alone responsible for injuries the person had received, may, if silently acquiesced in by the person amount to an admission on the person's part, that such statements are true. Holston v. Southern Ry., 116 Ga. 656, 43 S.E. 29 (1902).

Admission of coconspirator. — Evidence as to admissions of guilt involving the defendant, made by a coconspirator after the termination of the conspiracy, is admissible when it appears that the admissions were made in the presence of the defendant personally and were then freely and voluntarily declared by the defendant to be true. Gunter v. State, 19 Ga. App. 772, 92 S.E. 314 (1917).

When the evidence is sufficient on the trial of a criminal case to authorize a finding that the defendant and another were engaged in a criminal conspiracy, and the alleged codefendant thereafter makes a confession in the presence of the defendant which involves both parties, the silence of the defendant under such circumstances may amount to an implied admission. Brown v. State, 121 Ga. App. 228, 173 S.E.2d 470 (1970).

Codefendants. — When a joint statement was made and signed by all three defendants in the presence of each other, the statement of each was the statement of all, and so far as the writing contained statements by others than the defendant on trial, proof of such statements, together with the defendant's assent, constituted evidence of an admission by the defendant. Morris v. State, 177 Ga. 106, 169 S.E. 495 (1933).

When the state shows affirmatively that one jointly indicted with a defendant made statements in the presence of the defendant charging the defendant with the commission of the crime, and the defendant either stood mute or failed to deny the charge, the evidence would change in character from hearsay to that of an implied admission by the defendant. Long v. State, 205 Ga. 257, 53 S.E.2d 365 (1949).

Statements of wife. — Evidence of a third party as to statements of a wife that her husband had just beaten her, made in the presence of the husband without denial on his part and under such circumstances that his silence amounted to an admission, is admissible on the trial of the husband for wife-beating, although the wife declines to testify at the trial against her husband. Joiner v. State, 119 Ga. 315, 46 S.E. 412 (1904).

Incriminating statements by intoxicated person. — When a witness made certain incriminating statements as to defendants in their presence and which defendants did not deny, and it was shown that this man was drunk and maudlin, and that the defendants were greatly frightened by the man's conduct, such statements of the witness did not measure up to the requirements of the law necessary to show an implied confession by silence or acquiescence and it was error to admit such statements in evidence. Jones v. State, 2 Ga. App. 433, 58 S.E. 559 (1907).

Ratification of paper. — Mere silence of a party when a paper is handed to that party is no evidence of the ratification of the transaction evidenced by the paper, when the person handling the paper is not one to whom dissent would be appropriately expressed. Berry v. Cooper, 33 Ga. 155 (1864).

Silence during trial. — When a plaintiff or defendant introduces a witness in court, the acquiescence or silence of the party during the progress of the trial would not amount to an admission, the circumstances at that time not requiring an answer or denial. McElmurray v. Turner, 86 Ga. 215, 12 S.E. 359 (1890).

Declarations of bystanders. — Evidence as to a declaration of a bystander, accusing one then present of the commission of a criminal act, which declaration the accused person heard but failed to deny or explain, may tend to establish the accused's guilt, and is admissible on the accused's trial for such offense. Thurman v. State, 14 Ga. App. 534, 81 S.E. 796 (1914); Love v. State, 69 Ga. App. 411, 25 S.E.2d 827 (1943).

Doctor's conversation with a patient was not an admission by silence as the patient did not ask the doctor why the doctor failed to biopsy a breast lesion and no explanation was required; that the doctor stated that they should discuss the patient's concerns at a later time could not be construed as silence or acquiescence in the face of the patient's concerns. Davis v. Reid, 272 Ga. App. 312, 612 S.E.2d 112 (2005).

Failure to deny inculpatory statements was held admissible in the following cases. — See Moye v. State, 66 Ga. 740 (1881); Davis v. State, 114 Ga. 104, 39 S.E. 906 (1901); Clark v. State, 117 Ga. 254, 43 S.E. 853 (1903); Watson v. State, 136 Ga. 236, 71 S.E. 122 (1911); Nunn v. State, 143 Ga. 451, 85 S.E. 346 (1915); Gates v. State, 20 Ga. App. 171, 92 S.E. 974 (1917); Holt v. State, 28 Ga. App. 758, 113 S.E. 49 (1922); Smiley v. State, 156 Ga. 60, 118 S.E. 713 (1923); Walker v. State, 197 Ga. 221, 28 S.E.2d 656 (1944); Clark v. Woodward, 76 Ga. App. 181, 45 S.E.2d 473 (1947).

Letter memorializing a conversation, to which recipient failed to respond, was admissible as an admission by silence. — Trial court did not err in allowing an attorney to read a letter memorializing a conversation between him and a decedent because the out-of-court statement of the decedent referenced in the letter was admissible as an admission by silence of the executor when the attorney mailed a package containing closing documents to the executor, including a receipt the decedent had executed, and the executor mailed a check to the attorney based on the erroneous assumption that the executor needed to do so in order to pay off the advance that had been received and was referenced in the receipt; the attorney mailed the letter to the executor, returned the check, and set forth the conversation with the decedent concerning the intent behind the receipt, and the executor's failure to respond could be construed as an acquiescence to the construction of the receipt set forth in the letter. Jerkins v. Jerkins, 300 Ga. App. 703, 686 S.E.2d 324 (2009).

Evidence was properly held inadmissible in the following case. — See Chedel v. Mooney, 158 Ga. 297, 123 S.E. 300 (1924).

Trial court improperly instructed the jury that acquiescence or silence, when the circumstances required an answer, a denial, or other conduct, could amount to an admission because a charge in the language of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-36 could be construed as a comment on the defendant's constitutional right to remain silent; however, the improper jury instruction was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt because the charge as a whole contained sufficient clarity so as not to mislead the jury concerning the exercise of the right to remain silent, there was no reference at trial that could be construed as a comment on the defendant's exercise of his right to remain silent, the evidence of guilt was overwhelming, and the erroneous charge in no way pointed directly at the substance of the defendant's defense. Ruiz v. State, 286 Ga. 146, 686 S.E.2d 253 (2009).

General Consideration

Statute enlarges the common-law rule, which did not exclude the admission of distinct facts. McElrath v. Haley, 48 Ga. 641 (1873).

Distinction between compromise and settlement. — There is a distinction between an offer or proposition to compromise a doubtful or disputed claim, and an offer to settle upon certain terms a claim that is unquestioned. An admission made in an offer of the latter character will be admissible when one made in an offer of the former character will not. See as bearing somewhat on the point, Hatcher v. Bowen, 74 Ga. 840 (1885); Cooper v. Jones, 79 Ga. 379, 4 S.E. 916 (1887); Akers v. Kirke, 91 Ga. 590, 18 S.E. 366 (1893); Teasley v. Bradley, 110 Ga. 497, 35 S.E. 782, 78 Am. St. R. 113 (1900); Austin v. Long, 5 Ga. App. 551, 63 S.E. 640 (1909); Wilson v. Wilder, 23 Ga. App. 30, 97 S.E. 447 (1918). See also Lewis v. Joyner, 29 Ga. App. 92, 113 S.E. 829 (1922); Broyles v. Haas, 48 Ga. App. 321, 172 S.E. 742 (1934); Pacific Nat'l Fire Ins. Co. v. Beavers, 87 Ga. App. 294, 73 S.E.2d 765 (1952).

An admission made in an offer to settle will be admissible while one made in an offer to compromise will not be admissible. Charter Mtg. Co. v. Ahouse, 165 Ga. App. 497, 300 S.E.2d 328 (1983).

Trial court erred in denying a homeowner the opportunity to cross-examine the chairman of a homeowners' association's architectural control committee regarding independent facts that demonstrated the association's violation of the restrictive covenants in the subdivision as those statements were not part of admissions towards settlement negotiations that should have been excluded under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37; the homeowner was being sued for not having sought prior approval of the committee prior to commencing construction, and the homeowner's attempt to show that the association had violated the covenants when the homeowner submitted the proper paperwork for the construction, after the lawsuit was filed, and the association did not respond in a timely manner was relevant to the issues being litigated. Bounds v. Coventry Green Homeowners' Ass'n, 268 Ga. App. 69, 601 S.E.2d 440 (2004).

Benevolent gestures encouraged. — Evidence of activity constituting a voluntary offer of assistance made on the impulse of benevolence or sympathy should be encouraged and should not be considered as an admission of liability. Deese v. Carroll City County Hosp., 203 Ga. App. 148, 416 S.E.2d 127 (1992).

Basis for rule. — Rule against allowing evidence of compromise is founded upon recognition of the fact that such testimony is inherently harmful for the jury will draw conclusions therefrom, in spite of anything said by the parties at the time of discussing the compromise, and in spite of anything which may be said by the judge in instructing the jury as to the weight to be given such evidence. Newton Bros. v. Shank, 240 Ga. 471, 241 S.E.2d 231 (1978); Central Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Dixon, 188 Ga. App. 680, 373 S.E.2d 849 (1988).

Statute was created in order to encourage settlements by letting a party which makes an admission or proposition with a view toward compromise rest assured that the party's good-faith settlement attempt will not later be used against the party in court. Benn v. McBride, 140 Ga. App. 698, 231 S.E.2d 438 (1976).

Purpose of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37 is to encourage settlements and protect parties who freely engage in negotiations directed toward resolution of lawsuits. Computer Communications Specialists, Inc. v. Hall, 188 Ga. App. 545, 373 S.E.2d 630 (1988).

Statute seems to be very broad and excludes the introduction in evidence of propositions with a view to compromise and also admissions made with a view to compromise. Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Wells, 78 Ga. App. 859, 52 S.E.2d 496 (1949).

Proscription of propositions made with view to compromise refers to civil, not criminal, cases. Reed v. State, 163 Ga. App. 364, 295 S.E.2d 108 (1982).

Exclusion of extrinsic evidence. — When parol evidence regarding a refund and repair was contained in an offer of compromise, such evidence was properly excluded. Topeka Mach. Exch., Inc. v. Stoler Indus., Inc., 220 Ga. App. 799, 470 S.E.2d 250 (1996).

Defendant challenging witness's testimony based on fifth amendment. — Defendant in a civil action lacks standing to challenge the admission of testimony given in a previous criminal action on the ground that such action violated the witness's fifth amendment rights or the immunity agreement between the witness and the state. The privilege against self-incrimination is that of the person under examination as a witness and is intended for that person's protection only. Kesler v. Veal, 165 Ga. App. 475, 300 S.E.2d 217 (1983).

Application and Illustrations

Statute applies to civil cases and not to criminal cases. Moore v. State, 230 Ga. 839, 199 S.E.2d 243 (1973); Jones v. State, 137 Ga. App. 612, 224 S.E.2d 473 (1976); Williams v. State, 178 Ga. App. 216, 342 S.E.2d 703 (1986).

Application and Illustrations (Cont'd)

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37 applied to preclude the introduction into evidence of offers of compromise, although the evidence of such offers was propounded by the offeror. Davidson v. American Fitness Ctrs., Inc., 171 Ga. App. 691, 320 S.E.2d 824 (1984).

Question made to explore compromise offer excluded. — Exclusion of the defendant's question, "What is it going to take to make you folks happy?," was appropriate. The statement was an effort to explore an offer to compromise a claim still being disputed. Houston v. Kinder-Care Learning Ctrs., Inc., 208 Ga. App. 235, 430 S.E.2d 24 (1993).

Separate judicial proceeding. — Unsigned memoranda of proposals made within the confines of probate court administration proceedings were properly admissible in a later action to recover property of an estate. Myers v. Myers, 195 Ga. App. 529, 394 S.E.2d 374 (1990).

Rebuttal of admitted testimony. — When there was sufficient offer of proof by appellant on the issue, the trial court erred by excluding settlement negotiation evidence, which was admissible for the limited but permissible purpose of rebutting appellee's testimony about an unconditional offer. Holbrook Contracting, Inc. v. Tyner, 181 Ga. App. 838, 354 S.E.2d 22 (1987).

When statement not made with view to compromise. — O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37 did not apply to a statement that the appellant owned decedent's interest in land and had a deed to prove ownership because this admission was not offered with a view to a compromise or settlement proposition, and no evidence existed to show that the statement was made with a view to a compromise. Graves v. Graves, 252 Ga. 27, 310 S.E.2d 901 (1984).

Although civil engineer's testimony may have been construable as referring to an offer to compromise a claim, the engineer's brief reference to a discussion regarding reimbursement of defendant-homeowner for corrective measures against soil erosion produced by developer-plaintiff did not require grant of a mistrial. Ross v. Hagler, 209 Ga. App. 201, 433 S.E.2d 124 (1993).

Defendant's unsolicited offer to settle for the entire amount claimed by plaintiff was an offer to settle and not a proposition to compromise and was admissible at trial. Charter Mtg. Co. v. Ahouse, 165 Ga. App. 497, 300 S.E.2d 328 (1983).

An admission adduced at a criminal trial pursuant to a grant of immunity from prosecution is not an admission "obtained by constraint" within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37. Kesler v. Veal, 165 Ga. App. 475, 300 S.E.2d 217 (1983).

Guilty plea to a reduced criminal charge is proper evidence as an admission in a subsequent civil action, despite the fact that the admission was the result of a compromise in the criminal case. Kesler v. Veal, 165 Ga. App. 475, 300 S.E.2d 217 (1983).

Admission when no effort made to compromise. — An admission of liability contained in an offer to settle, brought about by a simple demand for settlement, is not inadmissible on the ground that such admission was "made with a view to a compromise," when there is nothing whatever to indicate that there has been any effort to compromise, and when it cannot be inferred from the circumstances under which the offer was made that there has been such an effort. Williams v. Smith, 71 Ga. App. 632, 31 S.E.2d 873 (1944); Campbell v. Mutual Serv. Corp., 152 Ga. App. 493, 263 S.E.2d 202 (1979).

No specific terms of compromise suggested. — Even if a general proposition of settlement has been made by one party, the admissions of the opposite party may be admissible if no specific terms of compromise have been suggested, and the admissions of a party who may desire a settlement are not to be excluded when, so far as appears from the evidence, the opposite party did nothing to induce the statement, and did not contemplate a compromise or abatement of the party's demand. Pacific Nat'l Fire Ins. Co. v. Beavers, 87 Ga. App. 294, 73 S.E.2d 765 (1952).

Evidence of a settlement agreement is admissible when the parties have successfully reached a posture of agreement settling the issues between the parties. Building Assocs. v. Crider, 141 Ga. App. 825, 234 S.E.2d 666 (1977).

Settlement negotiations are not admissible in evidence, and do not constitute a "waiver" of either party's claim or defense. Citadel Corp. v. Sun Chem. Corp., 212 Ga. App. 875, 443 S.E.2d 489 (1994).

General partners' motion for a new trial was properly denied as evidence of the limited partners' attempts to liquidate their interests in the partnership was properly excluded as evidence of settlement negotiations. Kellett v. Kumar, 281 Ga. App. 120, 635 S.E.2d 310 (2006).

Since a telephone conversation transcript between plaintiff and defendant showed that defendant made an offer as an effort to compromise a claim which was still being disputed, the trial court did not err in excluding this evidence. Stover v. Candle Corp. of Am., 238 Ga. App. 657, 520 S.E.2d 7 (1999).

Application to pleadings. — An offer to compromise a disputed claim is no more allowable in pleadings than in evidence. Malcolm v. Dobbs, 127 Ga. 487, 56 S.E. 622 (1907).

Independent statements of fact. — Admissions which are to be rejected because "made with a view to a compromise," within the terms of the statute, are those admissions which are made as a concession to bring about a compromise or settlement; but independent statements of fact by a party, even though made while the parties are trying to settle, are not necessarily inadmissible. Scales v. Shackleford, 61 Ga. 170 (1879); Austin v. Long, 5 Ga. App. 551, 63 S.E. 640 (1909) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37).

While offers of compromise, with the view to settle or prevent litigation, are inadmissible, yet an independent acknowledgement of a fact may be received, although made pending a treaty for the amicable adjustment of a controversy. Blakely Hardwood Lumber Co. v. Reynolds Bros. Lumber Co., 173 Ga. 602, 160 S.E. 775 (1931).

Evidence material to other issues. — Terms of a proposition to compromise made to a party, and the party's reply thereto, are admissible in evidence against the party when the reply is material on certain issues. Lucas v. Parsons, 27 Ga. 593 (1859).

Conversation between an attorney for the beneficiary and a proper official of the company is admissible for the purpose of illustrating, if it does, good or bad faith of the company in refusing to pay the amount claimed when the evidence negatives an effort to compromise. Progressive Life Ins.

Co. v. Smith, 71 Ga. App. 157, 30 S.E.2d 411 (1944).

When there was no testimony from which an inference would arise that the offer of the defendant insurance company to pay $1000.00 as the cash value of a barn destroyed by fire was offered in a spirit of compromise, liability to pay the amount of loss being undisputed, it was not error to allow such testimony as tending to show the value placed upon the property by the defendant, since one of the major issues of the case was whether or not the amount of the award was so grossly inadequate as to constitute a badge of fraud. Pacific Nat'l Fire Ins. Co. v. Beavers, 87 Ga. App. 294, 73 S.E.2d 765 (1952).

While evidence as to settlement negotiations ordinarily is inadmissible at a trial to determine the issue of liability, after a divorce and alimony case has been settled by agreement (except as to attorney fees), the effort needed by counsel to reach such settlement is a matter which can be considered in determining the amount of attorney fees to be awarded. Fenters v. Fenters, 238 Ga. 131, 231 S.E.2d 741 (1977).

Evidence material to claim for attorney's fees. — In a breach of contract action with regard to the installation of a landscape irrigation system, the trial court did not err by allowing the irrigation company to rely upon two pre-litigation letters from the customer during the customer's cross-examination as the question was not intended to solicit evidence to prove the validity of the irrigation company's claim or the amount at issue. Rather, the letters were offered to support the company's claim for attorney fees. Christie v. Rainmaster Irrigation, Inc., 299 Ga. App. 383, 682 S.E.2d 687 (2009).

Introduction into evidence of an agreement to delay trial or ancillary proceedings was not prohibited because neither the agreement nor any testimony showed that the agreement was executed with a view to compromise. Kaiser v. Simmons, 52 Ga. App. 355, 183 S.E. 343 (1936).

Statute did not apply to a defendant's statements to the plaintiff to the effect that defendant had damaged the plaintiff's property and that defendant would pay the full amount of damage in a few days and the remainder after finding what the damage would be. Wilson v. Wilder, 23 Ga. App. 30, 97 S.E. 447 (1918).

When an offer is one to pay the hospital bill rather than an offer to settle or compromise the defendant's liability or the prosecutor's right to proceed with a bastardy prosecution, the evidence was admissible and does not come within the proscription of the statute. Fowler v. State, 111 Ga. App. 856, 143 S.E.2d 553 (1965).

Demands for settlement. — There was no error in allowing complainant's attorney to show that demands were made on the defendant for a settlement of the matters in controversy, and the refusal of the latter to comply with such demand. This differs from admitting in evidence negotiations for a compromise. Mayor of Columbus v. Howard, 6 Ga. 213 (1849); Sasser v. Sasser, 73 Ga. 275 (1884).

When the same substantial facts affect equally the claims of three clients, that the attorney has settled with one is evidence for the others on an action brought by the clients and is not excluded. Howland v. Barlett, 86 Ga. 669, 12 S.E. 1068 (1891).

No offer to compromise found. — In action on contract for sale of land, when vendee agrees to deliver truck to vendor as part of consideration, statement of plaintiff vendor that plaintiff had offered to leave settlement of dispute as to condition the truck was to be in "to disinterested men," after testifying that defendant vendee would do nothing toward fixing the truck, did not show such an offer or proposition made with a view to compromise as to come within the prohibition of the statute. Walker v. Smith, 87 Ga. App. 517, 74 S.E.2d 374 (1953).

An admission is not admissible in evidence as an admission of guilt if the admission was made with a view to compromise or to effect a postponement of the case and was, therefore, not made freely and voluntarily by the defendant. Jester v. State, 133 Ga. App. 652, 211 S.E.2d 909 (1975).

Evidence of a tender of money designed to prevent the rebuilding of a dam alleged to be a nuisance related to a proposition with a view to compromise, and was not admissible. Mayor of Montezuma v. Minor, 73 Ga. 484 (1884).

Evidence of a settlement with a third person injured in the same casualty ought to be excluded. Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Larsen, 52 Ga. App. 140, 182 S.E. 677 (1935).

Conservator's argument that the probate court improperly considered an offer of compromise and settlement by the conservator's surety for $25,000 to settle the claims of the ward's estate against the conservator was rejected. The probate court was aware of the offer but nothing in the record indicated that the court assigned any probative value to the fact that the administrator and the surety had agreed to settle the estate's claim against the conservator. In re Hudson, 300 Ga. App. 340, 685 S.E.2d 323 (2009).

Statements by attorney. — When an attorney for the plaintiff met with a member of the plaintiff's firm and the defendant for the purpose of discussing an account in issue between the parties, and made statements including that the attorney hoped they would be able to settle it without any resort to the courts, admissions by the defendant which were induced by such suggestions were inadmissible as evidence in behalf of the plaintiff in a subsequent suit upon the account. Hill Bros. v. Render, 33 Ga. App. 13, 125 S.E. 79 (1924).

Letters. — Letter written by the attorney of record for plaintiff to attorney of record for defendant, containing admissions as to client's indebtedness to defendant, and offering a compromise settlement pending litigation, was not admissible in evidence. Georgia Chem. Works v. Malcolm, 186 Ga. 275, 197 S.E. 763 (1938).

Letter written with a view toward settlement, and cross-examination of a witness in regard to that letter are properly excluded as not being proper evidence. Brooks v. Fincher, 150 Ga. App. 201, 257 S.E.2d 326 (1979).

In dispossessory proceeding wherein plaintiff alleged that defendant was plaintiff's tenant and was holding over, letter written to plaintiff by defense attorney with a view toward settlement and compromise between plaintiff and bank being represented by defense attorney following defendant's bankruptcy was properly refused admission into evidence. Hogan v. Tiger Auto Parts, Inc., 163 Ga. App. 448, 294 S.E.2d 655 (1982).

Plaintiff's letter which did not make a demand for an exact sum but instead set out what plaintiff believed was owed to plaintiff and invited the defendant to respond and to set forth defendant's contentions and defendant's letter which set forth a figure defendant was willing to pay which amounted to a difference of less than $400 than the amount plaintiff used in plaintiff's letter constituted evidence of offers of compromise on behalf of each of the parties and therefore was inadmissible as evidence. Allen v. Brackett, 165 Ga. App. 415, 301 S.E.2d 486 (1983).

Correspondence from plaintiff's former attorney, written within the context of good faith negotiations, was properly excluded. McDevitt & Street Co. v. K-C Air Conditioning Serv., Inc., 203 Ga. App. 640, 418 S.E.2d 87, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 906, 418 S.E.2d 87 (1992).

In the slip and fall case, the owner should have been barred under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37 from admitting into evidence certain portions of a letter, allegedly conflicting with the occupant's position at trial, sent by the occupant to the owner setting out the reasons for the fall and seeking to enter settlement negotiations; the letter's statement as to how the occupant fell was made with a view toward compromise of the claim, and it was an offer to compromise a doubtful or disputed claim. Nevitt v. CMD Realty Inv. Fund IV, L.P., 282 Ga. App. 533, 639 S.E.2d 336 (2006).

Neither O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37 nor O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37.1 prevented admitting letter from defendant medical device manufacturer because there was evidence plaintiff patient's surgeon requested that manufacturer pay for third surgery to replace the device, and the letter in response confirmed the terms; further, there was evidence the offer was made to maintain the surgeon's goodwill due to number of devices the surgeon implanted in patients on a yearly basis. Trickett v. Advanced Neuromodulation Sys., 542 F. Supp. 2d 1338 (S.D. Ga. 2008).

Insurance claims. — In an action by the assignee of a claim under a fire insurance policy, evidence as to whether other companies, having policies covering the same property, had paid claims under those policies, is inadmissible. Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Larsen, 52 Ga. App. 140, 182 S.E. 677 (1935).

Evidence that the plaintiff, in attempting to discuss plaintiff's claims arising out of an automobile collision, could not get a response from the defendant, plaintiff's insurer, did not show "negotiations and offers of compromise or settlement," which are not proper evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37, but was properly admitted under O.C.G.A. § 13-6-11 to show that the defendant acted in bad faith, or was stubbornly litigious, or put the plaintiff to unnecessary trouble or expense. U-Haul Co. v. Ford, 171 Ga. App. 744, 320 S.E.2d 868 (1984).

In action for abuse of process, the trial court properly allowed the plaintiff to testify as to the offers of settlement made by the defendant's attorney immediately prior to trial. The settlement offers were not made during the course of the litigation in which they were offered in evidence, but in the context of settling the original suit by the defendant. Ostroff v. Coyner, 187 Ga. App. 109, 369 S.E.2d 298 (1988).

Conditional offer to pay half of claim. — When a person holds a claim against another in a certain amount, a proposition by the latter to pay one-half of the claim provided another person pays the other half, is a proposal of compromise, and inadmissible. This is true even assuming that the person making the proposal and such other person are partners. English v. Moore, 28 Ga. App. 265, 110 S.E. 737, later appeal, 29 Ga. App. 307, 114 S.E. 921 (1922).

Offer to pay less than contract sum. — On an issue of whether the contract was procured by the fraudulent representation of the plaintiff of a material fact, the admission of evidence that the defendant offered to pay a less sum in compromise of any liability under the contract is harmful error. Dance v. Mize, 134 Ga. 646, 68 S.E. 434 (1910).

Statute was applied to reject admission made with view of compromise in the following cases. — Duncan v. Bailey, 162 Ga. 457, 134 S.E. 87 (1926); Slade v. Raines, 165 Ga. 89, 139 S.E. 805 (1927).

Erroneous admission. — Trial court erred in admitting evidence of an agreement between the prosecutor and the defendant in a bastardy case for the payment by the defendant of a sum of money in return for an agreement that the case should be dead docketed, since such evidence could have had only the purpose of showing an admission of guilt by the accused and as such it was inadmissible as not having been freely and voluntarily made. Simmons v. State, 98 Ga. App. 159, 105 S.E.2d 356 (1958).

When trial court informed the jury that testimony leading up to an offer of compromise was being excluded, if trial court's usage of the word "compromise" was in error, such error was rendered harmless by the trial court clearly stating to the jury that offers in compromise are inadmissible, that the court was sustaining the objection to the extent that it might have any bearing on an offer in compromise, or any element of it, that the court was offering no opinion whatever of any kind, and that if anything had been said about an offer in compromise to disregard it as it was not admissible. South-eastern Metal Prods., Inc. v. De Vaughn, 99 Ga. App. 569, 109 S.E.2d 305 (1959).

ening to compel, accused to view victim's corpse, 27 ALR3d 1185.

24-3-37.1. Offers of assistance or expressions of benevolence, regret, mistake, error, sympathy, or apologies by a health care provider or the provider's employee or agent.

(a) The General Assembly finds that conduct, statements, or activity constituting voluntary offers of assistance or expressions of benevolence, regret, mistake, error, sympathy, or apology between or among parties or potential parties to a civil action should be encouraged and should not be considered an admission of liability. The General Assembly further finds that such conduct, statements, or activity should be particularly encouraged between health care providers and patients experiencing an unanticipated outcome resulting from their medical care. Regulatory and accreditation agencies are in some instances requiring health care providers to discuss the outcomes of their medical care and treatment with their patients, including unanticipated outcomes, and studies have shown such discussions foster improved communications and respect between provider and patient, promote quicker recovery by the patient, and reduce the incidence of claims and lawsuits arising out of such unanticipated outcomes. The General Assembly therefore concludes certain steps should be taken to promote such conduct, statements, or activity by limiting their admissibility in civil actions.

(b) As used in this Code section, the term:

(1) "Health care provider" means any person licensed under Chapter 9, 10A, 11, 11A, 26, 28, 30, 33, 34, 35, 39, or 44 of Title 43 or any hospital, nursing home, home health agency, institution, or medical facility licensed or defined under Chapter 7 of Title 31. The term shall also include any corporation, professional corporation, partnership, limited liability company, limited liability partnership, authority, or other entity comprised of such health care providers.

(2) “Unanticipated outcome” means the outcome of a medical treatment or procedure, whether or not resulting from an intentional act, that differs from an expected or intended result of such medical treatment or procedure.

(c) In any claim or civil action brought by or on behalf of a patient allegedly experiencing an unanticipated outcome of medical care, any and all statements, affirmations, gestures, activities, or conduct expressing benevolence, regret, apology, sympathy, commiseration, condolence, compassion, mistake, error, or a general sense of benevolence which are made by a health care provider or an employee or agent of a health care provider to the patient, a relative of the patient, or a representative of the patient and which relate to the unanticipated outcome shall be inadmissible as evidence and shall not constitute an admission of liability or an admission against interest. (Code 1981, § 24-3-37.1, enacted by Ga. L. 2005, p. 1, § 6/SB 3; Ga. L. 2006, p. 72, § 24/SB 465.)

Editor’s notes. — Ga. L. 2005, p. 1, § 1, not codified by the General Assembly, provides that: “The General Assembly finds that there presently exists a crisis affecting the provision and quality of health care services in this state. Hospitals and other health care providers in this state are having increasing difficulty in locating liability insurance and, when such hospitals and providers are able to locate such insurance, the insurance is extremely costly. The result of this crisis is the potential for a diminution of the availability of access to health care services and a resulting adverse impact on the health and well-being of the citizens of this state. The General Assembly further finds that certain civil justice and health care regulatory reforms as provided in this Act will promote predictability and improvement in the provision of quality health care services and the resolution of health care liability claims and will thereby assist in promoting the provision of health care liability insurance by insurance providers. The General Assembly further finds that certain needed reforms affect not only health care liability claims but also other civil actions and accordingly provides such general reforms in this Act.”

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Application and illustrations. — Neither O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37 nor O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37.1 prevented admitting letter from defendant medical device manufacturer because there was evidence plaintiff patient’s surgeon requested that manufacturer pay for third surgery to replace the device, and the letter in response confirmed the terms; further, there was evidence the offer was made to maintain the surgeon’s goodwill due to the number of devices the surgeon implanted in patients on a yearly basis. Trickett v. Advanced Neuromodulation Sys., 542 F. Supp. 2d 1338 (S.D. Ga. 2008).

Evidence properly excluded. — In a medical negligence action, the trial court properly excluded statements of regret made by the doctor sued pursuant to the plain meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-37.1(c), despite the suing patient’s claim that such should have been admitted as statements against interest and under the res gestae exception to the hearsay rule; moreover, retroactive application was not improper as the Georgia General Assembly intended that the law be applied to cases pending at the time it was passed. Airasian v. Shaak, 289 Ga. App. 540, 657 S.E.2d 600 (2008).

24-3-38. Right to have whole conversation heard.

When an admission is given in evidence by one party, it shall be the right of the other party to have the whole admission and all the conversation connected therewith admitted into evidence. (Orig. Code 1863, § 3714; Code 1868, § 3738; Code 1873, § 3791; Code 1882, § 3791; Civil Code 1895, § 5196; Penal Code 1895, § 1004; Civil Code 1910, § 5783; Penal Code 1910, § 1030; Code 1933, § 38-410.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

It is the universal rule, in both civil and criminal cases, that if part of a conversation is introduced, all that is said in the same conversation which is relevant to the issue should be admitted. West v. State, 200 Ga. 566, 37 S.E.2d 799, later appeal, 74 Ga. App. 423, 40 S.E.2d 98 (1946).

Admission defined. — An admission is positive or substantive proof of the facts asserted. Seaboard Coast Line R.R. v. Duncan, 123 Ga. App. 479, 181 S.E.2d 535 (1971).

An admission is an out-of-court statement which is inconsistent with the contention of the party. Seaboard Coast Line R.R. v. Duncan, 123 Ga. App. 479, 181 S.E.2d 535 (1971).

All of confession must be admitted. — On the trial of a person charged with an offense, it is error to admit part of the person's confession and exclude the other part. Long v. State, 22 Ga. 40 (1857); Peterson v. State, 47 Ga. 524, later appeal, 50 Ga. 142 (1873).

Remainder of conversation shown by cross-examination. — Generally, when part of a conversation has been introduced in evidence, the rest of the conversation may be brought out by the opposite party on cross-examination of the witness. Cox v. State, 64 Ga. 374, 37 Am. R. 76 (1879). See Betts v. State, 66 Ga. 508 (1881).

No cross-examination when no direct examination. — Trial court did not err in preventing the defendant from cross-examining the investigating officer about an incriminating statement made by the defendant after the state introduced evidence concerning the statement. O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-38 and 24-9-64 (“The right of a thorough and sifting cross-examination shall belong to every party as to the witnesses called against him”) were inapplicable because there had been no direct examination relating to any part of the statement by the state. Davis v. State, 261 Ga. 382, 405 S.E.2d 648 (1991).

Refusal to state remainder of conversation. — If in the examination in chief the witness should testify to anything occurring in such communications material to the witness's side of the case, the other party would have the right to inquire concerning the entire conversation. If there should be anything tending to incriminate the witness and the witness should refuse to answer as to it, the whole conversation should be excluded. Young v. State, 65 Ga. 525 (1880).

Use to avoid impeachment. — When witness was asked about a conversation, with a view to laying a foundation to impeach the witness, the witness had the right to give the whole conversation so far as it is pertinent. Archer v. Gwinnett County, 110 Ga. App. 442, 138 S.E.2d 895 (1964).

Irrelevant matters not admissible. — Matters in conversation or documents otherwise irrelevant, and wholly disconnected with the part first offered, are not thereby made admissible by statute. Brown v. State, 119 Ga. 572, 46 S.E. 833 (1904).

Since past sexual experiences of a victim of child molestation were not shown to be relevant, the trial court did not err by redacting such material from a taped interview of the victim. Roberts v. State, 232 Ga. App. 745, 503 S.E.2d 614 (1998).

In a prosecution for rape, the omission, premised on the rape-shield statute, of defendant's reference to the victim as a "well known whore" in a statement to police was not error. Johnson v. State, 238 Ga. App. 677, 520 S.E.2d 221 (1999).

Admissibility into evidence of a complete one page letter to a detective that contained defendant's signature at the bottom was not affected by the fact that other pages enclosed with the letter, relating to the alleged criminal activity of other people, had been forwarded by the detective to the Georgia Bureau of Investigation. Boatman v. State, 272 Ga. 139, 527 S.E.2d 560 (2000).

Matters irrelevant and wholly disconnected with the conversation first offered are not rendered admissible by admission of some of the conversation. Brown v. State, 119 Ga. 572, 46 S.E. 833 (1904).

Self-serving declarations. — In a suit by an executrix to recover certain personal property from another, there was no error in excluding a self-serving declaration made by the surviving party to a contract under which the possession of the property in dispute was held by the surviving party, which attempted to set up an additional claim or demand against the deceased party to the contract, as a basis for the surviving party's adverse possession. May v. Subers, 19 Ga. App. 306, 91 S.E. 435 (1917).

Subsequent conversations. — In a subsequent conversation with the same person and upon the same subject, what was said in the first admission, in the absence of something to the contrary, is necessarily understood, and must be taken and considered as a component part of the subsequent conversation. West v. State, 200 Ga. 566, 37 S.E.2d 799, later appeal, 74 Ga. App. 423, 40 S.E.2d 98 (1946).

Indicative of other crimes not objection. — Testimony which constitutes an admission by the defendant regarding the offense for which the defendant is on trial is not subject to objection for the reason that the testimony likewise indicates the defendant was guilty of another offense since the language is such that it is impossible to convey the defendant's meaning without repeating the complete statement. Crider v. State, 98 Ga. App. 164, 105 S.E.2d 506 (1958).

Failure to hear whole conversation. — That a witness did not hear all of the conversation about which the witness is asked to testify is no ground of objection to the witness stating as much of the conversation as the witness did hear. Westmoreland v. State, 45 Ga. 225 (1872); Woolfork v. State, 85 Ga. 69, 11 S.E. 814 (1890); Lynn v. State, 140 Ga. 387, 79 S.E. 29 (1913).

Extracts from prior statements. — An extract, shown to be substantially correct, from a prisoner's statement made on a former trial was admissible without offering the entire statement, though it was shown that the statement made at the former trial as taken down by the official reporter had been lost. Medlin v. State, 149 Ga. 23, 98 S.E. 551 (1919).

Part of trial report used. — State may read in evidence a part of a stenographic report of a former trial without putting in the whole, the other party being at liberty to introduce the balance, or so much thereof as is pertinent. Burnett v. State, 87 Ga. 622, 13 S.E. 552 (1891).

Recorded telephone conversations with an informant. — There was circumstantial evidence that a defendant was the participant in recorded phone conversations with an informant; therefore the conversations were admissible as admissions of a party opponent under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-31, and the entirety of the calls were admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-38. Kimble v. State, 301 Ga. App. 237, 687 S.E.2d 242 (2009).

When a part of a conversation, which amounts to an incriminatory admission, is admitted in evidence, it is the right of the accused to bring out other portions of the same conversation, even though it is self-serving in its nature, or exculpatory, in that it justifies, excuses, or mitigates the act. West v. State, 200 Ga. 566, 37 S.E.2d 799, later appeal, 74 Ga. App. 423, 40 S.E.2d 98 (1946).

It was error to deny the accused the right, under cross-examination, to have a witness further testify what the accused told the witness in the first conversation which may tend to exculpate the accused after a witness had testified as to a second conversation containing an admission by the accused. West v. State, 200 Ga. 566, 37 S.E.2d 799, later appeal, 74 Ga. App. 423, 40 S.E.2d 98 (1946).

Incomplete return. — When a plaintiff offered in evidence an incomplete return of an administrator as an admission, and it had folded in it various receipts, accounts, etc., referred to as vouchers, plaintiff was not compelled to put the vouchers in evidence along with the returns. That was the right of the defendants, if the defendants could show that the enclosed were either a part of the admission or connected therewith. Dowling v. Feeley, 72 Ga. 557 (1884).

Admission of partial statement upheld. — In a prosecution for rape, despite O.C.G.A. § 24-3-38, the rape shield statute prohibited the admission of a portion of defendant's statement in which the defendant said that the victim had sexual intercourse with the victim's cousin. Snow v. State, 228 Ga. App. 649, 492 S.E.2d 564 (1997).

Trial court did not err by refusing the defendant's request to admit only the portions of letters written by the codefendant that cast the codefendant in a bad light relative to the crimes and excluding other portions that described the defendant's role in the crimes as being more significant than the defendant had described in a custodial interview because the defendant was not permitted to admit portions of the letters for the purportedly-limited purpose of showing the codefendant's state of mind without waiving the defendant's objections to the state's introduction of the remainder of the letters. Stinski v. State, 286 Ga. 839, 691 S.E.2d 854 (2010).

Death of party making statements. — Whole conversation should go in under this statute, though involving statements made by one since dead. Powell v. Watts, 72 Ga. 770 (1884).

Non-testifying witness's hearsay statement. — Premitting whether a complained-of hearsay statement was admissible under the rule of completeness, admission of the statement was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt given that the admission was cumulative of other positive witness identifications, defendant's own confession, and the videotaped evidence depicting defendant robbing the store, all of which overwhelmingly established defendant's guilt. Jackson v. State, 262 Ga. App. 451, 585 S.E.2d 745 (2003).

Refusal to utilize remainder of statements. — Trial court erred in denying a codefendant's motion to sever the trial from the defendant's trial because the codefendant was not allowed to introduce the exculpatory portions of the statements that explained the excerpted admissions introduced by the state, which supported the codefendant's antagonistic defense that the codefendant was present at the robberies due to coercion by the defendant. To avoid potential Bruton issues, the state introduced only those portions of the codefendant's 9-1-1 calls or custodial statements made establishing that the codefendant was at the scene of two robberies, that the codefendant's vehicles were used, and that the codefendant sent police to a motel room to investigate the robberies, but refused the additional portions of the statements that tended to support the codefendant's defense that the codefendant was coerced into participating in the crimes. Bowe v. State, 288 Ga. App. 376, 654 S.E.2d 196 (2007), cert. dismissed, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 318 (Ga. 2008).

Failure to listen to all of audiotape was harmless error. — In a recorded conversation, the defendant denied committing a murder. Assuming that under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-38, the defendant should have been allowed to play the audiotape in its entirety because an accomplice had testified to a portion of the conversation, any error was harmless as the defendant's recorded denial of involvement would have been cumulative of other evidence. Patterson v. State, 285 Ga. 597, 679 S.E.2d 716 (2009), cert. denied, U.S. , 130 S. Ct. 1051, 175 L. Ed. 2d 892 (2010).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

In general. — Any statement or conduct of a person, indicating a consciousness of guilt, when such person is, at the time or thereafter, charged with or suspected of a crime, is admissible against the person upon trial for committing the crime. Bridges v. State, 246 Ga. 323, 271 S.E.2d 471 (1980).

Fact that a confession was not reduced to writing does not render confession inadmissible. Hayes v. State, 152 Ga. App. 858, 264 S.E.2d 307 (1980).

Confession not inadmissible despite indicating other offenses. — Criminal confession is not rendered inadmissible because the language used therein indicates that the accused had committed another and separate offense. Dampier v. State, 245 Ga. 427, 265 S.E.2d 565, supplemented, 245 Ga. 882, 268 S.E.2d 349 (1980).

Harmless error. — Any possible error in admitting a confession of a codefendant after the codefendant refused to testify is rendered harmless when the confession parallels the statements of the codefendants. Myrick v. State, 155 Ga. App. 496, 271 S.E.2d 637 (1980).

Reversible error. — When inadmissible evidence as to a confession is offered and admitted, its admission constitutes reversible error unless the jury is expressly instructed that the evidence is admitted for the purpose of impeachment only, whether or not a request to so charge be made, and whether or not any exceptions are made to the charge as given. Askea v. State, 153 Ga. App. 849, 267 S.E.2d 279 (1980).

General Consideration

Confession defined. — A confession is an admission freely and voluntarily made by the accused whereby the accused acknowledges personally to be guilty of the offense charged, and discloses the circumstances of the act, and the share and participation the accused had in the act. Allen v. State, 187 Ga. 178, 200 S.E. 109 (1938); Pressley v. State, 201 Ga. 267, 39 S.E.2d 478 (1946); Johnson v. State, 204 Ga. 528, 50 S.E.2d 334 (1948); Carter v. State, 90 Ga. App. 61, 81 S.E.2d 868 (1954).

Incriminating statements distinguished. — There is a difference between an incriminating statement and a confession of guilt. In the former only one or more facts entering into the criminal act is admitted, while in the latter the entire criminal act is confessed. Johnson v. State, 204 Ga. 528, 50 S.E.2d 334 (1948); Carter v. State, 90 Ga. App. 61, 81 S.E.2d 868 (1954).

True determinant of whether a defendant has made a confession or merely given a statement is whether the statement is offered by the accused as exculpatory or inculpatory. Sanford v. State, 153 Ga. App. 541, 265 S.E.2d 868 (1980).

An admission of the main fact, from which the essential elements of the criminal act charged may be inferred, amounts to a confession of the crime itself. Sanford v. State, 153 Ga. App. 541, 265 S.E.2d 868 (1980).

An admission of a fact not in itself involving criminal intent is not a confession. Carter v. State, 90 Ga. App. 61, 81 S.E.2d 868 (1954).

Unless the statement of the defendant is broad enough to comprehend every essential element necessary to make out the case against the defendant, it cannot be said to be an admission of guilt. Allen v. State, 187 Ga. 178, 200 S.E. 109 (1938); Johnson v. State, 204 Ga. 528, 50 S.E.2d 334 (1948); Carter v. State, 90 Ga. App. 61, 81 S.E.2d 868 (1954).

Prima-facie showing of the admissibility of a confession is made by evidence of compliance with O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 in addition to evidence showing that defendant confessed after having been given defendant's Miranda rights. Pruitt v. State, 176 Ga. App. 317, 335 S.E.2d 724 (1985); Adams v. State, 186 Ga. App. 599, 367 S.E.2d 871, cert. denied, 186 Ga. App. 917, 367 S.E.2d 871 (1988).

"Hope of benefit" to which O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 refers is usually a hope of lighter punishment. Tyler v. State, 247 Ga. 119, 274 S.E.2d 549, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 882, 102 S. Ct. 364, 70 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1981); Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981).

Within the context of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50, the slightest hope of benefit refers to a lighter sentence. Burton v. State, 212 Ga. App. 100, 441 S.E.2d 470 (1994).

Record did not show that the officer made any assurances to defendant that the defendant's sentence would be lighter if the defendant gave an incriminating statement and the officer's statement to the accused that substance abuse counseling was available was an offer of a collateral benefit which did not invalidate the statement. Burton v. State, 212 Ga. App. 100, 441 S.E.2d 470 (1994).

Promise by an officer to assist defendant in getting help through counseling did not constitute an impermissible hope of benefit under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Peinado v. State, 223 Ga. App. 271, 477 S.E.2d 408 (1996).

An offer by officers to "help" defendant if defendant told the truth and the officer's statement that defendant would face a jury trial if defendant lied were not promises of an improper benefit that would render defendant's confession inadmissible under the "slightest hope of benefit" to which O.C.G.A. § 24-3-40 refers. Porter v. State, 264 Ga. App. 526, 591 S.E.2d 436 (2003).

Hope to be released does not implicate statute. — "Hope of benefit" to which O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 refers is usually a hope of lighter punishment. Consequently, being released is not a hope of benefit that would implicate that Code section. Further, even if the court were to find that the GBI agent said that the defendant would be released if the defendant gave the agent information, this would be an offer of a collateral benefit which does not invalidate the statement and thus the statement was admissible. Overton v. State, 295 Ga. App. 223, 671 S.E.2d 507 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0654, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 212 (Ga. 2009).

Clear intention of the statute is that a confession induced by the slightest hope of benefit or remotest fear of injury may not be used against a defendant. Williams v. State, 239 Ga. 327, 236 S.E.2d 672 (1977).

Construction with § 24-3-53. — Both former Code 1933, §§ 38-411 and 38-420 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-50 and 24-3-53) refer to evidence in criminal trials. The statute recognizes the distinction between admissions and confessions. In former Code 1933, § 38-420 only one or more facts entering into a criminal act were admitted, while in former Code 1933, § 38-411 the entire criminal act was confessed. Burns v. State, 188 Ga. 22, 2 S.E.2d 627 (1939).

Issue regarding voluntariness of confession pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 must be raised in the trial court. Turner v. State, 246 Ga. App. 49, 539 S.E.2d 553 (2000).

Oral admissions properly admitted after voluntariness determined. — Trial court does not err in admitting defendant's oral admissions contained in the testimony of the investigating officer after the trial court as the trier of fact outside the presence of the jury determined the voluntariness of the defendant's admissions. Kelley v. State, 160 Ga. App. 343, 287 S.E.2d 68 (1981).

Court's decision to allow confession into evidence not error. Johnson v. State, 261 Ga. 419, 405 S.E.2d 686 (1991); Davis v. State, 271 Ga. 527, 520 S.E.2d 218 (1999).

Constitutional Considerations

In general. — Admission in evidence of a confession voluntarily made, without being induced by another by the slightest hope of benefit or the remotest fear of injury, does not contravene the provisions of the state constitution that no person shall be compelled to give testimony tending in any manner to incriminate oneself, nor is it inimical to anything contained in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Wilburn v. State, 141 Ga. 510, 81 S.E. 444 (1914).

Use of threats or promises to coerce a criminal defendant to make a statement is contrary to Georgia law and to federal constitutional law. Young v. State, 243 Ga. 546, 255 S.E.2d 20 (1979).

Self-incrimination. — Confessions, if made voluntarily without hope of benefit or fear of injury, are admissible and are not rendered inadmissible as violating the constitutional inhibition against self-incrimination by the fact that the confession is in affidavit form. Elliott v. State, 87 Ga. App. 456, 74 S.E.2d 366 (1953).

It must be shown that no constitutional rights of the defendant were violated in obtaining statement when an in-custody written statement of a defendant is offered in evidence. Walker v. State, 226 Ga. 292, 174 S.E.2d 440 (1970), vacated on other grounds, 408 U.S. 936, 92 S. Ct. 2845, 33 L. Ed. 2d 754 (1972).

Interrogation by private citizen afforded no constitutional protection. — Confessions which result from coercive interrogations conducted by private citizens are not subject to a constitutional due process analysis in determining whether or not to exclude the confession at trial. Griffin v. State, 230 Ga. App. 318, 496 S.E.2d 480 (1998).

Defendant's constitutional rights could not have been violated when the defendant was not under arrest or in custody at the time of the confession and no police or other law enforcement personnel were present. Gaston v. State, 153 Ga. App. 538, 265 S.E.2d 866 (1980).

Fifth and sixth amendments not violated. — When the evidence heard was sufficient to authorize the trial court to determine that the defendant was advised of the defendant's rights, that the defendant was not placed under any duress, that the defendant seemed to understand the defendant's rights, that the defendant was not under influence of drugs or alcohol and that the defendant seemed completely aware of what was going on around the defendant, the defendant's confession was voluntarily elicited and not in violation of the fifth and sixth amendments. Simonton v. State, 151 Ga. App. 431, 260 S.E.2d 487 (1979).

Question was not a request for counsel. — Question by a defendant as to whether the defendant would have been arrested if the defendant asked for an attorney was not a clear request for counsel that required cessation of police questioning or clarification before continuing the interrogation and there was no evidence that the statement was given in fear of injury or for a hope of benefit; additionally, while the investigator lied to the defendant throughout the interview about the existence and amount of inculpatory evidence, nothing suggested that the investigator sought to procure a false statement. Wright v. State, 279 Ga. App. 155, 630 S.E.2d 656 (2006).

Waiver of Miranda rights. — When a defendant objects to the admission into evidence of defendant's confession, the state must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the confession was voluntary, and, if the confession is the product of a custodial interrogation by officers of the government, that the confession was preceded by the appellant's knowing and voluntary waiver of the appellant's Miranda rights. Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979), sentence vacated, 446 U.S. 961, 100

S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980) (remanded for further consideration in light of Godfrey v. Georgia, 446 U.S. 420, 100 S. Ct. 1759, 64 L. Ed. 2d 398 (1980)).

Whether, after the Miranda warnings are given, the waiver of those rights was free and voluntary depends upon the totality of the circumstances. Miller v. State, 155 Ga. App. 587, 271 S.E.2d 719 (1980).

Due process clause of the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution requires that the trial judge determine whether a confession is voluntary before permitting the jury to consider the confession. Stone v. State, 155 Ga. App. 357, 271 S.E.2d 22 (1980).

Defendant's constitutional rights are violated when defendant's challenged confession is introduced without a determination by the trial judge of the confession's voluntariness after an adequate hearing. Strickland v. State, 226 Ga. 750, 177 S.E.2d 238 (1970).

Right to counsel violated by last but not earlier statements. — While non-custodial and custodial statements were properly admitted as not vitiating the defendant's constitutional rights once defendant invoked the right to counsel, a subsequent interview initiated by police violated this right; as a result, cocaine seized through information obtained from the interview had to be suppressed as fruit of the poisonous tree. Vergara v. State, 283 Ga. 175, 657 S.E.2d 863 (2008).

Due process not violated. — When evidence shows that confessions were voluntarily made and were not induced by another by hope of award or fear of punishment, or when it is an issue of fact as to whether the confessions were properly obtained, defendant is not denied due process of law as guaranteed by the state and federal constitutions, by their introduction in evidence against the defendant. Claybourn v. State, 190 Ga. 861, 11 S.E.2d 23 (1940).

Voluntariness

Voluntary character of the confession depends on the question whether the making of the statement was voluntary, and not whether the particular communication contained in the confession was voluntary. Turner v. State, 203 Ga. 770, 48 S.E.2d 522 (1948).

Voluntariness (Cont'd)

Officer's knowledge of defendant. — Fact that the interrogating officer did not know the defendant's age, education, or familiarity with the "custodial experience" did not render the defendant's confession invalid or involuntary; further, the failure to advise the defendant as to the crimes about which the defendant was to be questioned before a Miranda waiver was irrelevant to whether the waiver was knowing and voluntary. Rivera v. State, 279 Ga. App. 1, 630 S.E.2d 152 (2006).

Totality of the circumstances. — To determine whether the state has proven that a confession was made voluntarily, the trial court must consider the totality of the circumstances. Presley v. State, 251 Ga. App. 823, 555 S.E.2d 156 (2001); Harrison v. State, 253 Ga. App. 179, 558 S.E.2d 760 (2002).

Given the totality of the circumstances, and the defendant's age, education, and knowledge of both the substance of the charge and nature of the rights to an attorney and to remain silent, because the defendant voluntarily gave a statement to a police detective about an uncharged armed robbery, absent any threats, coercion, or promises in exchange for doing so, the statement was admissible. Swain v. State, 285 Ga. App. 550, 647 S.E.2d 88 (2007).

Based on the totality of the circumstances and the undisputed evidence, because the defendant's confession to a police detective was voluntary and admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50, not coerced or received as a result of promises made, and not subject to exclusion due to improper methods used by the police, the trial court did not err in admitting the confession; further, exclusion of the confession was not required based on a violation of the defendant's right to counsel. Swain v. State, 285 Ga. App. 550, 647 S.E.2d 88 (2007).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for rape of a minor relative, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion to suppress a non-custodial audio recording of a statement the defendant made to the victim that the victim obtained via a hidden recorder as a hearing was held by the trial court on the admissibility of the recording at which time the trial court concluded that, under the totality of the circumstances, the defendant's statement was made voluntarily and the victim did not promise the defendant anything to make the statement and did not threaten the defendant into making the statement. Flournoy v. State, 299 Ga. App. 377, 682 S.E.2d 632 (2009).

Implicit finding of voluntariness in admission of confession. — When the court denied the defendants' motions to suppress the defendant's confessions, implicit in the ruling was the court's finding that the statements were freely and voluntarily made, without hope of benefit or reward. Eady v. State, 182 Ga. App. 293, 355 S.E.2d 778 (1987).

A person who is mentally ill can be competent to make a voluntary confession. Johnson v. State, 256 Ga. 259, 347 S.E.2d 584 (1986).

When an admission of guilt was not product of interrogation but was spontaneous statement of the defendant the statement is admissible. Williams v. State, 159 Ga. App. 772, 285 S.E.2d 232 (1981).

Hope of reward or fear of punishment which renders confession inadmissible is that which is induced by another. Jones v. State, 18 Ga. App. 310, 89 S.E. 347 (1916); Phinazee v. State, 22 Ga. App. 258, 95 S.E. 878 (1918); Hill v. State, 148 Ga. 521, 97 S.E. 442 (1918); Abrams v. State, 223 Ga. 216, 154 S.E.2d 443 (1967); Dickey v. State, 157 Ga. App. 13, 276 S.E.2d 75 (1981).

Although the interrogating officer did tell defendant that the defendant was helping defendant by telling the truth, that judges love to hear that defendants helped the police, and that although telling the truth put defendant right in the hot seat, it also showed that the defendant cooperated, these statements, when combined with repeated statements that the officer could not promise any help, did not constitute the kind of "hope of benefit" which is contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Stephens v. State, 164 Ga. App. 398, 297 S.E.2d 90 (1982).

Even though interrogating officer's deception may not have been intended to procure an untrue statement, since the deception was intended and indeed did induce defendant to confess in the hope of receiving a lighter punishment, the confession was not voluntary. State v. Ritter, 268 Ga. 108, 485 S.E.2d 492 (1997).

Defendant's claim that defendant's statement was inadmissible on the basis that the statement was obtained by a threat of an increased punishment was not valid because the challenged words could only have been construed as the officer's assessment that the defendant's credibility was being destroyed and that defendant was imperiling any claim of innocence by insisting on a version of the facts which was so dramatically contrary to the evidence gathered by the police. Robinson v. State, 272 Ga. 752, 533 S.E.2d 718 (2000).

While the term "hope of benefit" contained in O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 has been interpreted generally as a reward of lighter punishment on the charges, "hope of benefit" may also include the reward of no charges at all. Richardson v. State, 265 Ga. App. 711, 595 S.E.2d 565 (2004).

Court of appeals erred in affirming the defendant's conviction for criminal attempt to commit armed robbery and aggravated assault and in determining that the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion to suppress the confession as involuntary and induced by an improper hope of benefit because the defendant's confession had to be considered involuntary and inadmissible when the record showed that the defendant gave self-incriminating statement only after being told that the defendant could receive a "shorter term" by doing so, which was exactly the hope of benefit that was prohibited under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50; as a result, the defendant's confession was induced by a hope of benefit, it had to be presumed to be legally false, and it could not be the underlying basis of a conviction. Canty v. State, 286 Ga. 608, 690 S.E.2d 609 (2010).

"Hope of benefit" contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 must be induced by another; therefore, any hope which originated in the mind of the person making a confession would not exclude admission of the confession. Wesley v. State, 177 Ga. App. 877, 341 S.E.2d 507 (1986), overruled on other grounds, Gilbert v. State, 193 Ga. App. 283, 388 S.E.2d 18 (1989).

Hope or fear which originates in the mind of the person making the confession and which originates from seeds of the person's own planting would not exclude a confession. The hope or fear must be induced by another. Hall v. State, 180 Ga. App. 366, 349 S.E.2d 255 (1986); Shelton v. State, 196 Ga. App. 163, 395 S.E.2d 618 (1990); Ramos v. State, 198 Ga. App. 65, 400 S.E.2d 353 (1990).

While O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 prohibits the introduction of a statement induced "by the slightest hope of benefit," the hope contemplated must be induced by another. Bryant v. State, 193 Ga. App. 840, 389 S.E.2d 405 (1989); Vineyard v. State, 195 Ga. App. 788, 395 S.E.2d 49 (1990).

A hope or fear which originates in the mind of the person making a confession and which originates from seeds of one's own planting would not exclude a confession, and defendant's contention that the defendant viewed the investigative detective as a "mother figure" did not exclude defendant's confession. Owens v. State, 209 Ga. App. 272, 433 S.E.2d 382 (1993).

Confessions made as a tactical decision are admissible when the hope or fear is a product of the defendant's own mind rather than the result of inducement by others. Gray v. State, 240 Ga. App. 716, 523 S.E.2d 626 (1999).

Offer to obtain psychologist. — Police officer's offer to assist defendant in finding a psychologist and the officer's suggestions that it best behooved the defendant to tell the truth did not constitute the hope of benefit prohibited by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Clay v. State, 209 Ga. App. 266, 433 S.E.2d 377 (1993).

Hope of benefit not created. — Officer's testimony that the officer would inform the district attorney of defendant's cooperation was not sufficient to create a hope of benefit within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Autry v. State, 210 Ga. App. 150, 435 S.E.2d 512 (1993); McFadden v. State, 251 Ga. App. 342, 554 S.E.2d 323 (2001).

Any promise made to defendant to facilitate a change in defendant's jail cell was not a promise or hope of benefit which would taint defendant's otherwise voluntary confession. Billings v. State, 212 Ga. App. 125, 441 S.E.2d 262 (1994).

No hope of benefit was created when the defendant asked the interrogating officer, "What should I do? Should I talk?" and the officer replied, "That's up to you, man. All you're going to do is help yourself out." Lee v. State, 270 Ga. 798, 514 S.E.2d 1 (1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1006, 120 S. Ct. 503, 145 L. Ed. 2d 388 (1999).

Defendant's statement given during an interview by a Department of Family and Children Services (DFACS) caseworker in the presence of two police officers was voluntary and not induced by deceit because neither the police nor DFACS offered defendant anything for the testimony. Moss v. State, 244 Ga. App. 295, 535 S.E.2d 292 (2000).

Officer's statements during interrogation to the effect that it would look better to the judge if defendant would confess to committing the murder rather than denying committing murder when the police could prove defendant was the murderer did not constitute a hope of benefit to elicit a statement. Taylor v. State, 274 Ga. 269, 553 S.E.2d 598 (2001).

In defendant's trial on charges of malice murder, felony murder, and armed robbery, there was no evidence in the record that a police officer who took defendant's statement referred to any possibility of a lighter sentence when the officer questioned defendant, and the trial court properly rejected defendant's claim that defendant's statement to police should be suppressed because the officer who interviewed the defendant attempted to coerce defendant into giving a statement by informing defendant that police had defendant's fingerprints or because defendant held only a general equivalency diploma. Evans v. State, 277 Ga. 51, 586 S.E.2d 326 (2003).

There was no violation of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 regarding coercion of a statement because the officers made no promise to defendant that the defendant would not go to jail or that the defendant might receive a lighter sentence; the detectives only indicated that the detectives would note defendant's cooperation and the defendant's efforts to straighten out the defendant's life. Jones v. State, 270 Ga. App. 233, 606 S.E.2d 288 (2004).

Defendant's statements, wherein the defendant admitted the defendant's culpability in a victim's murder, were properly admitted as voluntary in the defendant's criminal trial as the defendants' claim that defendants were each induced by the hope of receiving benefits pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 lacked merit; the claims were contradicted by other testimony given by defendant that the defendant offered the statements freely, and one statement was not given in exchange for a plea agreement, as such agreement was already in place when the statement was made. Redwine v. State, 280 Ga. 58, 623 S.E.2d 485 (2005).

While the defendant testified that the officers made certain promises to free the defendant, the interviewing officers testified that the officers made no promises or threats to the defendant, and the defendant signed a document in which the defendant acknowledged that no benefits had been promised the defendant, because some evidence supported the trial court's finding that defendant's confession was voluntary, those findings were not clearly erroneous. Bowden v. State, 279 Ga. App. 173, 630 S.E.2d 792 (2006).

Defendant's statement to police was not rendered involuntary because the statement was given based upon a hope of benefit as there was no evidence in the record to suggest that the police offered the defendant the hope of lighter punishment in exchange for that statement. Givens v. State, 281 Ga. App. 370, 636 S.E.2d 94 (2006).

Statements by interrogating officers that the defendant should help oneself, that it was in the defendant's best interest to tell what the defendant knew, and that the officers would show the district attorney and the judge that the defendant did not want to help oneself, did not constitute a hope of benefit under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Stinski v. State, 281 Ga. 783, 642 S.E.2d 1 (2007).

Defendant's confession was not rendered involuntary merely because the confession was made with the hope of benefit from the interrogating officers because the evidence demonstrated that any hope of benefit given by the officers was dispelled by one officer's statement that the officers had no influence over the defendant's possible punishment. Valentine v. State, 289 Ga. App. 60, 656 S.E.2d 208 (2007).

Given evidence that the defendant was not provided any assurances by law enforcement that any assistance offered to the defendant would prove beneficial, the defendant's subsequent statement to law enforcement was voluntarily made. Garcia v. State, 290 Ga. App. 164, 658 S.E.2d 904 (2008).

Trial court did not err in admitting an alleged confession the defendant made to an investigator because the defendant gave a statement that implicated both the defendant and the defendant's sibling, and the trial court was fully authorized to find that the statement was not induced by any hope of benefit extended by a sergeant; thus, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 did not prevent admission of the statement. Mitchell v. State, 292 Ga. App. 124, 663 S.E.2d 800 (2008).

In a prosecution for felony murder, armed robbery, and burglary, a defendant's post-Miranda statements were properly admitted at trial as a detective's telling the defendant the detective knew the defendant was not the shooter did not constitute the hope of a lighter sentence that tainted the voluntariness of the defendant's statements. Jackson v. State, 284 Ga. 484, 668 S.E.2d 700 (2008).

Second defendant's statements were voluntary because the statements were not obtained by deceit intended to elicit an untrue response and were not induced by the hope of benefit; the investigators' alleged deception regarding whether the investigators had articulated a belief as to the second defendant's participation in the crimes, or indeed had probable cause to obtain an arrest warrant, had no bearing on the voluntariness of the defendant's statement in the absence of any evidence that the investigative technique was designed to procure a false statement. Moreover, the description of the second defendant as "not a suspect" offered no hope of benefit because the statement offered no potential future outcome. Daniel v. State, 285 Ga. 406, 677 S.E.2d 120 (2009).

Trial court did not err in failing to suppress the defendant's post-Miranda confession because the confession was not induced by the hope of benefit in violation of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50; the interrogating officer repeatedly told the defendant that the officer could not offer any deals for lighter punishment. State v. Folsom, 286 Ga. 105, 686 S.E.2d 239 (2009).

Trial court did not err in refusing to suppress statements the defendant made after an officer told the defendant that withholding information would make things worse for the defendant because the officer's statement to the defendant was, in context, an admonition not to damage the defendant's credibility but to tell the truth, and the statement did not show the physical or mental torture or the coercion by threats that constitutes the remotest fear of injury forbidden by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50; since no promises of lighter punishment were made, such an admonition to tell the truth did not constitute hope of benefit so as to render involuntary any statement made thereafter. Madrigal v. State, No. S10A0209, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 327 (Apr. 19, 2010).

Smoking does not render hope of benefit. — Permitting defendant to smoke was a collateral benefit and was insufficient hope of benefit to render defendant's statement inadmissible. White v. State, 266 Ga. 134, 465 S.E.2d 277 (1996).

Notifying prosecution of cooperation does not render hope of benefit. — Merely telling a defendant that his or her cooperation will be made known to the prosecution does not constitute the "hope of benefit" sufficient to render a statement inadmissible. Leigh v. State, 223 Ga. App. 726, 478 S.E.2d 905 (1996); Lawrence v. State, 227 Ga. App. 70, 487 S.E.2d 608 (1997).

Officer's statement that defendant's cooperation would be made known to the prosecutor did not render defendant's confession to molesting defendant's stepdaughter involuntary. Frei v. State, 252 Ga. App. 535, 555 S.E.2d 530 (2001).

Notifying judge of cooperation does not render hope of benefit. — Detective's implied promises to tell the judge of defendant's cooperation did not constitute the kind of hope of benefit contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Tucker v. State, 231 Ga. App. 210, 498 S.E.2d 774 (1998).

Though the defendant enumerated as error the admission of a custodial statement into evidence, claiming the statement was induced by hope of benefit of a lesser sentence in that a detective stated that the detective was going to be the prosecuting officer and that the detective would like to be able to tell the judge that the defendant was honest and cooperated with the detective since the detective specifically testified that the detective did not promise the defendant any hope of benefit, the statement was not coerced under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 and was admissible. Cooper v. State, 257 Ga. App. 896, 572 S.E.2d 417 (2002).

Detectives did not improperly induce or promise defendant that they would talk to the judge and the prosecutor about defendant being cooperative, which might increase defendant's chances of getting a bond, as these statements did not guarantee defendant anything. Jackson v. State, 262 Ga. App. 451, 585 S.E.2d 745 (2003).

An officer's implied promise to tell the trial judge of the defendant's cooperation was not a "hope of benefit" making defendant's statements involuntary under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Davis v. State, 292 Ga. App. 782, 666 S.E.2d 56 (2008).

Statement that defendant was in big trouble. — Interrogating officer's statements to defendant that defendant was in big trouble and, in effect, that the officer could help defendant if defendant cooperated were not offers of hope of benefit or threat of injury. Davis v. State, 245 Ga. App. 508, 538 S.E.2d 159 (2000).

Mere explanations of defendant's arrest and of the law did not constitute an improper offer of some hope of benefit. State v. Todd, 250 Ga. App. 265, 549 S.E.2d 821 (2001).

Officer's urging defendant to tell the truth if defendant wanted "[the officer] to be in a position to do anything to say that you cooperated" did not create a hope of a lighter sentence or any other hope of benefit. Caldwell v. State, 249 Ga. App. 885, 549 S.E.2d 449 (2001).

Nothing officer said implied freedom for confession. — Defendant's custodial statement to the police was admissible because it was made voluntarily as defendant did not contend that an interrogating officer mentioned a confession or sentence, only that the officer periodically stated that defendant would soon be released, while questioning continued; nothing suggested that freedom would be forthcoming if defendant confessed to committing crimes. Brown v. State, 278 Ga. 724, 609 S.E.2d 312 (2004).

Promise of benefit to relatives. — While the defendant claimed that a custodial statement was made to keep defendant's spouse from going to jail, and therefore was made under duress, an agent testified that the agent told the defendant that the spouse was not going to be arrested, and denied telling the spouse that the spouse was going to be arrested, so a trial court's ruling that the defendant's statement was voluntary pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 was not error. Kania v. State, 280 Ga. App. 356, 634 S.E.2d 146 (2006).

Denial of a defendant's motion to suppress a confession was proper as a police officer testified that the confession was not given in reliance on a promise not to arrest the two women in the house; further, the defendant's testimony that the confession was given in exchange for not arresting the women did not render the confession involuntary since there was no promise to treat the defendant favorably and any promise of a benefit to the defendant's relatives was collateral to the defendant. Jackson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 716, 634 S.E.2d 846 (2006).

Officer's promise to help the defendant with a drug problem was a collateral benefit, and did not bear on the question of punishment; hence, the trial court did not clearly err in admitting the defendant's statement in evidence as such did not amount to a promise of leniency in exchange for the statement. Smith v. State, 281 Ga. App. 91, 635 S.E.2d 385 (2006).

An investigator's actions in requesting that the defendant's bond be lowered did not amount to the slightest hope of benefit under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Gonzalez v. State, 283 Ga. App. 843, 643 S.E.2d 8 (2007).

Arranging meeting between spouses is not hope of benefit. — Accommodating a meeting between the defendant's wife and the defendant did not amount to the "slightest hope of benefit" which would have rendered the defendant's statement involuntary and inadmissible as it was not uncommon for a suspect in custody to be allowed to speak with a family member, and the record showed that the defendant reinitiated further communication with police and made a knowing and intelligent waiver of any right to counsel previously invoked. Rivera v. State, 282 Ga. 355, 647 S.E.2d 70 (2007).

Officer's comments about punishment did not impact confession. — Defendant's statement introduced into evidence was voluntarily given without any hope of benefit; the interrogating officer's comments about punishment amounted to no more than an explanation of the seriousness of the defendant's situation, and the officer's requests to the defendant to permit the officer to help were the equivalent of the officer's urging the defendant to tell the truth, which would not invalidate a confession. Preston v. State, 282 Ga. 210, 647 S.E.2d 260 (2007).

Officer's statement regarding children when parents are in custody. — An officer's statement that if adults were arrested, their children would routinely be taken to the county department of family and children services was merely a recounting of fact, not a threat of injury or promise of hope of benefit within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Rubia v. State, 287 Ga. App. 122, 650 S.E.2d 797 (2007).

Coaxing by investigator did not render statement inadmissible. — With regard to a defendant's conviction for child molestation, the trial court did not err by admitting the defendant's confession at trial as although the defendant may have been coaxed into providing the statement by an investigator, in doing so, the investigator did not offer any hope of benefit or fear of injury. Dexter v. State, 293 Ga. App. 388, 667 S.E.2d 172 (2008).

Use of word "favors" by officer does create hope of benefit. — An officer told the defendant that one of the defendant's accomplices had told the officer the truth but the other two had not, so those accomplices would get no "favors" from the officer. As the officer's reference to "favors" did not suggest that the defendant might receive a lighter sentence by cooperating, the defendant's subsequent statement was admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Simpson v. State, 293 Ga. App. 760, 668 S.E.2d 451 (2008).

Officer informing of potential legal consequences. — Defendant's convictions for armed robbery and robbery by intimidation were appropriate because the defendant voluntarily confessed to the defendant's involvement in the crimes. A statement by police that made the defendant aware of the potential legal consequences was in the nature of a mere truism and did not constitute a threat of injury or promise of benefit within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Cantrell v. State, 299 Ga. App. 746, 683 S.E.2d 676 (2009).

Detective made no promises, just general statement. — When the detective told defendant that the detective could not and would not make any promises, just that any cooperation would be favorable to the investigation, defendant's statement was made voluntarily without the slightest hope of benefit. Evans v. State, 248 Ga. App. 99, 545 S.E.2d 641 (2001).

Codefendant's motion to suppress was properly denied as the codefendant's confession was not made with a hope of benefit in violation of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 since the codefendant told the detectives that the codefendant wanted to go home and a detective replied "let's straighten this out and we'll see about getting you home"; the statement did not relate to either the charge or sentence that the codefendant was facing, nor did the detective give codefendant a hope of a lighter sentence in return for the codefendant's statement. Smith v. State, 269 Ga. App. 133, 603 S.E.2d 445 (2004).

Promise of leniency contingent on future assistance. — Defendant's confession was admissible because the trial court could have concluded that any promise of leniency for defendant was contingent on future assistance by defendant and was unrelated to defendant's confession. Bailey v. State, 248 Ga. App. 120, 545 S.E.2d 659 (2001).

Victim's mother promised leniency. — Although the victim's mother allegedly agreed to have the charges dropped if the defendant confessed, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50, the confession was made voluntarily, and could be submitted to the jury for consideration. Davenport v. State, 277 Ga. App. 758, 627 S.E.2d 133 (2006).

Confessions made during plea negotiations with the prosecutor are not admissible because the confessions are made in the hope that the defendant will get a better deal than otherwise possible. Gray v. State, 240 Ga. App. 716, 523 S.E.2d 626 (1999).

Express language not required. — When a conviction was based upon confessions induced by the threatening acts of the parties obtaining the confessions, though no language was used expressly extending the hope of benefit or fear of injury, a new trial will be ordered. Irwin v. State, 54 Ga. 39 (1875).

Slightest hope or remotest fear excludes. — Confessions are not admissible if there is evidence, arising from the testimony as to the circumstances under which the confession was made, that the making of the confession was induced by the slightest hope of benefit or the remotest fear of injury. King v.

Although inducement was held out by one person, and the confession was subsequently made to another, who has no knowledge of such inducement, and who offers none personally, such confession is involuntary. Thomas v. State, 169 Ga. 182, 149 S.E. 871 (1929).

Custody does not render confession involuntary. — Mere fact that the accused was in custody, or under arrest at the time the confession was made, did not render the confession incompetent if in fact it was made voluntarily within the legal meaning of the term. Wilburn v. State, 141 Ga. 510, 81 S.E. 444 (1914); Bradberry v. State, 170 Ga. 859, 154 S.E. 344 (1930); Russell v. State, 196 Ga. 275, 26 S.E.2d 528 (1943).

Even if arrest is illegal. — Voluntary confession or incriminatory statement is not inadmissible merely because it was made pending an illegal arrest. Campbell v. State, 90 Ga. App. 1, 81 S.E.2d 880 (1954).

Statements made when reason for arrest is unknown. — Statement made by an accused is not rendered inadmissible solely because the accused has not been told why the accused was under arrest at the time of the making of the statement. Moses v. State, 245 Ga. 180, 263 S.E.2d 916, cert. denied, 449 U.S. 849, 101 S. Ct. 138, 66 L. Ed. 2d 60 (1980), overruled on other grounds, Nagel v. State, 262 Ga. 888, 427 S.E.2d 490 (1993).

Failure to inform defendant. — Fact that the state did not show that the defendant prior to making certain incriminatory statements had been apprised by the interrogating officers of the nature of the investigation and its possible consequences did not affect the admissibility or voluntary character of the statements made by the defendant. Gossett v. State, 105 Ga. App. 17, 123 S.E.2d 322 (1961).

Surroundings by which the declarant may be environed may be more ominous and more potential in inducing a confession than the use of threats. Moon v. State, 12 Ga. App. 614, 77 S.E. 1088 (1913).

Legality, duration, and conditions of detention are relevant in the determination of voluntariness of an accused's statement. Pless v. State, 142 Ga. App. 594, 236 S.E.2d 842 (1977).

Statement that it is always better to tell the truth is not such a hope of benefit as would render a confession inadmissible. Wilson v. State, 19 Ga. App. 759, 92 S.E. 309 (1917); Hicks v. State, 178 Ga. 561, 173 S.E. 395 (1934); McKennon v. State, 63 Ga. App. 466, 11 S.E.2d 416 (1940); Turner v. State, 203 Ga. 770, 48 S.E.2d 522 (1948); Daniel v. State, 150 Ga. App. 798, 258 S.E.2d 604 (1979); Askea v. State, 153 Ga. App. 849, 267 S.E.2d 279 (1980); Fowler v. State, 246 Ga. 256, 271 S.E.2d 168 (1980); Tyler v. State, 247 Ga. 119, 274 S.E.2d 549 (1981); Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981); Kettman v. State, 257 Ga. 603, 362 S.E.2d 342 (1987); Stowers v. State, 205 Ga. App. 518, 422 S.E.2d 870 (1992), cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 901, 422 S.E.2d 870 (1992); Henry v. State, 265 Ga. 732, 462 S.E.2d 737 (1995); Duke v. State, 268 Ga. 425, 489 S.E.2d 811 (1997); Gilliam v. State, 268 Ga. 690, 492 S.E.2d 185 (1997); Collis v. State, 252 Ga. App. 659, 556 S.E.2d 221 (2001).

Statements neither coerced nor hope induced. — Trial court did not err by admitting into evidence defendant's pretrial statements in response to allegations of physical child abuse by officers from another jurisdiction and officials' statements telling defendant defendant's cooperation would be conveyed to the prosecuting attorney because the defendant personally never claimed defendant's statement was given either under the force of coercion or in the hope of a benefit. Helton v. State, 206 Ga. App. 600, 426 S.E.2d 172 (1992).

Officer discussing right to bury relatives after suspect invoking right to counsel. — Officer's statement to the defendant, given after the defendant invoked the right to counsel, in which the officer expressed the officer's knowledge of the request for a lawyer, urged the defendant not to say anything, and told the defendant that everyone should have the opportunity to bury their loved ones, as did the officer recently when the officer's father and brother died, was not calculated to procure an untrue statement, and because the defendant was not threatened with fear of injury nor promised hope of benefit, because there was no deception, nor did the police inject religion into the exchange, and because the officer's speech was not coercive police activity, the police did not violate the defendant's fifth amendment right against coerced self-incrimination; however, while the defendant's statements themselves, in which the defendant confessed to killing the defendant's uncle and told the police where the defendant disposed of the body, were inadmissible based on the defendant's invocation of the right to counsel, nevertheless the fruits of the statements were admissible. State v. Woods, 280 Ga. 758, 632 S.E.2d 654 (2006).

Statement by officer that the officer was considering charging defendant's girlfriend was a mere "truism" or recounting of facts, rather than a threat of injury or promise of benefit. Anderson v. State, 224 Ga. App. 608, 481 S.E.2d 595 (1997).

Advice from officer that suspect will feel better if the suspect tells the truth will not render confession inadmissible. Caffo v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981).

Officer's statement that "it would mean a lot in the end." — Juvenile's statement was not induced in the hope of benefit based on an officer's comment that the juvenile needed to tell the truth "because it would mean a lot in the end." In re J.L., 229 Ga. App. 447, 494 S.E.2d 274 (1997).

Officer's statement after arrest that "no lawyer can do you any good at this point" did not render defendant's statements involuntary. Gober v. State, 264 Ga. 226, 443 S.E.2d 616 (1994).

Officer's statement that spouse was target of investigation. — When an officer interviewing the defendant told the defendant that the defendant's spouse was the target of an investigation, this did not make the defendant's confession involuntary under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. The officer, who sought to deflect attention from the spouse's role as the tipster who led police to the defendant, had not created a fear of injury invalidating the confession as the defendant had not exonerated the spouse during the interview but implicated the spouse in other illegal activity. Smith v. State, 291 Ga. App. 535, 662 S.E.2d 305 (2008).

Fact that a confession was procured by the employment of falsehood by a police officer, detective, or other person does not alone exclude the confession, where not calculated to do other than elicit the truth and does not prevent the confession from being free and voluntary. Moore v. State, 230 Ga. 839, 199 S.E.2d 243 (1973).

Confession otherwise admissible is not inadmissible because the confession was prompted by advice of a relative of the defendant. Dick v. State, 246 Ga. 697, 273 S.E.2d 124 (1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 976, 101 S. Ct. 2059, 68 L. Ed. 2d 357 (1981); Cunningham v. State, 248 Ga. 835, 286 S.E.2d 427 (1982).

Confession obtained through trickery. — Defendant's custodial statement to the police was admissible because the statement was made voluntarily as even if an interrogating officer allowed defendant to overhear a coconspirator's implication of defendant, there was no evidence that the officer was attempting to procure an untrue statement from defendant. Brown v. State, 278 Ga. 724, 609 S.E.2d 312 (2004).

Hope of lighter punishment, induced by other person, is usually "hope of benefit" referred to in O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Wesley v. State, 177 Ga. App. 877, 341 S.E.2d 507 (1986), overruled on other grounds, Gilbert v. State, 193 Ga. App. 283, 388 S.E.2d 18 (1989); State v. Barber, 197 Ga. App. 353, 398 S.E.2d 419 (1990); In re R.J.C., 210 Ga. App. 286, 435 S.E.2d 759 (1993).

Confession inadmissible after sheriff promised prosecution on only one count. — Defendant's confessions made to a sheriff were based on a promise that the defendant would be prosecuted on only one count of burglary and were therefore involuntary under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. However, the defendant had identified defendant's connection with the defendant's accomplices prior to the involuntary statements, and the defendant's accomplices' testimony against the defendant was still admissible. Stidham v. State, 299 Ga. App. 858, 683 S.E.2d 906 (2009).

Statement induced by written promise not to press additional charges held involuntary. — Defendant was granted new trial for convictions for felony murder and other crimes after it was determined that defendant's statement to detectives as to the location of the gun used in the murder and defendant's provision of the gun to two co-indictes was involuntary and inadmissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 as the statement was induced by a written promise not to press any additional weapons charges against defendant. Foster v. State, 283 Ga. 484, 660 S.E.2d 521 (2008).

Statement that others will remain under arrest until possessor of contraband determined. — When the officers told the defendant that defendant's stepfather and girlfriend, who were also arrested at the trailer, were going to remain under arrest pending a determination of who was in possession of the contraband, such a statement falls into the category of a mere "truism" or "recounting of the facts," rather than an offer of benefit or threat of injury. Sampson v. State, 165 Ga. App. 833, 303 S.E.2d 77 (1983).

Statement that cooperation would be noted in court not hope of benefit. — Police officer's statement to a 17-year-old defendant that it would be better if the defendant cooperated with the police, and if the defendant does so, the officer will have to say in court that the defendant cooperated, does not constitute a "hope of benefit" making a subsequent confession inadmissible. Rounds v. State, 166 Ga. App. 212, 303 S.E.2d 543 (1983).

Offering to make known a suspect's confession to the district attorney and the trial judge is not an offer of benefit. McKenzie v. State, 187 Ga. App. 840, 371 S.E.2d 869, cert. denied, 187 Ga. App. 907, 371 S.E.2d 869 (1988); Sims v. State, 197 Ga. App. 214, 398 S.E.2d 244 (1990).

Agreeing to tell the trial judge of the defendant's cooperation if the defendant confesses does not constitute the "hope of benefit" contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Moore v. State, 179 Ga. App. 488, 347 S.E.2d 318 (1986); Butler v. State, 194 Ga. App. 208, 390 S.E.2d 278 (1990); Carswell v. State, 268 Ga. 531, 491 S.E.2d 343 (1997); Martin v. State, 271 Ga. 301, 518 S.E.2d 898 (1999).

Encouraging cooperation by a defendant and promising to bring defendant's cooperation to the attention of the prosecutor or the trial judge does not constitute the "hope of benefit" contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Bussey v. State, 202 Ga. App. 483, 414 S.E.2d 710 (1992).

Investigator's statement to defendant that if the defendant cooperated, the investigator would let the district attorney know and it might help the defendant did not impermissibly hold out some hope of benefit so as to make defendant's confession inadmissible. Lyles v. State, 221 Ga. App. 560, 472 S.E.2d 132 (1996).

Evidence that investigator suggested defendant could be charged with lesser offense. — An investigating officer's admission that the officer discussed bringing a lesser charge of theft by taking rather than armed robbery with a defendant, and the specific language in the defendant's written statement expressly admitting to the lesser offense, along with the statement to another officer that the crime was theft by taking, supported the trial court's factual finding that the defendant gave the custodial statement with the hope of benefit. Thus, the trial court properly granted the defendant's motion to suppress the statement. State v. Klepper, 301 Ga. App. 753, 688 S.E.2d 673 (2009).

Officer's statement that the officer wanted to "help" the defendant was not an offer of reward which tainted the confession by inducing a hope of benefit in the defendant making the statement involuntary under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Cooper v. State, 256 Ga. 234, 347 S.E.2d 553 (1986).

Officer's statement to a suspect that the officer was trying to help the suspect did not constitute the "slightest hope of benefit" under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 and did not require the exclusion of an inculpatory statement the defendant made in response to the officer's statement. Stringer v. State, 285 Ga. 842, 684 S.E.2d 590 (2009).

Admission of defendant's statement after inducement by officer was harmless error. — Trial court committed harmless error in admitting defendant's statement under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 after a police officer induced defendant to make defendant's statement by hope of benefit when the officer falsely implied that whether defendant would be arrested depended upon how the interview went. Richardson v. State, 265 Ga. App. 711, 595 S.E.2d 565 (2004).

Promises to obtain psychiatric help and medical attention for defendant were not the kind of “hope of benefit” which would invalidate defendant’s subsequent confession. Head v. State, 180 Ga. App. 901, 350 S.E.2d 854 (1986).

Hope of benefit raised initially by defendant does not render confession inadmissible. — When the officer who took defendant’s statement testified that it was defendant who first raised the notion of a reduction of bail bond, defendant’s hope of benefit was not induced by another and would not serve to render defendant’s confession inadmissible. Heard v. State, 165 Ga. App. 252, 300 S.E.2d 213 (1983); Pounds v. State, 189 Ga. App. 809, 377 S.E.2d 722 (1989).

Attorney’s advice that statement might lead to plea negotiation not inducement by state. — Even though attorney’s advice to defendant was that if the defendant made a statement the state might negotiate a plea, defendant’s statement was not the result of inducement by others since the questioning police officer made it clear that no promises were to be made in exchange for the statement. Williams v. State, 250 Ga. 553, 300 S.E.2d 301, cert. denied, 462 U.S. 1124, 103 S. Ct. 3097, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1356 (1983).

Codefendant’s prior confession does not affect voluntariness. — That one party to the commission of a crime has confessed to that party’s participation in the crime does not render the defendant’s later confession involuntary. Whittington v. State, 252 Ga. 168, 313 S.E.2d 73 (1984).

Promise to help keep defendant out of certain prison. — Confession is not rendered inadmissible by an assurance that whatever help could be given would be given in keeping the defendant out of a certain prison, since this is similar to a promise to inform the court of a defendant’s cooperation. Patrick v. State, 169 Ga. App. 302, 312 S.E.2d 385 (1983), aff’d, 252 Ga. 509, 314 S.E.2d 909 (1984).

Promise to end adverse publicity. — When an inculpatory statement was made by the fire department lieutenant in return for the investigator’s alleged promise to “stop all the publicity against the fire and police department and not arrest and persecute anyone else,” the promise pertained to collateral benefits and the trial court did not err in ruling the statement to be voluntary and admissible. Johnson v. State, 170 Ga.

App. 71, 316 S.E.2d 160 (1984).

Promise of collateral benefit. — An investigator’s statement that the investigator would talk to the district attorney’s office at a later time about having a warrant against the defendant dismissed was no more than a promise of a collateral benefit and thus did not make the defendant’s custodial statement inadmissible under O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-50 and 24-3-51. Boone v. State, 293 Ga. App. 654, 667 S.E.2d 880 (2008).

Statement that the defendant “needed” to tell the police officers if defendant knew anything about the crime does not render the confession involuntary. Whittington v. State, 252 Ga. 168, 313 S.E.2d 73 (1984).

Confession not induced by fear. — Trial court’s determination that defendant’s confession was not rendered involuntary because the confession was induced by fear because of a deputy’s statement during the post arrest interview purportedly threatening the defendant with a life sentence was supported by sufficient evidence. Baker v. State, 211 Ga. App. 515, 439 S.E.2d 668 (1993).

Hollering by interrogating officer not “fear of injury” negating voluntariness. — Defendant’s fear when the detective interrogating defendant “hollered” at defendant was self-induced and not the “fear of injury” contemplated by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 since there was no evidence that the police had threatened to harm the defendant if the defendant did not make a statement. Mungin v. State, 183 Ga. App. 290, 358 S.E.2d 673, cert. denied, 183 Ga. App. 906, 358 S.E.2d 673 (1987), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 908, 108 S. Ct. 1083, 99 L. Ed. 2d 242 (1988).

Intimidation not established. — Defendant’s claim that defendant’s confession was the product of intimidation was not established by defendant’s testimony that one of the interrogating officers became angry and brushed the officer’s jacket back, revealing the officer’s gun. Raulerson v. State, 268 Ga. 623, 491 S.E.2d 791 (1997), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1127, 118 S. Ct. 1815, 140 L. Ed. 2d 953 (1998).

Withholding medical attention from defendant until after an interrogation was concluded does not render the defendant’s statement to the police involuntary and having been induced by the hope of benefit since the evidence upholds the voluntariness of the statement. Cannon v. State, 257 Ga. 475, 360 S.E.2d 592 (1987).

Absence of counsel. — It is not the law of this state that when a prisoner is known by police to be represented by counsel, anything the prisoner says to police in absence of counsel is per se inadmissible, whether voluntary or not. Pierce v. State, 235 Ga. 237, 219 S.E.2d 158 (1975).

Considering the totality of the circumstances a confession may be shown to be voluntary even though made in the absence of counsel after counsel has been retained or appointed. Pierce v. State, 235 Ga. 237, 219 S.E.2d 158 (1975).

Offer of settlement. — Confession freely and voluntarily made is admissible in evidence against the defendant, although such confession is coupled with the proposition on defendant's part to settle or compromise the case or charge against the defendant; such an offer of settlement not being induced by another. Hecox v. State, 105 Ga. 625, 31 S.E. 592 (1898); Grubbs v. State, 53 Ga. App. 377, 186 S.E. 140 (1936).

Defendant's confession made to the victim's parents was not involuntary on the basis that the confession was induced by the hope of benefit—specifically, the victim's parents' representation that the parents would not involve the police. Wiley v. State, 245 Ga. App. 580, 538 S.E.2d 483 (2000).

Defendant must object to confession. — When evidence of a confession is offered by the state in a criminal case, and there is no objection by the defendant upon the ground that the alleged confession was not voluntarily made, the confession is admissible as a voluntary confession. Washington v. State, 24 Ga. App. 65, 100 S.E. 31 (1919).

Presumption of waiver. — If a prima facie case of admissibility of a confession is sought to be improperly established, but no proper objections are made to its insufficiency at the trial, the right to object will be presumed to have been waived. McLemore v. State, 181 Ga. 462, 182 S.E. 618 (1935).

If a prima facie case of admissibility is sought to be improperly established, but no proper objections are made to its sufficiency at the trial, the right to object will be presumed to have been waived, and where timely objection or motion is made to exclude such testimony which at best still leaves in doubt whether statements were made which may have induced the confession or inculpatory statement, it is error not to reject such testimony of the confession or inculpatory statement. Lemon v. State, 80 Ga. App. 854, 57 S.E.2d 626 (1950).

Failure to object when confession involuntary. — When not made freely and voluntarily, a confession is presumed to be legally false, and cannot be the underlying basis of a conviction; the failure to object to such evidence does not give the confession probative value where it is shown without dispute that the confession was not freely and voluntarily made. McKennon v. State, 63 Ga. App. 466, 11 S.E.2d 416 (1940).

If the confession is admitted without timely objection and the evidence shows without dispute that the confession was not voluntary, then, whether the confession is objected to or not it is not legal evidence and has no probative value. The evidence, exclusive of the confession, must be sufficient to authorize a verdict of guilty after it appears that the confession was not voluntary, for the failure to object to the confession would not give the confession probative value; and since, without the confession, the verdict is unsupported by the evidence, the case, if not reversed on some other special ground, must be reversed solely on the general grounds. Sconyers v. State, 67 Ga. App. 902, 21 S.E.2d 504 (1942).

Absence of a signed waiver of rights does not render a confession inadmissible if the evidence otherwise authorized a finding of voluntariness. Patterson v. State, 149 Ga. App. 438, 254 S.E.2d 445 (1979).

Fact that no signed waiver was obtained from defendant did not militate against the finding that defendant's confession was freely and voluntarily given. Miller v. State, 155 Ga. App. 587, 271 S.E.2d 719 (1980).

Objection after verdict. — Confessions are legal evidence. Unless the circumstances under which the confessions were made show the confessions were not voluntary, the confessions are admissible. If they are given in, and not objected to, it is too late after the verdict to say there was not sufficient inquiry into the circumstances. Hill v. State, 214 Ga. 794, 107 S.E.2d 662 (1959).

Capacity to waive. — Mere fact that the defendant was 21 years old with a sixth grade education does not lead to the conclusion that the defendant was incapable of knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently waiving defendant's constitutional rights. Gates v. State, 244 Ga. 587, 261 S.E.2d 349 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 938, 100 S. Ct. 1332, 63 L. Ed. 2d 772 (1980); Cunningham v. State, 248 Ga. 835, 286 S.E.2d 427 (1982).

Lack of literacy does not dictate determination that there has been no voluntary knowledgeable waiver. Watson v. State, 159 Ga. App. 618, 284 S.E.2d 636 (1981).

A statement may be voluntary even if the suspect has a limited education. Harrison v. State, 253 Ga. App. 179, 558 S.E.2d 760 (2002).

Subsequent waiver valid. — Although defendant had refused to sign a written acknowledgment that defendant had been informed of defendant's right to remain silent and right to representation, defendant's subsequent acknowledgment in writing two hours later that the defendant had been informed of these rights supported the trial court's findings that defendant's statement was freely and voluntarily given. Pierce v. State, 209 Ga. App. 366, 433 S.E.2d 641 (1993).

Time lapse. — Ten-hour lapse between the time of the waiver of rights and the actual confession at which time previous warnings were reiterated does not render a confession inadmissible. Dick v. State, 246 Ga. 697, 273 S.E.2d 124 (1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 976, 101 S. Ct. 2059, 68 L. Ed. 2d 357 (1981).

Erroneous promise by police did not make confession inadmissible. — Detective erroneously promised during an interview that a defendant would not be charged with an offense that required sex offender registration because a conviction for electronically furnishing obscene material to a minor under O.C.G.A. § 16-12-100.1 would require registration as a sex offender under O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12(e)(2); prior to the erroneous promise, the defendant's confession was voluntarily made under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 as the confession was made without the slightest hope of benefit. State v. Lee, 295 Ga. App. 49, 670 S.E.2d 879 (2008).

Question to witness as to voluntariness of confession does not call for conclusion. — When a witness testified to the circumstances surrounding the confession, showing clearly that the confession was voluntary, a question then posed to the witness regarding the confession's voluntariness does not call for a conclusion. Satterfield v. State, 248 Ga. 538, 285 S.E.2d 3 (1981).

Juvenile's confession voluntary despite officer's statement to drive home. — Because a police officer's statement to defendant juvenile that the officer would drive defendant home once they were through, even if construed as the promise of a benefit for defendant's confession, was only a collateral benefit that would not implicate the provisions of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50; thus, the trial court did not clearly err in finding the juvenile's statements to police were voluntary. In re D. T., 294 Ga. App. 486, 669 S.E.2d 471 (2008).

Facts sufficient to support voluntariness. — When a police officer testified that the officer twice read defendant the defendant's rights, that the defendant indicated that the defendant did not want a lawyer but wanted to make a statement, that the defendant did not appear to be under the influence of alcohol or drugs, and that the defendant's statement was made without threat or coercion or under any offer of hope or benefit, there was no error in admitting the defendant's statement. Jones v. State, 194 Ga. App. 746, 391 S.E.2d 663 (1990).

Defendant's interrogation in the office of a retail store by as many as five police officers at different times did not evince an unduly coercive environment since the main interrogating officer testified and denied the making of any promises or threats to defendant. Pinson v. State, 207 Ga. App. 734, 429 S.E.2d 106 (1993).

In defendant's trial on charges of child molestation and statutory rape, the trial court found that defendant's waiver of Miranda rights applied to statements defendant made after defendant took a polygraph examination and not just to statements defendant made while taking the test, and the appellate court sustained that finding and held that the trial court properly admitted defendant's statements. Little v. State, 260 Ga. App. 87, 579 S.E.2d 84 (2003).

Prisoner's habeas petition under 28 U.S.C. § 2254 was properly denied because the state habeas court correctly applied controlling federal precedent in finding that there was no ineffective assistance of counsel under the sixth amendment in that the prisoner's confession was made while the prisoner was sober and there was nothing to support an argument of involuntariness or intoxication. Therefore, the confession was admissible both under the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment and O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Newland v. Hall, 527 F.3d 1162 (11th Cir. 2008), cert. denied, U.S. , 129 S. Ct. 1336, 173 L. Ed. 2d 607 (2009).

Defendant's statements to a local detective regarding the defendant's role in three robberies were voluntary and, thus, admissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 because the defendant was told that the defendant was not in custody when initially interviewed, defendant was not a suspect at that time, and defendant did not make a confession in the hope of some benefit; defendant was thought to be a witness to a robbery. Dean v. State, 292 Ga. App. 695, 665 S.E.2d 406 (2008).

Defendant's custodial statements were properly deemed voluntary under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. The defendant was advised of defendant's Miranda rights; signed a waiver of those rights; admitted no threats or promises were made; and, although the defendant claimed not to understand the Miranda rights due to limited mental capacity, there was no evidence the defendant was mentally or cognitively impaired. Inman v. State, 295 Ga. App. 461, 671 S.E.2d 921 (2009).

In a statutory rape case, as the record showed that police had not misrepresented the 12-year-old victim's status to the defendant or promised that the defendant would be charged with rape only if the investigation established that the defendant had committed forcible rape, the defendant's confession and DNA test results which showed that the defendant was the parent of the victim's child were not inadmissible as having been obtained through trickery and deceit. Henry v. State, 295 Ga. App. 758, 673 S.E.2d 120 (2009).

With regard to a defendant's malice murder conviction arising from the suffocation death of the defendant's newborn daughter, the trial court did not err by admitting into evidence the defendant's confession that acknowledged that the baby was breathing and whimpering after birth since, given the totality of the circumstances, the trial court's ruling that the confession was given freely and voluntarily after the court viewed the videotapes of the police interviews was not clearly erroneous and there was no merit to the defendant's contention that the confession was encouraged by threats, including that the investigation would turn to a romantic friend, since under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50, the remotest fear of injury that rendered a confession involuntary and inadmissible was physical or mental torture, which was not claimed. Wright v. State, 285 Ga. 428, 677 S.E.2d 82 (2009), cert. denied, U.S. , 130 S. Ct. 1076, 175 L. Ed. 2d 903 (2010).

Defendant was not in custody for purposes of Miranda at the time the defendant gave the defendant's statement, and the statement was properly admitted into evidence, because defendant went to the police station voluntarily and was allowed to leave once the questioning was finished; thus, a reasonable person in defendant's position would have concluded that the defendant was not under formal arrest and that the defendant's freedom was not restrained. Jones v. State, 270 Ga. App. 233, 606 S.E.2d 288 (2004).

Defendant's statement was not involuntary under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 because the defendant agreed to be interviewed at the police station, with an attorney, before the defendant was charged, and before the interview, the defendant and the attorney were told by the interviewer that the interviewer wanted to hear the defendant's side of the story relating to allegations of sexual battery and child molestation; no promises were made to the defendant regarding arrest or sentencing. Pollio v. State, 278 Ga. App. 729, 629 S.E.2d 583 (2006).

Promise not to seek divorce. — Because the promise made by the defendant's spouse not to seek a divorce if the defendant talked to police regarding the crimes charged did not bear on the question of punishment, and served as merely a collateral benefit, the trial court did not err in finding the defendant's statement to be voluntary and in denying a motion to suppress the statement. Robbins v. State, 290 Ga. App. 323, 659 S.E.2d 628 (2008).

Confessions were found to be involuntary in the following cases. — See Frain v. State, 40 Ga. 529 (1869); Earp v. State, 55 Ga. 136 (1875); Burns v. State, 61 Ga. 192 (1878);

Trial court's determination that a law enforcement agent's claim that the defendant orally confessed to selling crack cocaine was more credible than the defendant's claim that there was no such oral confession was not clearly erroneous, such that the confession was properly admitted pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50. Harris v. State, 297 Ga. App. 589, 677 S.E.2d 763 (2009).

Defendant's testimony supported findings of coercion and duress. — Trial court did not err in suppressing the defendant's pre-trial statement on voluntariness grounds because the defendant's testimony regarding statements made by police officers fully supported the trial court's findings of coercion and duress, and the testimony regarding statements police officers made, expressing anger at the defendant and blaming the defendant for damage to a police car and the death of police dogs, did not constitute inadmissible hearsay when those statements were not offered to prove the truth of the facts asserted therein but to show the defendant's fear of injury by the officers; the trial court did not err in believing the defendant's testimony over that of a detective because a portion of the detective's testimony was successfully impeached, none of the officers testified, and the state did not offer the officers as witnesses until its motion for reconsideration was filed. State v. Lynch, 286 Ga. 98, 686 S.E.2d 244 (2009).

Procedural Considerations

1. Use as Evidence

Voluntariness not a defense. — Accused cannot defend against a criminal charge on the basis that a confession was not voluntary. Robinson v. State, 272 Ga. 752, 533 S.E.2d 718 (2000).

Involuntary statement may not be used for any purpose at trial. — It is a denial of due process of law for the state to use an involuntary statement against a defendant at trial for any purpose. Fain v. State, 165 Ga. App. 188, 300 S.E.2d 197 (1983).

Even though defendant exposed existence of statement. — Fact that defendant exposed the existence of a statement does not render the substance of the statement immune from the requirement for admissibility that the statement be given voluntarily. Fain

v. State, 165 Ga. App. 188, 300 S.E.2d 197 (1983).

Hearing required before state seeks to use statement for impeachment or rebuttal. — Once defendant raises the issue of voluntariness of a statement the state wishes to use for impeachment purposes and with a rebuttal witness, the defendant is entitled to a determination of the issue by the trial court before the statement can be used, although not to a separate “Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S. 368, 84 S. Ct. 1774, 12 L. Ed. 2d 908 (1964)” hearing. Fain v. State, 165 Ga. App. 188, 300 S.E.2d 197 (1983).

Reversible error. — It is always reversible error to allow a confession or incriminatory admission in evidence against the maker thereof when the confession or admission is not free and voluntary or made with the hope of reward or immunity. Bryant v. State, 132 Ga. App. 186, 207 S.E.2d 671 (1974).

Not illegal evidence. — Without doubt, confessions must be voluntary, that is, if the confessions are made under the hope of reward or fear of hurt the confessions are not competent; but confessions are not illegal evidence, standing alone. Sconyers v. State, 67 Ga. App. 902, 21 S.E.2d 504 (1942); Harrison v. State, 83 Ga. App. 367, 64 S.E.2d 83 (1951).

Probative value. — If it does not appear that the confessions were not voluntary, and the confessions are introduced without objection, the confessions or incriminating statements are admissible and have probative value. Sconyers v. State, 67 Ga. App. 902, 21 S.E.2d 504 (1942).

Confession made involuntarily within the meaning of this statute is without probative value. Allen v. State, 85 Ga. App. 355, 69 S.E.2d 638 (1952) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50).

If a confession is inadmissible because not voluntarily made, the confession may not be used for impeachment. Green v. State, 154 Ga. App. 295, 267 S.E.2d 898 (1980).

Confessions of a principal felon, as to the felon’s own guilt, are competent evidence to show that fact on the trial of the accessory, but the confessions must be such as would be competent evidence on the trial of the principal, and must not be induced by another with the slightest hope of benefit or remotest fear of injury to the party making the confessions. Smith v. State, 46 Ga. 298 (1872).

Codefendant’s confession. — Defendant has no standing to complain of the voluntariness of the codefendant’s confession. Myrick v. State, 155 Ga. App. 496, 271 S.E.2d 637 (1980).

When oral confession was incorporated in written confession, any error in the confession’s admission for jury consideration is harmless. Hammond v. State, 157 Ga. App. 647, 278 S.E.2d 188 (1981).

New trial not required. — Admission into evidence of testimony as to a confession by defendant given in hope of reward did not require a new trial since another witness testified without objection to the same facts. Jones v. State, 181 Ga. 19, 181 S.E. 80 (1935).

Videotaped confession not admissible after plea agreement void. — When a plea agreement was conditioned on defendant’s giving a videotaped statement and, after defendant accepted the deal and gave the statement, defendant decided to plead not guilty, the statement was not admissible at defendant’s trial. Corthran v. State, 268 Ga. 443, 491 S.E.2d 66 (1997).

Defendants taped telephone conversation properly admitted. — Admission of the defendant’s secretly-taped telephone conversation with a coconspirator did not violate O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-50 and 24-9-20; the elicitation of the defendant’s unguarded response to a perceived confidante regarding the circumstances of the crimes in which they had both participated was clearly designed to procure an unfiltered, genuine statement from the defendant. Further, absent any evidence that the police investigative techniques were designed to induce the slightest hope of benefit or fear of injury, the resulting statements were not rendered involuntary. Thorpe v. State, 285 Ga. 604, 678 S.E.2d 913 (2009).

Admonishment to tell the truth and that defendant safer in custody. — With regard to a defendant’s convictions for felony murder, with the underlying felony being rape, among other crimes, the trial court did not err by admitting the defendant’s statements made to the police into evidence since the statements were not induced by fear of injury and hope of benefit. Specifically, the detectives’ admonishing the defendant to be truthful was not a hope of benefit rendering the defendant's confession inadmissible nor did the detectives' suggestion that the defendant would be safer in custody induce fear of injury. Mangrum v. State, 285 Ga. 676, 681 S.E.2d 130 (2009).

Voluntariness established. — A defendant's contention that the defendant's custodial statements, made without counsel present, should have been suppressed under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 because the defendant was read the defendant's rights, confirmed that those rights were understood, and signed a waiver of rights, and the officer repeatedly told the defendant that the officer could not promise the defendant any benefit. Stevens v. State, 286 Ga. 692, 690 S.E.2d 816 (2010).

2. Preliminary Proceedings

Statute requires as an indispensable foundation to the introduction of an alleged confession a showing that the confession was freely and voluntarily made and that the confession was not induced by another by the slightest fear of punishment nor the remotest hope of reward. Sims v. State, 221 Ga. 190, 144 S.E.2d 103 (1965), rev'd on other grounds, 385 U.S. 538, 87 S. Ct. 639, 17 L. Ed. 2d 593, later appeal, 223 Ga. 465, 156 S.E.2d 65, rev'd on other grounds, 389 U.S. 404, 88 S. Ct. 523, 19 L. Ed. 2d 634 (1967).

Equal application to state and private actions. — Requirement of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 for a hearing on the voluntariness of confessions applies equally to state and private actions. Griffin v. State, 230 Ga. App. 318, 496 S.E.2d 480 (1998).

Separate hearing required. — When a confession is challenged, as by objection to the confession's introduction in evidence, a separate hearing on the question of voluntariness must be held before the trial judge but when no challenge is made or ruling invoked, there is no requirement for such a hearing. Smith v. State, 131 Ga. App. 605, 206 S.E.2d 708 (1974).

When the voluntariness of a confession is questioned it is necessary under the decision in Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S. 368, 378 U.S. 368, 12 L. Ed. 2d 908, 1 A.L.R.3d 1205 (1964) to have a separate hearing as to the confession's voluntariness before the confession is finally presented to the jury for consideration as to the confession's voluntariness. In the absence of a proper objection, however, there is no requirement for such a hearing. James v. State, 223 Ga. 677, 157 S.E.2d 471 (1967); Royals v. State, 155 Ga. App. 378, 270 S.E.2d 906 (1980).

In a prosecution for theft by taking, defendants were entitled to a preliminary hearing and threshold determination by the trial court on the voluntariness of written confessions defendants gave to an employee of a retail store. Griffin v. State, 230 Ga. App. 318, 496 S.E.2d 480 (1998).

Requirement for a hearing on the issue of voluntariness applies only if the evidence presents a fair question as to the confession's voluntariness. Carter v. State, 239 Ga. App. 549, 521 S.E.2d 590 (1999).

Burden of proof as to the voluntariness of a confession is upon the state. McLemore v. State, 181 Ga. 462, 182 S.E. 618 (1935); Smith v. State, 132 Ga. App. 491, 208 S.E.2d 351 (1974); Jones v. State, 245 Ga. 592, 266 S.E.2d 201 (1980); Cofield v. State, 247 Ga. 98, 274 S.E.2d 530 (1981).

Burden of proof can shift. When such confession is shown to have been freely and voluntarily made, the burden is then on the defendant to show that the confession was not so made. Bradberry v. State, 170 Ga. 859, 154 S.E. 344 (1930).

Standard for determining the admissibility of confessions is the preponderance of the evidence. Pierce v. State, 235 Ga. 237, 219 S.E.2d 158 (1975); Gates v. State, 244 Ga. 587, 261 S.E.2d 349 (1979); Jones v. State, 245 Ga. 592, 266 S.E.2d 201 (1980); Lee v. State, 154 Ga. App. 562, 269 S.E.2d 65 (1980); Etterle v. State, 155 Ga. App. 210, 270 S.E.2d 376 (1980); Whitacre v. State, 155 Ga. App. 359, 270 S.E.2d 894 (1980); Bridges v. State, 155 Ga. App. 369, 271 S.E.2d 25 (1980); Fowler v. State, 246 Ga. 256, 271 S.E.2d 168 (1980); Tyler v. State, 247 Ga. 119, 274 S.E.2d 549, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 882, 102 S. Ct. 364, 70 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1981).

Prima facie showing as to a confession's voluntary character must be made before the confession is admissible into evidence, and if this preliminary proof fails to make such a showing, the confession or statement must be excluded. Bryant v. State, 191 Ga. 686, 13 S.E.2d 820 (1941); Sconyers v. State, 67 Ga. App. 902, 21 S.E.2d 504 (1942); Garrett v. State, 203 Ga. 756, 48 S.E.2d 377 (1948); Phillips v. State, 206 Ga. 418, 57 S.E.2d 555

(1950); Lemon v. State, 80 Ga. App. 854, 57 S.E.2d 626 (1950).

Grounds for exclusion. — Until it affirmatively appears from testimony, without question, that proposed confession was freely and voluntarily made, without any extraneous inducement, the statement alleged to have been a confession must be excluded. McLemore v. State, 181 Ga. 462, 182 S.E. 618 (1935); Russell v. State, 196 Ga. 275, 26 S.E.2d 528 (1943).

Requirements for prima facie case. — Alleged confession should be affirmatively shown to have been made without the slightest hope of benefit or remotest fear of injury before the state has succeeded in making a prima facie case as will establish that the confession was free from extraneous inducement. McLemore v. State, 181 Ga. 462, 182 S.E. 618 (1935); Russell v. State, 196 Ga. 275, 26 S.E.2d 528 (1943); Lemon v. State, 80 Ga. App. 854, 57 S.E.2d 626 (1950).

Trial court must consider the totality of the circumstances to determine whether the state has proven that a confession was made voluntarily. Gates v. State, 244 Ga. 587, 261 S.E.2d 349 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 938, 100 S. Ct. 1332, 63 L. Ed. 2d 772 (1980); Lee v. State, 154 Ga. App. 562, 269 S.E.2d 65 (1980); Fowler v. State, 246 Ga. 256, 271 S.E.2d 168 (1980); Bassett v. State, 154 Ga. App. 829, 285 S.E.2d 260 (1981); Franklin v. State, 249 Ga. App. 834, 549 S.E.2d 794 (2001).

Inferences not acceptable. — On preliminary examination by the court, a witness should be permitted, over objection, to state an inference drawn from “collective facts” or to state in a shorthand way that a confession was freely and voluntarily made, without stating the circumstances under which the confession was made. Lemon v. State, 80 Ga. App. 854, 57 S.E.2d 626 (1950).

Defendant’s evidence. — If the evidence for the state makes out a prima facie case for the admission of such a confession, the court is not bound, before admitting the confession, to hear evidence on behalf of the accused, tending to show coercion or improper inducement in the confession’s procurement. McLemore v. State, 181 Ga. 462, 182 S.E. 618 (1935); Lemon v. State, 80 Ga. App. 854, 57 S.E.2d 626 (1950).

A hearing at which the defendant is not allowed to present testimony on the surrounding circumstances affecting the voluntariness of the defendant’s statements does not meet the standards of Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S. 368, 84 S. Ct. 1774, 12 L. Ed. 2d 908 (1964); Pittman v. State, 245 Ga. 453, 265 S.E.2d 592 (1980).

In making a determination of the voluntariness of a confession the defendant’s testimony is relevant and such proof must be allowed if the defendant elects to testify in this regard. Stone v. State, 155 Ga. App. 357, 271 S.E.2d 22 (1980).

When the voluntariness of a statement is not challenged, no violation of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 is asserted, and no hearing under Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S. 368 (84 SC 1774, 12 L. Ed. 2d 908) (1964) is required. Ward v. State, 242 Ga. App. 246, 529 S.E.2d 378 (2000), appeal dismissed, 299 Ga. App. 63, 682 S.E.2d 128 (2009).

Question for jury. — Once the state had made a prima facie showing of voluntariness, the question of whether or not defendant’s statement was freely and voluntarily given is one of fact for the jury’s determination. Griner v. State, 121 Ga. 614, 49 S.E. 700 (1905); Cantrell v. State, 141 Ga. 98, 80 S.E. 649 (1913); Thomas v. State, 169 Ga. 182, 149 S.E. 871 (1929); Bradberry v. State, 170 Ga. 859, 154 S.E. 344 (1930); Goodwin v. State, 45 Ga. App. 593, 165 S.E. 453 (1932); McLemore v. State, 181 Ga. 462, 182 S.E. 618 (1935); Bryant v. State, 191 Ga. 686, 13 S.E.2d 820 (1941); Sconyers v. State, 67 Ga. App. 902, 21 S.E.2d 504 (1942); Russell v. State, 196 Ga. 275, 26 S.E.2d 528 (1943); Stroup v. Mount, 197 Ga. 804, 30 S.E.2d 477 (1944); Byars v. State, 73 Ga. App. 727, 38 S.E.2d 53 (1946); Garrett v. State, 203 Ga. 756, 48 S.E.2d 377 (1948); Jackson v. State, 77 Ga. State*, 226 Ga. 292, 174 S.E.2d 440 (1970), vacated on other grounds, 408 U.S. 936, 92 S. Ct. 2845, 33 L. Ed. 2d 754 (1972); Trask v. State, 132 Ga. App. 645, 208 S.E.2d 591 (1974); *Frazier v. 3. Instructions Omission to charge on the law of confessions, in the absence of a timely request, is not error. Allen v. State, 187 Ga. 178, 200 S.E. 109 (1938); Mims v. State, 188 Ga. 702, 4 S.E.2d 831 (1939); Sconyers v. State, 67 Ga. App. 902, 21 S.E.2d 504 (1942); Murray v. State, 214 Ga. 350, 104 S.E.2d 905 (1958); Staggers v. State, 101 Ga. App. 463, 114 S.E.2d 142 (1960); McCorquodale v. State, 233 Ga. 369, 211 S.E.2d 577 (1974), cert. denied, 428 U.S. 910, 96 S. Ct. 3223, 49 L. Ed. 2d 1218 (1976); Welch v. State, 235 Ga. 243, 219 S.E.2d 151 (1975).

Charge on the law of confessions, when unauthorized by the evidence, constitutes reversible error. Allen v. State, 187 Ga. 178, 200 S.E. 109 (1938); Johnson v. State, 240 Ga. 528, 50 S.E.2d 334 (1948); Carter v. State, 90 Ga. App. 61, 81 S.E.2d 868 (1954); Sanford v. State, 153 Ga. App. 541, 265 S.E.2d 868 (1980).

Charge embodying the principles of law contained in former Code 1933, §§ 38-411 and 38-420 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-50 and 24-3-53) is not error because of the failure to charge the principles of law which deal with the admissibility of such statement into evidence. Walker v. State, 226 Ga. 292, 174 S.E.2d 440 (1970), vacated on other grounds, 408 U.S. 936, 92 S. Ct. 2845, 33 L. Ed. 2d 754 (1972).

Law on confessions was properly charged in the following cases. — See Oglesby v. State, 80 Ga. App. 493, 56 S.E.2d 637 (1949); Philpot v. State, 212 Ga. 79, 90 S.E.2d 577 (1955); Weatherby v. State, 213 Ga. 188, 97 S.E.2d 698 (1957); Kennedy v. State, 156 Ga. App. 792, 275 S.E.2d 339 (1980); Kirton v. State, 246 Ga. App. 670, 541 S.E.2d 673 (2000).

If the defendant wanted an elaboration of the charge actually given on confessions, the defendant should have submitted a timely written request. Webb v. State, 73 Ga. App. 748, 38 S.E.2d 54 (1946).

Trial court not required to give instruction absent specific request. — Because the defendant failed to request a charge on voluntariness of confessions and consideration of statements, admissions, and confessions, the defendant was precluded from asserting error on that basis; the trial court did not need to give an instruction on voluntariness of confessions absent a specific request therefor. Thorpe v. State, 285 Ga. 604, 678 S.E.2d 913 (2009).

4. Review

Failure of defendant to request hearing. — When the defendant did not request a hearing under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50 as to the admissibility and voluntariness of defendant's non-custodial admission, the appellate court had no jurisdiction to address the failure of the trial court to conduct a hearing as to that issue. Hawkins v. State, 236 Ga. App. 346, 512 S.E.2d 59 (1999).

Since there was no evidence a confession was false, the conclusion that the confession was voluntary was not clearly erroneous. Pinckney v. State, 259 Ga. App. 309, 576 S.E.2d 574 (2003).

Failure to include videotaped statement within appellate record. — Defendant failed to include the videotape or a transcript of the audio portion in the appellate record and the appellate court was unable to review defendant's contention that the trial court erred by denying the motion to suppress the videotaped statement to the police on the ground that certain comments by the interviewing detective constituted a hope of benefit. Clark v. State, 279 Ga. 243, 611 S.E.2d 38 (2005).

Judge's conclusion that the confession is voluntary must appear from the record with unmistakable clarity, although the judge need not make formal findings of fact or write an opinion. When there has been no ruling on the issue of voluntariness made with the required "unmistakable clarity," remand with instruction to conduct a further hearing and make a determination of voluntariness may be appropriate. Cofield v. State, 247 Ga. 98, 274 S.E.2d 530 (1981).

It is the duty of the Supreme Court of Georgia to independently review the evidence to determine whether the state has carried the state's burden of proving the admissibility of the accused's confession by a preponderance of the evidence. Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574, 261 S.E.2d 379 (1979), sentence vacated, 446 U.S. 961, 100 S. Ct. 2934, 64 L. Ed. 2d 819 (1980).

Appellate court upholds Jackson v. Denno findings. — Trial court sits as the factfinder in a Jackson-Denno hearing (Jackson v. Denno, 378 U.S. 368 (1964)) regarding the voluntariness of a confession and its resolution of factual issues will be upheld by an appellate court unless it is clearly erroneous. Harrison v. State, 253 Ga. App. 179, 558 S.E.2d 760 (2002).

Unless clearly erroneous, a trial court's findings as to factual determinations and credibility relating to the admissibility of a confession will be upheld on appeal. Gates v. State, 244 Ga. 587, 261 S.E.2d 349 (1979), cert. denied, 445 U.S. 938, 100 S. Ct. 1332, 63 L. Ed. 2d 772 (1980); Green v. State, 154 Ga. App. 295, 267 S.E.2d 898 (1980); Etterle v. State, 155 Ga. App. 210, 270 S.E.2d 376 (1980); Phipps v. State, 155 Ga. App. 229, 270 S.E.2d 393 (1980); Whitacre v. State, 155 Ga. App. 359, 270 S.E.2d 894 (1980); Fowler v. State, 247 Ga. 751, 279 S.E.2d 678 (1981).

Determinations regarding the facts and witness credibility are entirely within the purview of the trial court and will not be disturbed unless such determinations are clearly erroneous. Ward v. State, 234 Ga. App. 610, 507 S.E.2d 506 (1998).

Trial court's denial of defendant's motion to suppress defendant's statement to police was proper and not clearly erroneous because the statement was found to have been made voluntarily, without the slightest hope of benefit or remotest fear of injury under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-50; as the police officer's statements to defendant were nothing more than routine police questioning, aimed at eliciting a response from defendant in custody, and statements from the officer that defendant may not have intended to kill the victim did not amount to a hope of benefit, nor did a statement that defendant would not be prosecuted on drug charges give defendant any hope of benefit, as it was made because there was no evidence of the drugs. Pittman v. State, 277 Ga. 475, 592 S.E.2d 72 (2004).

24-3-51. Confessions under spiritual exhortation or promise of secrecy or collateral benefit admissible.

The fact that a confession has been made under a spiritual exhortation, a promise of secrecy, or a promise of collateral benefit shall not exclude it. (Orig. Code 1863, § 3717; Code 1868, § 3741; Code 1873, § 3794; Code 1882, § 3794; Penal Code 1895, § 1007; Penal Code 1910, § 1033; Code 1933, § 38-412.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Reason for rule. — Keeping in view the true reason upon which confession evidence is excluded, and the test by which the courts have sought to determine whether or not the truthfulness of the confession is sufficiently evidenced to admit the evidence thereof to the jury, it is clear that a confession should not be excluded because made under spiritual exhortation, or promise of secrecy, or promise of collateral benefit, since these means, or none of them, have the slightest tendency in a proper sense to induce one to confess falsely. Wilson v. State, 19 Ga. App. 759, 92 S.E. 309 (1917).

Confessions otherwise admissible are not rendered inadmissible because the accused was told by another in substance that it was always best to tell the truth. Turner v. State, 203 Ga. 770, 48 S.E.2d 522 (1948); Tyler v. State, 247 Ga. 119, 274 S.E.2d 549, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 882, 102 S. Ct. 364, 70 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1981).

Prayers overheard. — Testimony that the defendant while alone in defendant's cell was overheard to say, "Lord, have mercy upon me for what I have done; the only thing I regret is killing my father," was not incompetent because the witness was the jailer in charge of the defendant, the law not disqualifying a jailer from testifying as to voluntary acts and confessions of prisoners under the jailer's charge. Testimony as to prayers in which the defendant declared defendant's innocence of the crime, although offered in reply to the above, was properly rejected, the rule being to admit inculpatory declarations or confessions, and to exclude those which are exculpatory, when disconnected therewith. Woolfolk v. State, 85 Ga. 69, 11 S.E. 814 (1890).

Spiritual exhortations. — Confession made by the defendant to a fellow-prisoner, who was in jail for stealing, and grossly irreligious, as appears from defendant's own evidence, but who read the Bible and sang Psalms to the defendant, and told the defendant that if the defendant were guilty the defendant had better confess and seek the defendant's God, was admissible. Stafford v. State, 55 Ga. 591 (1876).

Fact that the statements made by the defendant were in response to an appeal made by the defendant's sister, in which she alluded to the death of defendant's brother and incarceration of defendant's mother as results of the crime, would not render the statements inadmissible. The appeal was not stronger than "spiritual exhortations," which the Code declares shall not exclude a confession. White v. State, 177 Ga. 115, 169 S.E. 499 (1933).

Promise to help keep defendant out of certain prison. — Confession is not rendered inadmissible by an assurance that whatever help could be given would be given in keeping the defendant out of a certain prison, since this is similar to a promise to inform the court of a defendant's cooperation. Patrick v. State, 169 Ga. App. 302, 312 S.E.2d 385 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 509, 314 S.E.2d 909 (1984).

Investigator offered collateral benefit by talking to DA office. — An investigator's statement that the investigator would talk to the district attorney's office at a later time about having a warrant against the defendant dismissed was no more than a promise of a collateral benefit and thus did not make the defendant's custodial statement inadmissible under O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-50 and 24-3-51. Boone v. State, 293 Ga. App. 654, 667 S.E.2d 880 (2008).

Promises to obtain psychiatric help and medical attention for defendant were not the kind of "hope of benefit" which would invalidate defendant's subsequent confession. Head v. State, 180 Ga. App. 901, 350 S.E.2d 854 (1986).

Promise to secure counseling. — With regard to an alleged promise by a detective to help secure counseling for the defendant when the defendant got to prison, the benefit involved was no hope of lighter punishment (induced by a person other than the defendant) but was a collateral benefit which did not render defendant's confession inadmissible. Hall v. State, 180 Ga. App. 366, 349 S.E.2d 255 (1986).

Promise to end adverse publicity. — When an inculpatory statement was made by the fire department lieutenant in return for the investigator's alleged promise to "stop all the publicity against the fire and police department and not arrest and persecute anyone else," the promise pertained to collateral benefits and the trial court did not err in ruling the statement to be voluntary and admissible. Johnson v. State, 170 Ga. App. 71, 316 S.E.2d 160 (1984).

Promise to get help for drug problem. — Officer's promise to help the defendant with a drug problem was a collateral benefit and did not bear on the question of punishment; hence, the trial court did not clearly err in admitting the defendant's statement in evidence as such did not amount to a promise of leniency in exchange for the statement. Smith v. State, 281 Ga. App. 91, 635 S.E.2d 385 (2006).

Reduction in bond. — Reduction of bond is in the same class of collateral benefits as the promises of a solitary cell, a psychiatric examination, and communication to the judge of the defendant's cooperation. Heard v. State, 165 Ga. App. 252, 300 S.E.2d 213 (1983); Pounds v. State, 189 Ga. App. 809, 377 S.E.2d 722 (1989).

Long relationship as confidential informant. — Statements of an inculpatory nature made while in custody were not inadmissible under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-51 on the theory that defendant worked with law enforcement officers as a confidential informant for many years and that it was understood that the defendant would be "taken care of" and the sheriff admitted that in the sheriff's own mind the sheriff felt the sheriff owed defendant something, since there were no overt promises made and the understanding was subjective in nature. Tyson v. State, 165 Ga. App. 22, 299 S.E.2d 69 (1983).

PROCEDURAL CONSIDERATIONS

General Consideration

Former Code 1933, § 38-414 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52) defined an exception to the general rule of former Code 1933, § 38-301 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-1) which discouraged the use of hearsay evidence. Hill v. State, 239 Ga. 278, 236 S.E.2d 626 (1977).

Former Code 1933, § 38-414 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52) was a limitation upon former Code 1933, § 38-306 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5). Munsford v. State, 235 Ga. 38, 218 S.E.2d 792 (1975); Price v. State, 239 Ga. 439, 238 S.E.2d 24 (1979).

Former Code 1933, §§ 38-306 and 38-414 (see O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-5 and 24-3-52) were mutually exclusive so a conspirator’s statement is made either “during” or “after” the conspiracy. Crowder v. State, 237 Ga. 141, 227 S.E.2d 230 (1976).

An incriminatory declaration made by one conspirator is either made “during the pendency of the criminal project,” and is thus admissible against the other conspirators under former Code 1933, § 38-306 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-5), or it is made “after the enterprise is ended,” and is thus inadmissible against the other conspirators under former Code 1933, § 38-415 (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52). Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979).

Confession to a crime is not considered hearsay under Georgia law when admitted against a declarant. Green v. Georgia, 442 U.S. 95, 99 S. Ct. 2150, 60 L. Ed. 2d 738 (1979), cert. denied, 450 U.S. 936, 101 S. Ct. 1403, 67 L. Ed. 2d 372 (1981).

Application of statute. — Statute is applicable only when there is testimony by a third party as to a declaration, admission, or confession of a coconspirator and has no application when no such testimony is offered, but the accomplice merely testifies against the defendant on the trial of the case. Banks v. State, 113 Ga. App. 661, 149 S.E.2d 415 (1966).

Statute has application only if confessions or pleas of coconspirators are admitted in evidence. Boggus v. State, 136 Ga. App. 917, 222 S.E.2d 686 (1975).

When the confessing joint offender testifies and is subject to cross-examination, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52 will not bar admission of prior inconsistent statements. Brown v. State, 266 Ga. 723, 470 S.E.2d 652 (1996).

Declarations of either of the conspirators are admissible against the other so long as the concealment phase of the conspiracy continues. Timberlake v. State, 158 Ga. App. 125, 279 S.E.2d 283 (1981).

Intercepted conversation between coconspirators in the back seat of a patrol car was admissible in the trial of one of the coconspirators because the other took the stand and was subject to cross-examination, and because the conversation took place when the coconspirators were actively attempting concealment. Burgeson v. State, 267 Ga. 102, 475 S.E.2d 580 (1996).

Statute had no application in a case in which no confession of a joint offender or conspirator is offered, but when such joint offender or conspirator takes the stand and is subject to cross-examination. Pippin v. State, 205 Ga. 316, 53 S.E.2d 482 (1949); Daniels v. State, 136 Ga. App. 854, 222 S.E.2d 673 (1975).

Admission of a confession made by a coconspirator after termination of the conspiracy is quite a different thing from the admission of sworn testimony by a coconspirator, in which case, the coconspirator held to be a competent witness to testify as to any relevant matter concerning the charge, and this statute has no application. Brown v. State, 132 Ga. App. 200, 207 S.E.2d 682 (1974) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52 has no application when the joint offender or conspirator is sworn and testifies as a witness. Oliver v. State, 159 Ga. App. 154, 282 S.E.2d 767 (1981); Jones v. State, 169 Ga. App. 4, 311 S.E.2d 485 (1983); Fleeman v. State, 176 Ga. App. 447, 336 S.E.2d 45 (1985); Horne v. State, 177 Ga. App. 765, 341 S.E.2d 243 (1986).

O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52 is inapplicable when the joint offender or conspirator (the codefendant) takes the stand and is subject to cross-examination by the defendant's attorney. Lattimore v. State, 175 Ga. App. 756, 334 S.E.2d 701 (1985).

Statute does not prohibit an accomplice from testifying at trial as a witness for the state. Rawlins v. State, 124 Ga. 31, 52 S.E. 1 (1905), aff'd, 201 U.S. 638, 26 S. Ct. 560, 50 L. Ed. 899 (1906); Hill v. State, 239 Ga. 278, 236 S.E.2d 626 (1977).

Confession admissible when confessor available to testify. — Although the confession of a codefendant cannot usually be admitted against another defendant at a joint trial, the rule applies only where the codefendant does not testify and is not available for cross-examination. Akins v. State, 173 Ga. App. 797, 328 S.E.2d 413 (1985).

Recorded statement of coconspirator properly admitted. — Defendant alleged that the trial court erred by allowing the state to introduce a recorded statement which the defendant contended incriminated the defendant in violation of the rule announced in Bruton v. United States, 391 U. S. 123 (1968). Premitting whether the statement was admissible as a statement of a coconspirator, there was no error because the person giving the statement testified and was subject to cross examination. Further, Bruton only excludes statements by a non-testifying codefendant that directly inculpate the defendant. Overton v. State, 295 Ga. App. 223, 671 S.E.2d 507 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0654, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 212 (Ga. 2009).

Right to confrontation. — Eyewitness narration from the witness stand given by a co-offender and implicating defendants involvement in the crime was subjected to cross-examination by defendant and did not violate defendant's confrontation rights, nor did the testimony require an exception to the hearsay rule to gain admission into evidence. Hill v. State, 239 Ga. 278, 236 S.E.2d 626 (1977).

When the statement of the codefendant was made in front of the defendant, the defendant had been arrested and the fact of the choate crime had been revealed and there was absolutely no showing by the state that a conspiracy to cover up the crime still existed, the criminal project was not still pending, it had been completed, and the introduction of the statements of the codefendant through the testimony of the detective before whom the statement was made was in violation of this statute and violated the defendant's sixth amendment right to confrontation. Price v. State, 239 Ga. 439, 238 S.E.2d 24 (1977) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52).

Introduction of a confession of a codefendant who was never offered as a witness denies to the other codefendant the constitutional right to confrontation. Sewell v. State, 153 Ga. App. 177, 264 S.E.2d 708 (1980).

Because of the substantial risk that the jury, despite instructions to the contrary, shall look to the incriminating extrajudicial statements in determining a defendant's guilt, admission of the confession of a codefendant in a joint trial violated petitioner's right of cross-examination secured by the confrontation clause of the sixth amendment. Rachel v. State, 247 Ga. 130, 274 S.E.2d 475 (1981).

Confession of co-indictee. — Co-indictee's confession, made outside defendant's presence to a police officer after arrest, violated defendant's sixth amendment right to confront and cross-examine witnesses against the defendant, as well as the provisions of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52. Crawford v. State, 203 Ga. App. 215, 416 S.E.2d 820 (1992).

Codefendant's guilty plea. — It was not unreasonable for the prosecutor to reveal that one of defendant's two codefendants pled guilty as a way to explain to the jury why only two of the three individuals named in the indictments involved in this case were being tried. Welch v. State, 207 Ga. App. 27, 427 S.E.2d 22 (1992).

Since a co-indictee did not testify, the defendant's uncle's recitation of the co-indictee's purported confession would fall squarely within the hearsay rule (O.C.G.A. §§ 24-3-1 and 24-3-52) and was not admissible pursuant to any hearsay exception. Gardner v. State, 263 Ga. 197, 429 S.E.2d 657 (1993).

The rule that a guilty plea of a joint offender is not admissible in evidence at the trial of another joint offender does not apply when the joint offender is present at trial and testifies as a witness subject to cross-examination, or when the joint offender's guilty plea is admitted with instructions that it not be used as evidence of the defendant's guilt. Pinckney v. State, 236 Ga. App. 74, 510 S.E.2d 923 (1999).

When a joint offender briefly took the stand as a witness for the state and testified only concerning the offender's guilty plea, but the trial court did not allow the defendant to conduct any cross-examination, the exception to the general rule that the guilty plea of a joint offender is not admissible at the trial of another joint offender was not triggered, and the danger of prejudice to the defendant was great. Pinckney v. State, 236 Ga. App. 74, 510 S.E.2d 923 (1999).

When the trial court gave no limiting instruction at the time the testimony of a joint offender regarding the offender's guilty plea was given without cross-examination being permitted, and during the charge did not instruct the jury that the testimony could not be used as substantive evidence of the defendant's guilt, but merely that the jury was not required to use the fact that the co-indictee pled guilty against the defendant, the instruction was not sufficient to provide the defendant with a fair trial. Pinckney v. State, 236 Ga. App. 74, 510 S.E.2d 923 (1999).

Although defendant's trial counsel failed to object to the testimony concerning a guilty plea of a codefendant pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52 arising from the same incident that defendant was on trial for, as well as a reference to that plea by the prosecutor during closing argument, the decision not to object was a matter of trial strategy and, accordingly, deference was provided such that there was no finding of ineffective assistance. Johnson v. State, 279 Ga. App. 182, 630 S.E.2d 778 (2006).

erally inadmissible as evidence of a defendant's guilt, the prohibition is inapplicable when the co-indictee testifies at trial and is subject to cross examination. Bailey v. State, 273 Ga. 303, 540 S.E.2d 202 (2001).

Statements to or heard by witness. — When there is ample evidence of conspiracy among defendants, statements of any of the defendants to, or overheard by, a witness are admissible against all of the defendant's under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52. Fortner v. State, 248 Ga. 107, 281 S.E.2d 533 (1981).

Codefendant's extrajudicial statement. — Admission of codefendant's extrajudicial statement held not to be reversible error, see Hope v. State, 164 Ga. App. 665, 297 S.E.2d 88 (1982).

Confessions

Confession referred to in this statute is one which is recounted at trial by a third person, such as a police officer, not one made in person at trial by one of the perpetrators. Hill v. State, 239 Ga. 278, 236 S.E.2d 626 (1977) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52).

Incriminating statements which are not confessions. — Statements made by an individual, who was not a witness at trial, implicating the individual and the defendant in the indicted crime did not fall within this statute, because the individual was making no "confession" within the meaning of this statute, nor had the enterprise "ended." Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 101 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52).

Declaration that declarant only guilty one. — In the trial of one of two persons jointly indicted, the declarations of the other that the other alone committed the offense with which they are charged are not admissible in evidence in favor of the accused on trial. Robinson v. State, 114 Ga. 445, 40 S.E. 253 (1901); Parks v. State, 24 Ga. App. 243, 100 S.E. 724 (1919).

Nontestifying joint offender's confession not admissible. — Admission into evidence of a videotaped confession by defendant's brother was reversible error. Brooks v. State, 271 Ga. 698, 523 S.E.2d 866 (1999).

Statement after conspiracy confirmed by defendant. — Evidence as to admissions of guilt involving the defendant, made by a coconspirator after the termination of the conspiracy, was admissible since it appeared that the admissions were made in the presence of the defendant personally and were then freely and voluntarily declared by the defendant to be true. Gunter v. State, 19 Ga. App. 772, 92 S.E. 314 (1917); Creel v. State, 216 Ga. 233, 115 S.E.2d 552 (1960); Graham v. State, 111 Ga. App. 542, 142 S.E.2d 287 (1965).

Hearsay testimony of purported coconspirators. — Admission of hearsay testimony of police officers recounting the confessions of purported coconspirators who did not testify violated defendant's constitutional right to confront witnesses. Livingston v. State, 268 Ga. 205, 486 S.E.2d 845 (1997).

Codefendant's confession admissible when supported by defendant's confession. — Testimony presented in a codefendant's confession which is supported by the complaining defendant's own confession is admissible against the defendant. Matthews v. State, 167 Ga. App. 28, 305 S.E.2d 846 (1983); Moore v. State, 176 Ga. App. 882, 339 S.E.2d 271 (1985).

Excluding a codefendant's statement to the police was proper since the codefendant did not testify at the trial and was not available for cross-examination, and since the statement lacked sufficient reliability to be admissible. Douglas v. State, 228 Ga. App. 368, 491 S.E.2d 821 (1997).

Admission of interlocking confessions. — Error in the admission of codefendant's custodial statements in which each implicated the other by name and act was harmless since each defendant admitted to each defendant's participation in the criminal plan, and the objectionable portion of each statement implicating the other codefendant was cumulative of separate evidence that defendants bragged to others about what the defendant's had done. Sawyer v. State, 217 Ga. App. 406, 457 S.E.2d 685 (1995). But see Hanifa v. State, 269 Ga. 797, 505 S.E.2d 731 (1998); Hodges v. State, 229 Ga. App. 475, 494 S.E.2d 223 (1997).

Unless a statement is otherwise directly admissible against a defendant, the confrontation clause is violated by the admission of a nontestifying codefendant's statement which inculpatates the defendant by referring to the defendant's name or existence, regardless of the existence of limiting instructions and of whether the incriminated defendant has made an interlocking incriminating statement. Cosby v. State, 254 Ga. App. 372, 562 S.E.2d 765 (2002).

Trial court erred in admitting codefendant's confession in which the codefendant implicated defendant and another codefendant in a burglary that involved stealing a shotgun from an acquaintance so that the three people could go and confront a drug dealer as statutory law made the confession of the codefendant only admissible against the codefendant and not against defendant. Myers v. State, 256 Ga. App. 135, 567 S.E.2d 742 (2002).

End of Enterprise

Statute clearly contemplates a point in time when the conspiracy, including the concealment stage, is at an end so as to render a subsequent confession by an alleged coconspirator inadmissible in the trial of a defendant who continues to deny the defendant's guilt. Hill v. State, 232 Ga. 800, 209 S.E.2d 153 (1974).

Crucial question in determining whether the statement of one conspirator may be used as evidence of guilt against another conspirator is whether the conspiracy had ended at the time the statement was made. Munsford v. State, 235 Ga. 38, 218 S.E.2d 792 (1975).

Confession of one joint offender, made after the enterprise has ended, is admissible only against the offender, and cannot be used against the other defendant at a joint trial when the joint offender does not testify and is not available for cross-examination. Matthews v. State, 167 Ga. App. 28, 305 S.E.2d 846 (1983).

Post-arrest confession of coconspirator who does not testify at trial, which confession is not made in the presence of the defendant, is inadmissible because such a confession is a "desertion" by the coconspirator and thus operates to terminate the conspiracy. Pritchard v. State, 160 Ga. App. 105, 286 S.E.2d 338 (1981).

Ultimate purpose must be accomplished. — Phrase "after the enterprise is ended," necessarily makes admissible any statements made by any of the conspirators until the ultimate purpose of the conspiracy has been accomplished. Rawlings v. State, 163 Ga. 406, 136 S.E. 448 (1926).

Conspiracy is deemed to progress until the conspirator's ultimate purpose is accomplished and may include acts performed and declarations made after the commission of the crime, and conspiratorial efforts to conceal the facts of the crime and the identity of the perpetrators are a continuance of a conspiracy. Timberlake v. State, 158 Ga. App. 125, 279 S.E.2d 283 (1981).

In legal contemplation, the enterprise may not be at an end so long as the concealment of the crime or the identity of all the conspirators has not been disclosed. Acts and declarations of such undisclosed conspirators, looking to the concealment of identity and the suppression of evidence, are admissible against other conspirators. Mitchell v. State, 86 Ga. App. 292, 71 S.E.2d 756 (1952); Chatterton v. State, 221 Ga. 424, 144 S.E.2d 726 (1965), cert. denied, 384 U.S. 1015, 86 S. Ct. 1964, 16 L. Ed. 2d 1036 (1966); Munsford v. State, 235 Ga. 38, 218 S.E.2d 792 (1975); Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979).

Proof that a crime has been committed does not necessarily prove the end of the conspiracy so as to render acts and declarations of conspirators after that time inadmissible against the other coconspirators for the conspiracy may be kept open for various purposes, such as, securing the proceeds of the crime, the division of such proceeds, the concealment of evidence tending to criminate the conspirators, procuring witnesses, influencing witnesses with respect to their testimony, the fabrication of evidence tending to exculpate the conspirators, the fabrication of a defense, or in any way avoiding prosecution or punishment. Thompson v. State, 58 Ga. App. 593, 199 S.E. 568 (1938).

Arrest of participants does not necessarily end conspiracy. — Conspiracy or the concealment phase of a conspiracy does not necessarily end just because one or more participants have been arrested and jailed. Mooney v. State, 243 Ga. 373, 254 S.E.2d 337, cert. denied, 444 U.S. 886, 101 S. Ct. 179, 62 L. Ed. 2d 116 (1979).

When motive for the crime is not just the crime's commission, but the crime's commission is a prerequisite to a further act, then conspiracy is not ended until this end is achieved, since concealment is a part of the conspiracy, and the crime itself is only an incident necessary for the success of the purpose of the conspiracy. Pritchard v. State, 160 Ga. App. 105, 286 S.E.2d 338 (1981).

Actions after commission of crime. — Acts, conduct, and sayings of any of the conspirators other than the accused, after the commission of the crime, are admissible when the acts sought to be proved were contemplated by the terms of the conspiracy to be performed after the perpetration of the crime was completed. Rawlins v. State, 124 Ga. 31, 52 S.E. 1 (1905), aff'd, 201 U.S. 638, 26 S. Ct. 560, 50 L. Ed. 899 (1906); Baker v. State, 17 Ga. App. 279, 86 S.E. 530 (1915).

Statements to police. — Confession made to police by a conspirator in which other conspirators are identified and their participation is described is not made during the pendency of the criminal project, but is made after the enterprise is ended. Crowder v. State, 237 Ga. 141, 227 S.E.2d 230 (1976); Welch v. State, 237 Ga. 665, 229 S.E.2d 390 (1976).

Statements made by a conspirator to the police after the conspirator's arrest, which statements incriminate another conspirator, terminate the conspiracy and are, therefore, inadmissible against the other conspirators. Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979).

In a prosecution for possession of methamphetamine, as a codefendant's statement to a police officer, attributing the defendant's unconscious state to the fact that the defendant had been drinking or smoking, had been made after the conspiracy ended, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52, the statement was not admissible against the defendant. O'Neill v. State, 285 Ga. 125, 674 S.E.2d 302 (2009).

Procedural Considerations

Failure to prove conspiracy. — When the fact of conspiracy has not been proved by independent evidence, a coconspirator's testimony that another coconspirator committed the murders is admissible at the second conspirator's trial as an admission of guilt just as a confession by a conspirator to a law enforcement officer would be admissible in that conspirator's trial. Birt v. State, 236 Ga. 815, 225 S.E.2d 248, cert. denied, 429 U.S. 1029, 97 S. Ct. 654, 50 L. Ed. 2d 632 (1976).

Codefendant's guilty plea admissible for purposes other than substantive evidence. —

One person's guilty plea or conviction may not be used as substantive evidence of the guilt of another, but the introduction of a codefendant's guilty plea is permissible when the plea's use is limited to proper evidentiary purposes such as to impeach trial testimony or to reflect on a witness's credibility. Foster v. State, 178 Ga. App. 478, 343 S.E.2d 745 (1986); Strickland v. State, 198 Ga. App. 570, 402 S.E.2d 532 (1991).

Deletion of references to appellant in codefendant's statement. — When any reference to appellant in codefendant's statement was deleted, and the statement as testified to in court did not in any way implicate appellant, it was not, in the absence of a request, reversible error to fail to charge that such statement could not be considered against appellant pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52. Mock v. State, 163 Ga. App. 319, 294 S.E.2d 361 (1982).

It was not error to admit interlocking confessions of codefendants since the trial court instructed the jury that the jury could consider the statement of each accused only against the person who made the statement and each accused had confessed to the commission of the crime in writing. Cochran v. State, 177 Ga. App. 471, 339 S.E.2d 749 (1986).

Defendant's attempt to cross examine the accomplice was an improper attempt at impeachment. — Defendant did not properly comply with the procedure for introducing an accomplice's conviction into evidence. Castleberry v. State, 274 Ga. 290, 553 S.E.2d 606 (2001).

Admission of video-taped pretrial statements of two of three codefendants was proper since the statements were interlocking and supportive of each other, the evidence against each defendant was overwhelming, and the jury was properly charged to consider the statements only against the respective makers. Wright v. State, 263 Ga. 810, 440 S.E.2d 7 (1994).

This statute should be given to the jury when a confession or incriminating statement is admitted against one codefendant in the trial of joint defendants. However, testimony of a codefendant, having been sworn in as a witness, is to be received and weighed as other evidence in the trial. Rhodes v.

State, 135 Ga. App. 484, 218 S.E.2d 159 (1975) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52).

If no objections are made to statements of codefendants at trial, and no special instruction requested, such objections are waived. However, statements of codefendants made after the enterprise is ended are not admissible as to other codefendants. Gallman v. State, 127 Ga. App. 849, 195 S.E.2d 187 (1973).

Failure to charge statute. — When there was no evidence of a confession made after a conspiracy has come to an end, it is not error for the court to fail to charge the provisions of this statute. Robinson v. State, 229 Ga. 14, 189 S.E.2d 53 (1972) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52).

Court does not err in permitting a witness for the state to read the in-custody statements of the three defendants on trial to the jury without charging the jury the provisions of this statute, but the statements of the codefendants have no probative value against the other codefendants. Gallman v. State, 127 Ga. App. 849, 195 S.E.2d 187 (1973) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52).

Failure to charge O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52 without request was not error since defendants conferred with each other before making the taped confession, and since the issue was presented directly to the jury as to whether statements which defendants first testified about were voluntary and true or the result of coercion and false. Dunbar v. State, 163 Ga. App. 243, 292 S.E.2d 897 (1982).

Although the out-of-court confession of a codefendant or coconspirator made after the enterprise is ended is admissible in evidence only against that one, if such codefendant appears as a witness at trial, that codefendant may testify against the other codefendant or coconspirator and such testimony is to be treated as all other evidence. Wimberly v. State, 205 Ga. App. 818, 423 S.E.2d 728 (1992).

Harmless error. — Failure to instruct jury with regard to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52 is harmless error when the codefendant is sworn as a witness and testified to the same facts as those contained in the codefendant's statement. Oliver v. State, 159 Ga. App. 154, 282 S.E.2d 767 (1981).

Although the confession of one joint offender, made after the enterprise has ended, is admissible only against that offender, since the confession of the defendant was introduced into evidence and such confession clearly showed the defendant's guilt, the error in reading defendant's name while presenting the confession of the defendant's joint-indictee to the jury was harmless error. Mahone v. State, 237 Ga. 120, 227 S.E.2d 16 (1976).

Eventual testimony and cross-examination vitiates charge of harmfulness. — Defense counsel's failure to object to testimony of accomplice at time of introduction was not harmful because accomplice eventually testified at hearing and was subject to cross-examination; and as such the testimony objected to on appeal was cumulative of the accomplice's in-court testimony. In re J.B., 223 Ga. App. 429, 477 S.E.2d 874 (1996).

Because a coconspirator testified under oath at trial and was subject to cross examination, the concerns of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52 were satisfied and the statements were properly admitted. Harrison v. State, 298 Ga. App. 870, 681 S.E.2d 252 (2009).

New trial required. — All writings introduced in evidence in lieu of testimony from the witness stand, such as interrogatories, depositions, dying declarations, and confessions of guilt of a defendant or of an alleged coconspirator, which depend entirely for their value on the credibility of the maker, should not be in the possession of the jury during the jury's deliberations; thus, when the defendants' and alleged coconspirators' signed statements are delivered to the jury, over timely objections, a new trial must be granted. Royals v. State, 208 Ga. 78, 65 S.E.2d 158 (1951).

Motion for mistrial should be granted when after a joint enterprise is terminated, testimony is elicited to corroborate testimony of the accomplice tending to implicate the defendant which is violative of this statute and extremely prejudicial to the defendant, and unless stricken from the record and the defect in some way cured, a motion for mistrial should be granted. Dudley v. State, 148 Ga. App. 560, 251 S.E.2d 815 (1978) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52).

Review of relevancy motions. — Defendant's objection to the admission of testimony on grounds of irrelevancy, whether valid or not without more specification, is subject to review when the trial court ruled on the objection and treated the objection as valid. Mindock v. State, 187 Ga. App. 508, 370 S.E.2d 670 (1988).

Limiting instruction need not be contemporaneous with admission of coconspirator's statement. — Under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-52, there was no error in the trial court's decision not to give a limiting instruction contemporaneously with the admission of a coconspirator's post-conspiracy custodial statement because the trial court gave a proper limiting instruction in the general jury charge. Short v. State, 276 Ga. App. 340, 623 S.E.2d 195 (2005).

General Consideration

History generally. — The opinion of Judge Lumpkin in Miller v. Cotten, 5 Ga. 341 (1848), has been since followed, and from it and its successors on the same line the provisions of this statute have been drawn; in fact this statute embodies principles, long previously established by the common-law courts, and are merely declaratory of these principles. Beall v. Clark, 71 Ga. 818 (1883) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53).

Reason for the rule. — All confessions should be received with care and caution, not on account of the character of the testimony, but on account of the fact of their transmission through one or two different channels with consequent liability of mistake as to what was said, and liability of mistake in repeating. Calvin v. State, 118 Ga. 73, 44 S.E. 848 (1903).

That a witness is liable to misunderstand the language of the one making the confession is another reason for the rule. Minton v. State, 99 Ga. 254, 25 S.E. 626 (1896).

Discretion of court. — While admissions should be scanned with care, admissions are evidence; and when a jury bases a verdict thereon, and the trial judge approves the finding, the reviewing court will not interfere with the judge's discretion in refusing a new trial. Burk v. Hill, 119 Ga. 38, 45 S.E. 732 (1903).

When trial judge resolves issues in favor of admissibility, such factual and credibility determinations must be accepted by appellate courts unless such determinations are clearly erroneous. Cunningham v. State, 248 Ga. 835, 286 S.E.2d 427 (1982).

It is not required that admissions be corroborated by other evidence in the case, as are confessions of the crime. Sheffield v. State, 188 Ga. 1, 2 S.E.2d 657 (1939); Lowe v. State, 267 Ga. 180, 476 S.E.2d 583 (1996).

While admissions are to be scanned with care and considered, along with other evidence, for what the admissions are worth, it is not required that the admissions be corroborated by other evidence as are confessions to a crime. Brown v. State, 167 Ga. App. 851, 307 S.E.2d 737 (1983); Williams v. State, 246 Ga. App. 347, 540 S.E.2d 305 (2000).

Defendant's statement in which the defendant did not admit every essential element of the charged offense constituted an admission rather than a confession for which no corroboration was required. Stowers v. State, 205 Ga. App. 518, 422 S.E.2d 870 (1992), cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 901, 422 S.E.2d 870 (1992); Herrington v. State, 243 Ga. App. 265, 533 S.E.2d 133 (2000), appeal dismissed, 265 Ga. App. 454, 594 S.E.2d 682 (2004).

Standard for determining admissibility of confessions is preponderance of the evidence. Bassett v. State, 159 Ga. App. 829, 285 S.E.2d 260 (1981).

Applicable rules when state relies on defendant's statements to show intent. — When the state solely relies upon the extrajudicial statements of the accused alone to show intent to commit the crime charged and no other evidence is introduced to show such intent there are two rules which apply: one rule holds that the defendant's explanation of the crime charged must be accepted since the defendant's statement is consistent with the physical facts shown, and the other rule holds that the defendant's explanation may be rejected by the trial court when the defendant's statement is not consistent with and does not explain the other direct and circumstantial evidence. Stevens v. State, 247 Ga. 698, 278 S.E.2d 398 (1981), cert. denied, 463 U.S. 1213, 103 S. Ct. 3551, 77 L. Ed. 2d 1398 (1982).

Fact that language of confession indicates commission of other offense. — It is no valid ground of objection to the admission in evidence of an incriminatory statement or confession made by the accused in a criminal case that the language indicated that the accused had committed also another and separate offense. Laney v. State, 159 Ga. App. 609, 284 S.E.2d 114 (1981).

Admission is not inadmissible on grounds that it was written by someone else from defendant's dictation, even if defendant had not signed the statement as defendant's own because the officer who interviewed defendant would be permitted to testify to the content of the verbal statement voluntarily given the officer by defendant. Graves v. State, 180 Ga. App. 446, 349 S.E.2d 519 (1986).

Admission defined. — Admissions relate to any fact material to the issue, and are to be scanned with care and considered, with any other evidence, for what the admissions are worth. Sheffield v. State, 188 Ga. 1, 2 S.E.2d 657 (1939).

An admission as applied to criminal cases, is the avowal of a fact or of circumstances from which guilt may be inferred, but only tending to prove the offense charged, and not amounting to a confession of guilt. Oliphant v. State, 52 Ga. App. 105, 182 S.E. 523 (1935).

Unless the statement of the defendant is broad enough to comprehend every essential element necessary to make out the case against the defendant, it cannot be said to be an admission of guilt. Johnson v. State, 204 Ga. 528, 50 S.E.2d 334 (1948).

An admission as applied to a criminal case is the statement made by the defendant of a fact or facts pertinent to the issue, and tending, in connection with other facts and circumstances, to prove the guilt of the accused, but which does not contain all the essential elements of the crime. Johns v. State, 79 Ga. App. 429, 54 S.E.2d 142 (1949).

An admission of the main fact from which the essential elements of the criminal act may be inferred amounts to an admission of the crime itself. Jones v. State, 223 Ga. 157, 154 S.E.2d 228, rev'd on other grounds, 389 U.S. 24, 88 S. Ct. 4, 19 L. Ed. 2d 25 (1967).

Confession defined. — Confession is a voluntary admission of guilt. Oliphant v. State, 52 Ga. App. 105, 182 S.E. 523 (1935).

The requirements to constitute a confession are that the facts admitted must comprise all the essential elements necessary to make out the case against the defendant, yet a confession is sufficiently plenary in substance, and responsive to the requirement that it contain all the essential elements necessary to make out the case, when the confession, though lacking in a recital of the many details constituting the crime, does disclose certain facts from which the main fact of guilt is revealed. Meriwether v. State, 63 Ga. App. 667, 11 S.E.2d 816 (1940).

Confession is a person's admission of declaration of the person's agency or participation in a crime, and is restricted to admissions of guilt. Johnson v. State, 204 Ga. 528, 50 S.E.2d 334 (1948).

Confession is an admission of the main fact in a charge of crime, without any exculpatory explanation. Johns v. State, 79 Ga. App. 429, 54 S.E.2d 142 (1949).

Incriminating statements and confessions distinguished. — There is a difference between an incriminating statement and a confession of guilt. In the former only one or more facts entering into the criminal act is admitted, while in the latter the entire criminal act is confessed. Cumberlander v. State, 53 Ga. App. 276, 185 S.E. 379 (1936); Johnson v. State, 204 Ga. 528, 50 S.E.2d 334 (1948).

A confession is a voluntary statement acknowledging guilt of a criminal offense, and the term admission ordinarily signifies the avowal or acknowledgment of a fact or of circumstances from which guilt may be inferred and only tending to prove the offense charged, but not amounting to a confession of guilt. Norrell v. State, 116 Ga. App. 479, 157 S.E.2d 784 (1967).

An incriminating statement, to be the equivalent of a confession of guilt, must be so comprehensive as to include every essential element of the offense. Johnson v. State, 204 Ga. 528, 50 S.E.2d 334 (1948); Norrell v. State, 116 Ga. App. 479, 157 S.E.2d 784 (1967).

Admission as constituting high degree of evidence. — There is nothing in the provisions of this statute, nor in any other statute of the state, which declares that when an admission is established to the satisfaction of the jury the admission constitutes a high degree of evidence and the jury should give it great weight. Raleigh & G.R.R. v. Allen, 106 Ga. 572, 32 S.E. 622 (1899) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53).

Confession alone may be evidence. — Since it is unnecessary that a confession be corroborated by independent proof in all its details and particulars, and since a confession is direct evidence and not circumstantial evidence, a confession is sufficient to prove the manner and means of death as charged in an indictment, without independent corroborating evidence, just as it is the rule that once the requirements of the corpus delicti are met, the confession of the accused is available to identify the person confessing as the criminal agent. McVeigh v. State, 205 Ga. 326, 53 S.E.2d 462 (1949).

Ambiguous admissions. — Admissions contained in a letter are to be scanned with care if the admissions are susceptible of more than one construction, and if, in order to discover their true meaning, attention should be directed to the precise terms employed by the writer. Richmond & D.R.R. v. Kerler, 88 Ga. 39, 13 S.E. 833 (1891).

Admissions in pleas. — Fact that an admission made; by the defendant in a plea which had been stricken by amendment and was put in evidence by the introduction of the plea containing the admission had, before the plea was amended, possessed the character of an admission in judicio, does not relieve the admission from the application of the rule of law (generally applicable to all admissions) that admissions should be scanned with care and it was not error for the court so to charge. Griffin v. Browning, 51 Ga. App. 743, 181 S.E. 801 (1935).

Admissions by infants. — In general, infants are not bound by their admissions. Howard v. Hall, 112 Ga. App. 247, 145 S.E.2d 70 (1965).

While the decision of whether a child, or “infant,” is competent to testify is one made in the sound discretion of the judge, based upon the capacity of the child to know the nature of the oath rather than upon the child’s years, the admission in evidence of an infant’s admission against interest must be very carefully scanned because of the child’s immaturity and the deleterious effect such admissions would have. Howard v. Hall, 112 Ga. App. 247, 145 S.E.2d 70 (1965).

Confessions of juveniles are scanned with more care and received with greater caution. Crawford v. State, 240 Ga. 321, 240 S.E.2d 824 (1977); Howe v. State, 250 Ga. 811, 301 S.E.2d 280 (1983).

Conviction not required to admit similar transaction evidence. — While O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53 did not allow a conviction based solely on an uncorroborated confession, such a limitation did not apply to the admission of prior similar transaction evidence regarding a defendant’s involvement in a similar uncharged robbery as the defendant did not have to be convicted for such evidence to be admissible. Dean v. State, 292 Ga. App. 695, 665 S.E.2d 406 (2008).

Accomplices. — Confession made by the accused and supported by evidence of the corpus delicti will serve as sufficient corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice. Westbrook v. State, 91 Ga. 11, 16 S.E. 100 (1892); Allen v. State, 91 Ga. 189, 16 S.E. 980 (1893); Schaefer v. State, 93 Ga. 177, 18 S.E. 552 (1893).

Proof of the corpus delicti, even though independent of the confession or evidence of an accomplice, does not at all corroborate the testimony of the confessing accomplice so as to authorize a conviction of another accomplice who has not confessed. Newman v. State, 63 Ga. App. 417, 11 S.E.2d 248 (1940).

Mere fact that the defendant had accomplices in the commission of a crime does not change the rule that proof of the corpus delicti may be sufficient corroboration of a confession of guilt to sustain a verdict of guilty, as it relates to the amount of evidence, other than the testimony of an accomplice, necessary to corroborate the confession in order to support a verdict of guilty. Moreover, evidence of the confessions is sufficient to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice so as to support a verdict of guilty against the confessor. Motes v. State, 66 Ga. App. 543, 18 S.E.2d 497 (1942).

While it is the rule that the testimony of an accomplice must be corroborated by circumstances definitely connecting the accused with the perpetration of the crime, this is not the rule in reference to the corroboration of a confession. Lastinger v. State, 84 Ga. App. 760, 67 S.E.2d 411 (1951).

Trial court’s findings upheld on appeal. — Unless clearly erroneous, a trial court’s findings as to factual determinations and credibility relating to the admissibility of a confession will be upheld on appeal. Bassett v.

Corroboration

Corroboration of admission not required.

— A defendant's statement to an officer that the defendant's license was suspended was an admission and not a confession requiring corroboration under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53, because the defendant's statement did not include an admission to driving on a highway of the state, which was an essential element of the offense of driving with a suspended license under O.C.G.A. § 40-5-121(a). Griffin v. State, 302 Ga. App. 807, 692 S.E.2d 7 (2010).

Sufficiency of corroboration. — Corroborating testimony need not show the fact beyond a reasonable doubt, but is adequate if the testimony tends materially to corroborate the confession and to connect the defendant with the crime. Douglas v. State, 6 Ga. App. 157, 64 S.E. 490 (1909); Navarra v. State, 51 Ga. App. 321, 180 S.E. 375 (1935); Logue v. State, 198 Ga. 672, 32 S.E.2d 397 (1944).

Sufficient corroboration of defendant's confession existed in the form of additional evidence regarding the manner in which the victim was killed and the victim's body disposed. Walsh v. State, 269 Ga. 427, 499 S.E.2d 332 (1998).

Store owner's testimony and the videotape concerning the commission of the burglary corroborated defendant's confession to entering the store with a shirt over defendant's head, stealing beer and cigarettes, and then selling them. Ward v. State, 242 Ga. App. 246, 529 S.E.2d 378 (2000), appeal dismissed, 299 Ga. App. 63, 682 S.E.2d 128 (2009).

Defendant's cocaine possession conviction was affirmed as the defendant's statement that the defendant and two other men went to the victim's house to buy cocaine, that the victim came out of the victim's house with the cocaine and gave it to the defendant, and that the defendant split the cocaine with the defendant's accomplices was corroborated by proof that cash was found on the victim's bed next to several bags of a substance that later tested positive for crack cocaine. Williams v. State, 270 Ga. App. 424, 606 S.E.2d 871 (2004).

Defendant's statement to the police was in the nature of an admission and defendant's conviction for malice and felony murder was corroborated by showing that the gun that defendant carried to the scene was the same gun that fired the fatal shot, that the defendant had access to the weapon, and that the defendant arranged the meeting with the victim. Flanders v. State, 279 Ga. 35, 609 S.E.2d 346 (2005).

Because defendant's confession was videotaped and defendant admitted to attacking the victim because defendant wanted money to buy drugs, the admission of defendant's confession via videotape was held to have been sufficiently corroborated because the two interviewing police officers both testified at the trial and established the corpus delicti of each crime, thereby providing the requisite corroboration to sustain the convictions for aggravated assault, armed robbery, kidnapping, and hijacking a motor vehicle. Cummings v. State, 272 Ga. App. 886, 614 S.E.2d 121 (2005).

Defendant's confessions were sufficiently corroborated by the victim and the officer's testimony, and a confession to eight armed robberies was corroborated by testimony confirming when the crimes occurred, defendant's conduct during the crimes, and the use of a stolen car to flee. Robinson v. State, 276 Ga. App. 502, 623 S.E.2d 711 (2005).

Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion for a directed verdict regarding at least five counts of the indictment charging four counts of aggravated child molestation and three counts of child molestation because the verdicts were not based solely on the defendant's uncorroborated confession. The evidence corresponded to the defendant's confession and was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti, namely that the crimes actually occurred, because it showed more than two improper sexual acts by the defendant against the defendant's child: the (1) testimony of a social worker; (2) the victim's audiotaped statement, in which the victim described how the defendant abused the victim; (3) the victim's trial testimony that the victim told the social worker the truth; and (4) evidence that the victim's behavior was typical of an abused child, were sufficient for the jury to find that the victim had been abused on numerous occasions. Hargrove v. State, 289 Ga. App. 363, 657 S.E.2d 282 (2008), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 500 (Ga. 2008).

Evidence that the defendant possessed the murder weapon was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53 to corroborate the defendant's confession that the defendant pointed a gun at a clerk in a convenience store and ultimately murdered the clerk. Moore v. State, 285 Ga. 157, 674 S.E.2d 315 (2009).

Defendant's convictions for armed robbery and robbery by intimidation in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-8-40(a)(2) and 16-8-41(a) were appropriate because the defendant's own confessions to participating in the crimes were corroborated by the testimony of the victims, among other evidence. Likewise, the defendant's codefendants' statements and testimony implicating the defendant in the crimes were corroborated by the defendant's confessions and the victims' testimony. Cantrell v. State, 299 Ga. App. 746, 683 S.E.2d 676 (2009).

All essential facts must be proved. — Amount of corroboration necessary to support the conviction is in every case a question of fact for the jury. But even if incriminatory admissions, supplemented by other circumstances, be equivalent to a confession, evidence that the accused confessed the commission of an offense would not be sufficient to authorize a conviction, unless all of the facts essential to establish that the alleged offense was in fact committed are satisfactorily proved. Boyd v. State, 4 Ga. App. 58, 60 S.E. 801 (1908); West v. State, 6 Ga. App. 105, 64 S.E. 130 (1909); Harvey v. State, 8 Ga. App. 660, 70 S.E. 141 (1911); Davenport v. State, 12 Ga. App. 102, 76 S.E. 756 (1912).

When juvenile defendants confessed to entering a vacant home and causing damage therein, and a police officer testified to the condition of the home and the damage the officer found upon investigation, together with witness statements from people who were with defendants prior to and after the acts, wherein the witnesses testified that defendants indicated the defendants' intent to damage the house, there was sufficient evidence to support an adjudication of delinquency pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 15-11-2; there was sufficient corroborative evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53 to support the conviction as well. In the Interest of Q.D., 263 Ga. App. 293, 587 S.E.2d 336 (2003).

Corroboration of confession in any particular. — Although an uncorroborated confession cannot support a conviction under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53, corroboration of a confession in any particular satisfies the requirements of the statute. Sands v. State, 262 Ga. 367, 418 S.E.2d 55 (1992); Miller v. State, 268 Ga. 1, 485 S.E.2d 752 (1997).

Although an uncorroborated confession cannot support a conviction under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53, corroboration of a confession in any particular satisfies the requirements of the statute; thus, when defendant's detailed confessions to two counts of armed robbery, two counts of theft by taking, three counts of aggravated assault, three counts of simple battery, three counts of kidnapping, and two counts of possessing a firearm during the commission of a crime were corroborated by the testimony of one of the victims who ultimately identified defendant as the person who placed a knife to the victim's neck during the robbery of the victim's spouse's store and forced the victim to the back of the store and secured the victim with duct tape, such evidence more than amply authorized the convictions. Phanamixay v. State, 260 Ga. App. 177, 581 S.E.2d 286 (2003).

Failure to corroborate. — When the evidence pertaining to one count of the indictment was supported only by a confession, which was not corroborated by any evidence, the court committed reversible error in denying the motion for a new trial as to that count. Chapman v. State, 90 Ga. App. 845, 84 S.E.2d 485 (1954).

Even though the defendant confessed to the crime of possession of cocaine, since the state did not offer the alleged cocaine in evidence or offer any other evidence that the substance found was cocaine, the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal. Johnson v. State, 205 Ga. App. 760, 423 S.E.2d 702 (1992).

Question for jury. — Statute does not fix the amount of evidence necessary to corroborate a confession but leaves the question of its corroborative sufficiency entirely with the jury, who may consider the confession along with other facts and circumstances independent of and separate from the confession in determining whether or not the corpus delicti has been established to the jury's satisfaction. Murray v. State, 43 Ga. 256

App. 119, 393 S.E.2d 6 (1990).

Amount of evidence necessary to corroborate a confession is left entirely within the province of the jury and corroboration in any material particular satisfies the requirements of the law. Reynolds v. State, 168 Ga. App. 555, 309 S.E.2d 867 (1983).

Defendant's confession was significantly corroborated by the victim's testimony that the defendant was the person who robbed the victim. Although the defendant challenged the accuracy of the identification, this was a credibility issue for the jury to resolve. Burns v. State, 288 Ga. App. 507, 654 S.E.2d 405 (2007).

Proof of corpus delicti sufficient corroboration. — Conviction may be lawfully had upon a free and voluntary confession though the confession be not otherwise corroborated than by proof of the corpus delicti. Johnson v. State, 86 Ga. 90, 13 S.E. 282 (1890); Westbrook v. State, 91 Ga. 11, 16 S.E. 100 (1892); Allen v. State, 91 Ga. 189, 16 S.E. 980 (1893); *Schaefer v. Conviction may be lawfully had upon a free and voluntary confession although corroborated only by proof of the corpus delicti. Brown v. State, 167 Ga. App. 851, 307 S.E.2d 737 (1983); Kirksey v. State, 177 Ga. App. 428, 339 S.E.2d 401 (1986); Ryan v. State, 179 Ga. App. 210, 346 S.E.2d 3 (1986); Nation v. State, 180 Ga. App. 460, 349 S.E.2d 479 (1986).

When the testimony of the victims established the corpus delicti of each crime a defendant was charged with, the testimony provided the requisite corroboration of the defendant's confession to charges of rape, sodomy, assault, and burglary. Smith v. State, 195 Ga. App. 486, 393 S.E.2d 743 (1990).

Testimony by a victim who survived a robbery in which the victim's companion was killed was sufficient to corroborate defendant's confession that defendant was one of four men who committed the robbery and that defendant shot the victim who died when the victim grabbed the barrel of a gun the defendant was holding, and the state supreme court affirmed defendant's convictions for felony murder and armed robbery. Chapman v. State, 275 Ga. 314, 565 S.E.2d 442 (2002).

Confession is corroborated by the testimony of the victim who establishes the corpus delicti. Patrick v. State, 169 Ga. App. 302, 312 S.E.2d 385 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 509, 314 S.E.2d 909 (1984); McCloud v. State, 210 Ga. App. 69, 435 S.E.2d 281 (1993).

Corroborated by defendant's confession, the victim's testimony that defendant had sexual intercourse with the victim when the victim was 14 sufficed to sustain the conviction. Bankston v. State, 249 Ga. App. 118, 548 S.E.2d 25 (2001).

Corpus delicti may be proved either by direct or circumstantial evidence. Davis v. State, 105 Ga. 808, 32 S.E. 158 (1898); Harvey v. State, 8 Ga. App. 660, 70 S.E. 141 (1911); Tolver v. State, 10 Ga. App. 33, 72 S.E. 516 (1911); Sutton v. State, 17 Ga. App. 713, 88 S.E. 122 (1916); Thomas v. State, 18 Ga. App. 101, 88 S.E. 917 (1916); Underwood v. State, 51 Ga. App. 735, 181 S.E. 500 (1935); Brown v. State, 98 Ga. App. 350, 105 S.E.2d 785 (1958).

Corpus delicti must be proved independently of confession. — Corpus delicti cannot be proved by the extrajudicial confession of the accused, but must be shown by evidence aliunde the confession or incriminatory admissions. West v. State, 6 Ga. App. 105, 64 S.E. 130 (1909); Moon v. State, 12 Ga. App. 614, 77 S.E. 1088 (1913); Sims v. State, 12 Ga. App. 551, 77 S.E. 891, later appeal, 14 Ga. App. 833, 101 S.E.2d 747 (1958).

Jury may consider the confession along with other facts and circumstances independent of and separate from the confession it in determining whether or not the corpus delicti has been established to the jury's satisfaction. Stephens v. State, 127 Ga. App. 416, 193 S.E.2d 870 (1972).

Jury may believe only portions of confessions. — Every confession necessarily contains incriminatory admissions, and though a statement as a whole may amount to a confession, still it is within the province of the jury to disbelieve that part which would constitute it a confession, and believe only the portion thereof which amounted to incriminatory admissions. Smithwick v. State, 199 Ga. 292, 34 S.E.2d 28 (1945), overruled on other grounds, Milton v. State, 245 Ga.

Two confessions. — Even two positive confessions of guilt, without independent proof of the corpus delicti, are not sufficient to authorize a conviction. Bines v. State, 118 Ga. 320, 45 S.E. 376 (1903).

To prove the corpus delicti in a charge of murder, in order to corroborate a confession, it is essential to establish that the person alleged to have been killed is actually dead, and that death was caused or accomplished by violence or other direct criminal agency of another human being; that is, it was not accidental, nor due to natural causes, nor to the act of the deceased, and that the accused caused the death in the manner charged. Grimes v. State, 204 Ga. 854, 51 S.E.2d 797 (1949).

Evidence sufficient to corroborate confession to burglary. — When defendant admitted both defendant's presence at the scene of the crime and that the defendant had cut defendant's hand on a broken windowpane there, and there was also testimony that broken bloodstained glass was found within the burglarized home, such evidence was sufficient to corroborate the defendant's confession. Carter v. State, 160 Ga. App. 299, 287 S.E.2d 313 (1981).

Evidence supported defendant's conviction for burglary and entering an automobile with the intent to commit a theft because there was evidence corroborating defendant's confession regarding how defendant gained entry into both a warehouse and a car. Morris v. State, 274 Ga. App. 41, 616 S.E.2d 829 (2005).

Because the defendant's statement was sufficiently corroborated by evidence that a bullet from the 9 mm handgun in the defendant's possession killed the victim, and by the defendant's admission to both being involved in the commission and planning of the robbery of the victim, sufficient evidence existed to find the defendant guilty as a party to the crime of burglary beyond a reasonable doubt. Valentine v. State, 289 Ga. App. 60, 656 S.E.2d 208 (2007).

Testimony of an accomplice was not required to be corroborated since the store clerk (victim) was able to testify positively that the defendant was one of the two men who entered the store and performed the robbery. Welch v. State, 179 Ga. App. 221, 346 S.E.2d 4 (1986).

Hearsay cannot corroborate confession.

— Since hearsay lacks any probative value, hearsay cannot provide the material evidence necessary to corroborate a defendant's confession, which, without such corroboration, is insufficient to support a conviction. The argument that hearsay is rendered trustworthy and admissible because corroborated by the defendant's confession, while the confession is simultaneously corroborated by the hearsay, is unpersuasive. This would sanction admission of otherwise unreliable evidence by mutual bootstrapping. Shaver v. State, 199 Ga. App. 428, 405 S.E.2d 281, cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 907, 405 S.E.2d 281 (1991).

Confession found to be sufficiently corroborated. Steele v. State, 166 Ga. App. 24, 303 S.E.2d 462 (1983); Hunt v. State, 166 Ga. App. 524, 304 S.E.2d 576 (1983); Kilgore v. State, 251 Ga. 291, 305 S.E.2d 82 (1983); Barnes v. State, 260 Ga. 398, 396 S.E.2d 207 (1990); White v. State, 266 Ga. 134, 465 S.E.2d 277 (1996); McCant v. State, 234 Ga. App. 433, 506 S.E.2d 917 (1998); Kirkland v. State, 271 Ga. 217, 518 S.E.2d 687 (1999).

When on a trial for leaving the scene of an accident, in addition to the defendant's "confession," evidence was adduced at trial showing the corpus delicti, one witness placed defendant near the scene of the accident in question on the night the accident occurred, and evidence was also produced showing that defendant's automobile was damaged at approximately the same time the accident took place, the trial court was authorized to find that the confession was corroborated as required by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53. Sheppard v. State, 165 Ga. App. 393, 301 S.E.2d 306 (1983).

Following evidence of corroboration of the defendant's confession to murder satisfied the requirement of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53: (1) a bloody claw hammer matching the description of the hammer the defendant confessed defendant used to kill the victim was found near the victim's body; and (2) the paint samples taken from the defendant's truck were similar to those taken from the crime scene. Brown v. State, 253 Ga. 363, 320 S.E.2d 539 (1984).

Defendant's conviction of financial transaction card fraud was affirmed since evidence that a VISA card was used without the owner's authorization to obtain goods and money established the corpus delicti, and the owner's testimony that defendant had access to the owner's mail and that the signatures on the charge slips closely paralleled defendant's handwriting provided sufficient corroboration of defendant's confession. Goswick v. State, 201 Ga. App. 799, 412 S.E.2d 293 (1991).

State presented sufficient independent evidence to corroborate the defendant's confessions after it was shown that the victim died from gunshot wounds inflicted by another human being using a .38 caliber weapon or a .357 Magnum shortly after the defendant was seen in the victim's company. Blackwell v. State, 270 Ga. 509, 512 S.E.2d 233 (1999).

Evidence that defendant gave several false statements about the victim's whereabouts, contributing to the victim's body not being discovered, sufficiently corroborated defendant's confession to concealing a death in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-10-31. Howard v. State, 262 Ga. App. 214, 585 S.E.2d 115 (2003).

Despite the fact that the defendant did not admit to every element of the charged offenses, the state presented sufficient evidence to corroborate the admissions made; specifically, that the victim died from manual strangulation inflicted by another human being shortly after the defendant was in the victim's company, and presented ample evidence of the defendant's intent to take the victim's life. Sheffield v. State, 281 Ga. 33, 635 S.E.2d 776 (2006).

Because the defendant's statement to a police investigator was corroborated by both the victim and an eyewitness as well as evidence of the defendant's fingerprint on the victim's stolen car, the defendant's claim that the evidence was not corroborated as required by O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53 was rejected. Sheely v. State, 287 Ga. App. 92, 650 S.E.2d 762 (2007).

Evidence that a vehicle was, in fact, stolen from a location reported by a juvenile involved in a high-speed chase with a state trooper, and abandoned after crashing into a pole in an apartment complex was sufficient to corroborate the juvenile's confession under O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53. In the Interest of L.A., 292 Ga. App. 101, 663 S.E.2d 420 (2008).

der conviction arising from the suffocation death of the defendant's newborn daughter, the defendant's confession was legally sufficient to support the convictions since the state produced independent evidence to corroborate the confession, namely, the recovered physical evidence and the witness testimony regarding the defendant's comments, appearance, and behavior before and after the victim's birth. Wright v. State, 285 Ga. 428, 677 S.E.2d 82 (2009), cert. denied, U.S. , 130 S. Ct. 1076, 175 L. Ed. 2d 903 (2010).

Instructions

Charge on the law of confessions, when unauthorized by the evidence, constitutes reversible error. Denson v. State, 150 Ga. 618, 104 S.E. 780 (1920); Oliphant v. State, 52 Ga. App. 105, 182 S.E. 523 (1935); Meriwether v. State, 63 Ga. App. 667, 11 S.E.2d 816 (1940); Johnson v. State, 204 Ga. 528, 50 S.E.2d 334 (1948); Norrell v. State, 116 Ga. App. 479, 157 S.E.2d 784 (1967).

Evidence was sufficient to warrant an instruction based on O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53. — See Wallace v. Mize, 153 Ga. 374, 112 S.E. 724 (1922); Southern Ry. v. Bullock, 42 Ga. App. 495, 156 S.E. 456 (1931); Timbs v. State, 71 Ga. App. 141, 30 S.E.2d 290 (1944); McDowell v. State, 78 Ga. App. 116, 50 S.E.2d 633 (1948).

Charge did not shift burden of proof. — Trial court did not err in charging the jury to consider with great care and caution the evidence of any statement the defendant made, and the jury charge did not improperly shift the burden away from the state, as the charge clearly referred to the jury's consideration of the defendant's custodial statement and not the defendant's testimony, and was given immediately after an explanation of how to determine the voluntariness of the defendant's custodial statement; moreover, the charge impressed upon the jury its duty to determine the credibility of the statement, instructing that a statement unsupported by any other evidence was not sufficient to justify a conviction. Ford v. State, 281 Ga. App. 114, 635 S.E.2d 391 (2006).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for robbery, the trial court did not err by instructing the jury that the jury should consider with great care and caution the evidence of any statement made by the defendant as O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53 provided the authority for such an instruction. However, the appellate court suggested that to avoid any possibility of confusion, the suggested pattern instruction authorized by § 24-3-53 should be modified to refer to incriminatory statements only, for example, admissions and confessions. McKenzie v. State, 293 Ga. App. 350, 667 S.E.2d 142 (2008).

Failure to give instruction. — In the absence of any timely written request, the failure to charge the jury on the law of this statute is not reversible error, since there is evidence, independent of such confessions or admissions, to sustain the conviction. Walker v. State, 118 Ga. 34, 44 S.E. 850 (1903); Cooner v. State, 16 Ga. App. 539, 85 S.E. 688 (1915); Denson v. State, 150 Ga. 618, 104 S.E. 780 (1920), appeal dismissed, 258 U.S. 608, 42 S. Ct. 316, 66 L. Ed. 788 (1922); Wallace v. Mize, 153 Ga. 374, 112 S.E. 724 (1922); Williamson v. State, 29 Ga. App. 283, 114 S.E. 919 (1922); Gore v. State, 162 Ga. 267, 134 S.E. 36 (1926); Whitfield v. State, 51 Ga. App. 439, 180 S.E. 630 (1935); Mims v. State, 188 Ga. 702, 4 S.E.2d 831 (1939); Anderson v. State, 190 Ga. 455, 9 S.E.2d 642 (1940); Davis v. State, 66 Ga. App. 877, 19 S.E.2d 543 (1942); Mika v. State, 196 Ga. 473, 26 S.E.2d 616 (1943); Smithwick v. State, 199 Ga. 292, 34 S.E.2d 28 (1945); Brandt v. Eckman, 79 Ga. App. 47, 52 S.E.2d 665 (1949); Elvine v. State, 205 Ga. 528, 54 S.E.2d 626 (1949); Staggers v. State, 101 Ga. App. 463, 114 S.E.2d 142 (1960); Pryor v. State, 113 Ga. App. 660, 149 S.E.2d 401 (1966); Welch v. State, 235 Ga. 243, 219 S.E.2d 151 (1975); Simonton v. State, 151 Ga. App. 431, 260 S.E.2d 487 (1979); Jackson v. State, 596 Ga. App. 596, 260 S.E.2d 565 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53).

Absent a timely request, the trial court did not err in failing to charge on the evidentiary weight to be given admissions and confessions or in failing to charge that an uncorroborated confession is insufficient to support a conviction. Hunt v. State, 166 Ga. App. 524, 304 S.E.2d 576 (1983).

Trial court did not err by failing to charge the jury on the state's burden of proving the corpus delicti since defendant filed no written request to charge, and the subject of defendant's oral request regarding the state's burden of proving the corpus delicti was fully satisfied by the trial court's charge regarding the presumption of defendant's innocence and the state's burden of proving all elements of the crime. Barnes v. State, 260 Ga. 398, 396 S.E.2d 207 (1990).

Trial court's decision not to give defendant's requested instruction on the jury considering defendant's admissions with caution, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53, was not reversible; defendant acquiesced in the counsel's request that a standard charge on credibility be given instead, and defendant was not entitled to acquiesce in that decision and later complain about the decision on appeal. Lummus v. State, 274 Ga. App. 636, 618 S.E.2d 692 (2005), overruled on other grounds, McCart v. State, 289 Ga. App. 830, 658 S.E.2d 465 (2008).

Court not required to give instruction absent specific request. — Because the defendant failed to request a charge on voluntariness of confessions and consideration of statements, admissions, and confessions, the defendant was precluded from asserting error on that basis; the trial court did not need to give an instruction on voluntariness of confessions absent a specific request therefor. Thorpe v. State, 285 Ga. 604, 678 S.E.2d 913 (2009).

Failure to charge the language of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53 when there has been an admission, but not a "confession," was not error. Richardson v. State, 256 Ga. 746, 353 S.E.2d 342 (1987); Gay v. State, 199 Ga. App. 80, 403 S.E.2d 895 (1991).

Trial court did not err in failing to charge

the language of O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53 since the defendant's statement, while an admission, was not a confession to the crime of murder, inasmuch as the defendant contended that the killing was justified and the court's charge informed the jury that the statement should be examined closely for voluntariness. Houston v. State, 253 Ga. 696, 324 S.E.2d 183 (1985).

Omission in instructions. — Fact that charge omits an instruction as to the weight to be given to confessions is not cause for new trial, in the absence of a request therefor. Williams v. State, 196 Ga. 503, 26 S.E.2d 926 (1943).

Request to charge on principle of corroboration properly denied. — Trial court did not err in refusing to give a requested charge on the principle of corroboration since the charge was not adjusted to the evidence. Flanders v. State, 279 Ga. 35, 609 S.E.2d 346 (2005).

Language used in charging O.C.G.A. § 24-3-53 is discussed in the following cases. — See Ford v. Kennedy, 64 Ga. 537 (1880); Ocean S.S. Co. v. McAlphin, 69 Ga. 437 (1882); Raleigh & G.R.R. v. Allen, 106 Ga. 572, 32 S.E. 622 (1899); Louisville & N.R.R. v. Bradford, 135 Ga. 522, 69 S.E. 870 (1910); Smithwick v. State, 199 Ga. 292, 34 S.E.2d 28 (1945); Williams v. State, 199 Ga. 504, 34 S.E.2d 854 (1945); Elvine v. State, 205 Ga. 528, 54 S.E.2d 626 (1949); Figures v. State, 80 Ga. App. 832, 57 S.E.2d 629 (1950); Reece v. State, 212 Ga. 609, 94 S.E.2d 723 (1956); Beard v. State, 151 Ga. App. 724, 261 S.E.2d 404 (1979); Hill v. State, 246 Ga. 402, 271 S.E.2d 802 (1980), cert. denied, 451 U.S. 923, 101 S. Ct. 2001, 68 L. Ed. 2d 313 (1981).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Documents must be offered. — It is elementary that documents upon which a party rests the party's case must be offered into evidence. Hadden v. Owens, 154 Ga. App. 467, 268 S.E.2d 760 (1980).

Documents admissible. — Documentary evidence illustrative of oral testimony and authenticated by oral testimony is admissible. King v. Browning, 246 Ga. 46, 268 S.E.2d 653 (1980).

Tampering with evidence. — It is not necessary that the state negative all possibility of tampering with evidence but only that the state show that it is reasonably certain there was no alteration — when there is only a bare speculation of tampering, it is proper to admit the evidence and let what doubt remains go to the weight of the evidence. Marshall v. State, 153 Ga. App. 198, 264 S.E.2d 718 (1980).

Lie detector test. — Upon an express stipulation of the parties that lie detector results shall be admissible, the results of the test shall be admissible as evidence for the jury to attach to the results whatever probative value the jury may find the results to have. Jordan v. State, 159 Ga. App. 716, 285 S.E.2d 71 (1981).

Proof of a fact by unobjected to evidence renders harmless subsequent incompetent or inadmissible evidence. Lightsey v. State, 160 Ga. App. 62, 286 S.E.2d 41 (1981).

ARTICLE 1

GENERAL PROVISIONS

244-1. On whom burden of proof lies.

The burden of proof generally lies upon the party who is asserting or affirming a fact and to the existence of whose case or defense the proof of such fact is essential. If a negation or negative affirmation is essential to a party's case or defense, the proof of such negation or negative affirmation lies on the party so affirming it. (Orig. Code 1863, § 3681; Code 1868, § 3705; Code 1873, § 3758; Code 1882, § 3758; Civil Code 1895, § 5160; Penal Code 1895, § 994; Civil Code 1910, § 5746; Penal Code 1910, § 1020; Code 1933, § 38-103.)

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

SPECIFIC ACTIONS

JURY INSTRUCTIONS

General Considerations

In general. — Burden of proof as applied to the facts of a given case under its facts has a dual meaning; one of those meanings applies to the ultimate burden of proof which rests with the plaintiff from the beginning throughout the trial of the case, and the other meaning applies when the burden of procedure or burden of introducing evidence shifts from one party to the other. Central of Ga. Ry. v. Hester, 94 Ga. App. 226, 94 S.E.2d 124 (1956); Evans v. DeKalb County Hosp. Auth., 154 Ga. App. 17, 267 S.E.2d 319 (1980).

Burden determined by pleadings. — Generally, the burden of proof rests where the pleadings originally placed the burden. Lazenby v. Citizens Bank, 20 Ga. App. 53, 92 S.E. 391 (1917); Richter Bros. v. Atlantic Co., 59 Ga. App. 137, 200 S.E. 462 (1938), later appeal, 65 Ga. App. 605, 16 S.E.2d 259 (1941); Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Thomas, 83 Ga. App. 477, 64 S.E.2d 301 (1951); Whitley v. Wilson, 90 Ga. App. 16, 81 S.E.2d 877 (1954); Lovett v. American Family Life Ins. Co., 107 Ga. App. 603, 131 S.E.2d 70 (1963).

Effect of defendant's admission of prima facie case. — If the plaintiff alleges a right to recover, and the defendant denies the allegations without more, the plaintiff, upon the case as a whole carries the burden of proof; that is, the burden of showing, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover. If the defendant does not file a denial of the plaintiff's allegations, but admits in defendant's pleadings a prima facie case in favor of the plaintiff, and sets up an affirmative plea, the defendant then assumes the burden. Williamson-Inman & Co. v. Thompson, 53 Ga. App. 821, 187 S.E. 194 (1936); Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Thomas, 83 Ga. App. 477, 64 S.E.2d 301 (1951).

Plaintiff carries burden of proving plaintiff's right to recover by a preponderance of the evidence. Courson v. Pearson, 132 Ga. 698, 64 S.E. 997 (1909); Thigpen v. Aldred, 175 Ga. 120, 165 S.E. 27 (1932); Grimsley v. Morgan, 178 Ga. 40, 172 S.E. 49 (1933); Abernathy v. Putnam, 85 Ga. App. 644, 69 S.E.2d 896 (1952); Maloy v. Dixon, 127 Ga. App. 151, 193 S.E.2d 19 (1972); Carr v. Jacuzzi Bros., 133 Ga. App. 70, 210 S.E.2d 16 (1974); Anderson v. Poythress, 246 Ga. 435, 271 S.E.2d 834 (1980).

When the plaintiff failed to present any evidence which raised a question of fact as to whether the defendant was negligent, plaintiff's contentions regarding what might have happened disappeared in light of the uncontradicted witness testimony as to what did happen, and the trial court correctly granted summary judgment to the defendant. Etheredge v. Kersey, 236 Ga. App. 243, 510 S.E.2d 544 (1998).

The burden of proof is determined by the pleadings, and a defendant's denial of the plaintiff's allegations is notice to the plaintiff that the plaintiff has the burden to prove the allegations. Carver v. Jones, 166 Ga. App. 197, 303 S.E.2d 529 (1983).

Standing. — Trial court did not err in dismissing state agency's petition for downward modification of father's child support obligation as the agency did not prove the agency's assertion that the agency had standing to bring such an action, since the agency did not show the legislature intended to give the state agency the power to seek modification of support to the same extent a parent could do so; accordingly, the state agency could only prove the agency had standing if the agency showed there was a prior court order which established or enforced a child support obligation and which the state agency participated in obtaining, and the agency was unable to make that showing. Dep't of Human Res. v. Allison, 276 Ga. 175, 575 S.E.2d 876 (2003).

Burden on state in criminal case. — In all criminal trials the burden is upon the state to prove every allegation which is material to an essential element of the offense. Conyers v. State, 50 Ga. 103, 15 Am. R. 686 (1873) (lack of parental consent); Bell v. State, 91 Ga. 15, 16 S.E. 207 (1892) (capacity of infant to commit crime); Neil v. State, 117 Ga. 14, 43 S.E. 435 (1903) (marital status of alleged fornicator); Sikes v. State, 120 Ga. 494, 48 S.E. 153 (1904); Harris v. State, 14 Ga. App. 574, 81 S.E. 815 (1914); McLemore v. State, 181 Ga. 462, 182 S.E. 618 (1935) (voluntariness of confession) Butts v. State, 153 Ga. App. 464, 265 S.E.2d 370 (1980).

Effect of denial by defendant of the plaintiff's allegations is to put the plaintiff on notice that the burden is on the plaintiff to prove those allegations. Whitley v. Wilson, 90 Ga. App. 16, 81 S.E.2d 877 (1954).

Defendant has burden of proof as to all matters purely of defense. Life & Cas. Ins.

Co. v. Cartrell, 74 Ga. App. 204, 39 S.E.2d 437 (1946).

When a third-party defendant was unable to demonstrate any specific evidence that a claim was paid wrongfully by the third-party plaintiff, a surety, and that any consideration of the surety's late affidavit led to an unjust result, the trial court's grant of summary judgment was not error. Horton v. U.S. Fid. & Guar. Co., 194 Ga. App. 881, 392 S.E.2d 25 (1990).

Affirmative defenses generally. — When the defendant admits the essential facts of the petition and sets up other facts in justification or avoidance, plaintiff has the burden of proving such affirmative defense. Hunter v. Sanders, Swan & Co., 113 Ga. 140, 38 S.E. 406 (1901); Brunswick & W.R.R. v. Wiggins, 113 Ga. 842, 39 S.E. 551, 61 L.R.A. 513 (1901); Milledgeville Cotton Co. v. Bacon, 138 Ga. 470, 75 S.E. 604 (1912); Larzenby v. Citizen's Bank, 20 Ga. App. 53, 92 S.E. 391 (1917); Branch v. American Agric. Chem. Co., 22 Ga. App. 52, 95 S.E. 476 (1918); Alston v. Mobley, 42 Ga. App. 98, 155 S.E. 81 (1930); Hill v. City of Calhoun, 47 Ga. App. 753, 171 S.E. 459 (1933); Jones v. Knightstown Body Co., 52 Ga. App. 667, 184 S.E. 427 (1936); Whitley v. Wilson, 90 Ga. App. 16, 81 S.E.2d 877 (1954); Purcell v. Hill, 111 Ga. App. 256, 141 S.E.2d 153 (1965); Willis v. Kemp, 130 Ga. App. 758, 204 S.E.2d 486 (1974); Metropolitan Publishers Representatives, Inc. v. Arnsdorff, 153 Ga. App. 877, 267 S.E.2d 260 (1980).

When the defendant asserts affirmative defenses, it is not improper to argue that the burden of establishing those defenses lies on the one asserting the defenses. Pembroke Mgt., Inc. v. Cossaboon, 157 Ga. App. 675, 278 S.E.2d 100 (1981).

Justification and avoidance are affirmative defenses. — When a defendant admits the essential facts of a plaintiff's petition but sets up other facts in justification or avoidance, an affirmative defense is presented and the defendant ordinarily has the burden of proving the defense. Carver v. Jones, 166 Ga. App. 197, 303 S.E.2d 529 (1983).

Effect of entry of appearance. — When the defendant filed no written plea, but simply entered an appearance as required by the rules of the municipal court in cases of the character of this case, this amounted to a plea of general denial; it was not a plea in the nature of one in confession and avoidance, and therefore, being one merely generally denying the allegations of the plaintiff, the burden which may have rested upon the plaintiff, if any, was the burden only of going on with the evidence, and this burden the plaintiff was not required to carry by a preponderance of the evidence. Boss v. Ed. & Al. Matthews, Inc., 51 Ga. App. 889, 181 S.E. 688 (1935) (on motion for rehearing).

Effect of proving prima facie case. — Fact that the plaintiff introduces sufficient evidence to make out a prima facie case, and that in so doing plaintiff is relieved by statute of the burden of introducing evidence on an issue, the affirmative of which is essential to a recovery, in no way relieves the plaintiff of ultimately establishing the essential facts of plaintiff's case by a preponderance of the evidence. Richter Bros. v. Atlantic Co., 59 Ga. App. 137, 200 S.E. 462 (1938), later appeal, 65 Ga. App. 605, 16 S.E.2d 259 (1941).

Effect of failure to prove prima facie case. — Rule that the burden is on the defendant to establish defendant's defense of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, such as would bar a recovery, would not impose upon defendant such a duty in a case when the plaintiff personally had failed to make out a prima facie case, by failing to show negligence on the part of the defendant as alleged or by personally showing defendant's own contributory negligence. McCrackin v. McKinney, 52 Ga. App. 519, 183 S.E. 831 (1936).

Right to open and conclude argument. — Party having the burden of proof is entitled to open and conclude the argument before the jury. Willet Seed Co. v. Kirkeby-Gundestrup Seed Co., 145 Ga. 559, 89 S.E. 486 (1916); Simmons v. Brannen, 155 Ga. 494, 117 S.E. 318 (1923); Seagraves v. Couch & Jackson, 168 Ga. 38, 147 S.E. 61 (1929); Morgan-Hill Paving Co. v. Shanks, 45 Ga. App. 274, 164 S.E. 221 (1932).

Defendant in defendant's plea may admit a prima facie case for the plaintiff, and if the defendant does so before the plaintiff introduces evidence, the burden of proving defendant's defense is on the defendant, and the defendant is entitled to open and conclude. United States v. A Certain Tract or Parcel of Land, 47 F. Supp. 30 (S.D. Ga. 1942).

Proving a negative. — When one party has the burden of proving a negative, but all the proof on the subject is within the control of the other party, the burden is shifted to the party having the power to produce the proof. Mayo v. Owen, 208 Ga. 483, 67 S.E.2d 709 (1951).

Propounder who offered a will for probate assumed the non-shifting burden of persuasion as to the validity of that document, including the requirement of showing by a preponderance of the evidence that the signature was that of decedent. Heard v. Lovett, 273 Ga. 111, 538 S.E.2d 434 (2000).

Prima facie case on life insurance contract. — Plaintiff's right to recover a life insurance contract is established prima facie, without proof of payment of the required premiums, on proof of possession of the policy by the plaintiff and its introduction in evidence, and proof of all other essentials to a recovery under the policy. Masonic Relief Ass'n v. Hicks, 47 Ga. App. 499, 171 S.E. 215 (1933).

Second marriages. — For a brief discussion of the presumption of validity or invalidity of second marriage, see Scott v. Jefferson, 174 Ga. App. 651, 331 S.E.2d 1 (1985).

Specific Actions

Contributory negligence. — When the evidence is sufficient to raise an issue for the jury, and such issue is in fact submitted to the jury upon the question of the defendant's negligence, then, in order for the defendant to avail oneself of the affirmative defense of contributory negligence, it is incumbent upon defendant to prove the defense, and this is true even though defendant does not in defendant's own pleadings confess defendant's negligence as charged. McCrackin v. McKinney, 52 Ga. App. 519, 183 S.E. 831 (1936).

Comparative negligence. — While comparative negligence is available as an affirmative defense in Georgia, the burden of proving the defense remains with the party relying upon the defense and not upon the party making the original negligence claim to disprove the defense. Glenridge Unit Owners Ass'n v. Felton, 183 Ga. App. 858, 360 S.E.2d 418 (1987).

Defense of alternative proximate causation. — Trial court did not err when the court declined to give the customer and spouse's jury instruction directing that the pharmacy and pharmacist had the burden of proving their defense of alternative proximate causation in the customer and spouse's pharmaceutical malpractice action against them as the trial court's given instruction covered the same principle as that contained in the customer and spouse's requested charge and the charge given was a correct statement of the law. Moresi v. Evans, 257 Ga. App. 670, 572 S.E.2d 327 (2002).

Denial of contract not affirmative defense. — When a plaintiff is suing on an alleged express contract by which plaintiff claims defendant agreed to pay a sum certain as rent, and defendant denies there is any such express contract, defendant's answer is not an affirmative defense as to which defendant is required to carry the burden of proof. Willis v. Kemp, 130 Ga. App. 758, 204 S.E.2d 486 (1974).

Legitimacy. — Existence of the presumption of legitimacy arising from the birth of a child requires the production of contrary evidence from the husband, but it does not relieve the wife of her burden of proof to establish legitimacy in the first place. Miller v. Miller, 258 Ga. 168, 366 S.E.2d 682 (1988).

Medical malpractice. — Defense counsel's claim that the conduct of the patient and the midwife was an intervening cause of the fetal death, and that the patient had the burden of proof under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-1 to show that there was no such intervening cause, was error which the trial court should have corrected. Steele v. Atlanta Maternal-Fetal Med., P.C., 271 Ga. App. 622, 610 S.E.2d 546 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Smith v. Finch, 285 Ga. 709, 681 S.E.2d 147 (2009).

Party asserting an accord and satisfaction bears the burden of proof on that issue. Carpet Transp., Inc. v. TMS Ins. Agency, Inc., 165 Ga. App. 734, 302 S.E.2d 421 (1983).

Status as hospital charity patient. — When a nonpaying patient, who in the end was the recipient of a hospital's charity, claims the patient was able to pay and was not a charity patient so that the hospital would be subject to a negligence claim, the trial court abused the court's discretion in refusing to put the burden of proof on the patient or the patient's personal representative. Fulton-DeKalb Hosp. Auth. v. Fanning, 196 Ga. App. 556, 396 S.E.2d 534 (1990).

Specific issues. — For burden of proof on specific civil issues, see the following cases: Lanier v. Hughley, 91 Ga. 719, 18 S.E. 39 (1893) (payment); Pyron & Son v. Ruohs, 120 Ga. 1060, 48 S.E. 434 (1904) (jurisdiction); Gaskins v. Touchton, 151 Ga. 458, 107 S.E. 38 (1921) (payment); Bankers Trust & Audit Co. v. Hanover Nat'l Bank, 35 Ga. App. 619, 134 S.E. 195 (1926) (lack of consideration); Paulk v. Roberts, 42 Ga. App. 79, 155 S.E. 55 (1930) (legality of administrator's investments); Branon v. Ellbee Pictures Corp., 42 Ga. dom, Inc. v. Fourth Nat'l Bank, 174 Ga. 779, 164 S.E. 204 (1932) (forgery); State Hwy. Bd. v. Lewis, 46 Ga. App. 162, 167 S.E. 219 (1932) (invalidity of marriage); Masonic Relief Ass'n v. App. 18, 52 S.E.2d 537 (1949) (lack of notice of application by insured for appointment of umpire); Estridge v. Janko, 96 Ga. App. 246, 99 S.E.2d 682 (1957) (set off and counterclaim); Polk v. Fulton County, 96 Ga. App. 733, 101 S.E.2d 736 (1957) (value of condemned property); Cobb v. Dutton, 222 Ga. 11, 148 S.E.2d 399 (1966) (lack of counsel); Smith v. Morgan, 113 Ga. App. 865, 150 S.E.2d 164 (1966) (title to land); First Pentecostal Church v. City of Atlanta, 144 Ga. App. 718, 242 S.E.2d 357 (1978) (unreasonableness of tax); Forehand v. Pace, 146 Ga. App. 682, 247 S.E.2d 192 (1978) (negligence); Brown v. Minter, 243 Ga. 397, 254 S.E.2d 326 (1979) (access to public records); A & N Inv., Inc. v. Cronin, 151 Ga. App. 738, 261 S.E.2d 469 (1979) (signing of note); Anderson v. Poythress, 246 Ga. 435, 271 S.E.2d 834 (1980) (action of public official); Carter v. Kim, 157 Ga. App. 418, 277 S.E.2d 776 (1981) (existence of contract and agency); Stephen W. Brown Radiology Assocs. v. Gowers, 157 Ga. App. 770, 278 S.E.2d 653 (1981) (hypersensitivity to x-rays).

Workers' compensation proceeding. — When claimant proved that claimant's injury arose out of and in the scope of claimant's employment, the burden shifted to the employer to prove that either claimant's injuries were intentionally self-inflicted or the injuries were caused by an attack for reasons personal to claimant. Hulbert v. Domino's Pizza, Inc., 239 Ga. App. 370, 521 S.E.2d 43 (1999).

Burden of persuasion on propounders in "will contest". — Trial court did not err in finding that a codicil to a testator's will was invalid because it properly charged the jury that the caveators had no burden to prove the grounds of their caveats to the propounders' petition to probate codicils; because testamentary capacity and voluntary execution were necessary elements of the propounders' case, the burden of persuasion remained on the propounders to prove their assertions by a preponderance of the evidence, and in the absence of an asserted affirmative defense, the caveators had no duty to affirmatively prove anything but were required only to come forward with evidence to rebut the propounders' prima facie case as to essential elements. Parker v. Melican, 286 Ga. 185, 684 S.E.2d 654 (2009).

Jury Instructions

Instructions generally. — In the absence of a timely and appropriate request to charge, it is not reversible error for the judge to omit to instruct the jury upon the burden of proof. Lazenby v. Citizens Bank, 20 Ga. App. 53, 92 S.E. 391 (1917).

Instruction must be correct if the judge does charge the jury upon the burden of proof. Lazenby v. Citizens Bank, 20 Ga. App. 53, 92 S.E. 391 (1917).

Instruction on shifting burden. — When the judge correctly charges in regard to the general burden of proof, the judge is not required, as an essential part of the judge's charge (in the absence of a proper request), to discuss the shifting of the burden as to the particular points of contest made by the evidence. Lazenby v. Citizens Bank, 20 Ga. App. 53, 92 S.E. 391 (1917); Haugabrooks v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 63 Ga. App. 829, 12 S.E.2d 163 (1940).

In action by bank to collect on promissory note, when prima facie case had been admitted by defendant, it was misleading and confusing to jury to instruct the jury that burden still remained upon plaintiff to prove plaintiff's case to the jury's satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence; the court should have instructed the jury that in view of defendant's admission as to prima facie right of plaintiff to recover, burden was upon defendant to meet this prima facie right by establishing defendant's affirmative defense of partial accord and satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence. Citizens Bank v. Ansley, 164 Ga. App. 437, 296 S.E.2d 370 (1982).

Request for instructions. — If a party is not satisfied with the general charge on the subject of the burden of proof, it is incumbent upon the party to make timely written request to charge on the shifting of the burden if the party desires such charge. Hyde v. Chappell, 194 Ga. 536, 22 S.E.2d 313 (1942).

Instruction in murder case. — On trial of one charged with murder, it is not error to charge the jury: "The law puts upon the defendant, where he admits the killing, the burden to satisfy the jury that he was justified under some rule of law, unless the admissions, together with the evidence in the case against him, or the statement of the defendant, shows justification or mitigation." Gay v. State, 173 Ga. 793, 161 S.E. 603 (1931).

Condemnation suit instruction in language of statute was a correct abstract principle of law and was not confusing or misleading to the jury. Georgia Power Co. v. Smith, 94 Ga. App. 166, 94 S.E.2d 48 (1956) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-1).

24-4-2. Change of burden in discretion of court.

What amount of evidence will change the onus or burden of proof is a question to be decided in each case by the sound discretion of the court. (Orig. Code 1863, § 3682; Code 1868, § 3706; Code 1873, § 3759; Code 1882, § 3759; Civil Code 1895, § 5161; Penal Code 1895, § 995; Civil Code 1910, § 5747; Penal Code 1910, § 1021; Code 1933, § 38-104.)

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

In general. — Term, "burden of proof," is used in two senses: one, the burden of proof thrust upon the party by the pleadings which remains upon the party throughout the trial and, two, the burden of the evidence which may and does shift during the progress of the trial as to facts or issues from one party to the other. Hawkins v. Davie, 136 Ga. 550, 71 S.E. 873 (1911); Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Thomas, 83 Ga. App. 477, 64 S.E.2d 301 (1951); Deloach v. Automatic Transmission & Brake Shop, Inc., 106 Ga. App. 797, 128 S.E.2d 512 (1962).

Burden of proof. — Statute has no application to the burden of proof placed by the pleadings; the statute applies only to the burden of evidence which may, as to any particular fact or issue, shift from one party to the other. Department of Revenue v. Stewart, 67 Ga. App. 281, 20 S.E.2d 40 (1942); Davison Chem. Corp. v. Hart, 68 Ga. App. 413, 23 S.E.2d 107 (1942); Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Thomas, 83 Ga. App. 477, 64 S.E.2d 301 (1951); Deloach v. Automatic Transmission & Brake Shop, Inc., 106 Ga. App. 797, 128 S.E.2d 512 (1962); Richards v. Wilkinson Shaving Co., 198 Ga. App. 45, 400 S.E.2d 344 (1990) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-2).

Discretion of judge. — As to the burden of proof placed by the pleadings, the trial judge has no discretion — it is a matter of law; but as to the shifting of the burden of the evidence, the judge has discretion to determine whether the evidence produced, together with any applicable rules of presumption and procedure, in the particular case has shifted the burden. Deloach v. Automatic Transmission & Brake Shop, Inc., 106 Ga. App. 797, 128 S.E.2d 512 (1962).

Application not always discretionary. — Statute did not intend to lay down the rule that whether under an affirmation and denial in pleadings upon the case one party or the other carried the burden of establishing that party's allegation was a matter of discretion in every case. Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Thomas, 83 Ga. App. 477, 64 S.E.2d 301 (1951) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-2).

Exercise of discretion. — As to the discretion which the law invests in the trial judge, the judge may call to the judges's assistance in reaching a correct decision other well-recognized and fundamental principles of procedure and practice which are so well recognized that they take the form of substantive evidence. The judge may consider the question of peculiar knowledge. Department of Revenue v. Stewart, 67 Ga. App. 281, 20 S.E.2d 40 (1942).

Burden shifted to defendant. — When the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case, the burden is shifted to the defendant. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y v. Florence, 47 Ga. App. 711, 171 S.E. 317 (1933).

Effect of failure to carry burden. — If the burden of proof has shifted and the party to whom the burden has shifted has not successfully carried this burden of evidence, the trial judge has authority to withdraw the case from the jury by directing a verdict. Deloach v. Automatic Transmission & Brake Shop, Inc., 106 Ga. App. 797, 128 S.E.2d 512 (1962).

Instructions. — Charge of the court should state what testimony would shift the onus, rather than when the onus would be changed, because the latter expression would intimate an opinion as to the sufficiency of the proof. Clark v. Cassidy, 64 Ga. 662 (1880); Lazenby v. Citizens Bank, 20 Ga. App. 53, 92 S.E. 391 (1917).

When state filed for condemnation of a DC-3 airplane, a truck, a trailer, and the contents of the vehicles which had been used previously to transport contraband drugs, the trial court did not err in charging the jury that the defendant had to prove that the defendant had no knowledge that the vehicles were used in violation of controlled substances laws after the state had made out a prima facie case that the vehicles had been used to transport drugs. Morgan v. State, 172 Ga. App. 375, 323 S.E.2d 620 (1984).

Proving a negative. — If a negation or negative affirmation is essential to prove a party's case, the burden of proof of such negative lies on the party so affirming it. Supreme Kingdom, Inc. v. Fourth Nat'l Bank, 174 Ga. 779, 164 S.E. 204 (1932).

Proving status as hospital charity patient. — When a nonpaying patient, who in the end was the recipient of a hospital's charity, claims the patient was able to pay and was not a charity patient so that the hospital would be subject to a negligence claim, the trial court abused the court's discretion in refusing to put the burden of proof on the patient or the patient's personal representative. Fulton-DeKalb Hosp. Auth. v. Fanning, 196 Ga. App. 556, 396 S.E.2d 534 (1990).

Mitigation. — When the lessor under an exclusive rights contract brought an action for damages against the lessee for a breach of the contract, and alleged that the lessor's damages were the total of the fixed amounts to be paid under the contract for the pictures and proved upon the trial the execution of the contract and a breach thereof by the lessee, a prima facie case in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount sued for was made out, and the burden was then upon the defendant to prove that the plaintiff could have lessened plaintiff's damages, and such proof should have included sufficient data to allow the jury to reasonably estimate how much the damages could have been mitigated. Branon v. Ellbee Pictures Corp., 42 Ga. App. 293, 155 S.E. 923 (1930).

Partnership accounting. — When the pleadings and the evidence in a partnership accounting showed that the defendant partner was in possession of the farm, that the defendant kept the books and records, and that the defendant admitted the receipt of the gross amount of money charged to the defendant by the plaintiff, from the sale of the farm and the equipment and cattle thereon, it was not error to charge that the burden was on the defendant of proving a proper disposition of the assets that came into the defendant's hands as a member of the partnership in charge of the partnership's business and assets. Brosnan v. Long, 75 Ga. 837, 44 S.E.2d 809 (1947).

Cited in Hamby v. Crisp, 48 Ga. App. 418, 172 S.E. 842 (1934); Pennsylvania Threshermen & Farmers Mut. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 81 Ga. App. 277, 58 S.E.2d 542 (1950); Mann v. Carter, 213 Ga. 85, 97 S.E.2d 137 (1957); Tolbert v. Tolbert, 131 Ga. App. 388, 206 S.E.2d 63 (1974); Holloway v. State, 137 Ga. App. 124, 222 S.E.2d 898 (1975); Jenkins v. Lampkin, 145 Ga. 24-4-3. Amount of mental conviction required; preponderance of evidence in civil cases.

Moral and reasonable certainty is all that can be expected in legal investigation. In all civil cases a preponderance of evidence is considered sufficient to produce mental conviction. In criminal cases a greater strength of mental conviction is held necessary to justify a verdict of guilty. (Orig. Civil Cases

Degree of proof. — Proof should be satisfactory, but the proof need not be perfectly clear or wholly unimpeached. M.J. Atkins & Co. v. Cobb, 56 Ga. 86 (1876); City Bank v. Kent, 57 Ga. 283 (1876); Poullain v. Poullain, 76 Ga. 420, 4 S.E. 92 (1886); Patton v. State, 117 Ga. 230, 43 S.E. 533 (1903).

Conviction as prima facie evidence of murder. — In a case in which a husband had been convicted of killing his wife, the estate executors were entitled to summary judgment for an order of distribution of life insurance proceeds under O.C.G.A. § 33-25-13. The husband's criminal conviction was prima facie evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-3 that he was guilty of his wife's murder for the purpose of determining that he could not receive proceeds of an insurance policy on her life. Cont'l Cas. Co. v. Adamo, No. 08-10130, 2008 U.S. App. LEXIS 13979 (11th Cir. July 1, 2008) (Unpublished).

Preponderance of evidence. — It is improper to charge in a civil case that proof must establish the contention to a reasonable and moral certainty; a preponderance or superior weight of evidence is sufficient. Supreme Conclave Knights of Damon v. Woods, 120 Ga. 328, 47 S.E. 940 (1904); Youmans v. Moore, 11 Ga. App. 66, 74 S.E. 710 (1912); Masonic Relief Ass'n v. Hicks, 47 Ga. App. 499, 171 S.E. 215 (1933); Life Ins. Co. v. Lawler, 211 Ga. 246, 85 S.E.2d 1 (1954); Hospital Auth. v. Eason, 113 Ga. App. 401, 148 S.E.2d 499, rev'd on other grounds, 222 Ga. 536, 150 S.E.2d 812 (1966).

In a civil action under the Georgia RICO Act, given the similarities in the purpose and language of the federal and Georgia RICO statutes, together with the General Assembly's mandate to liberally construe the Act to effectuate the Act's remedial purposes, under O.C.G.A. § 16-14-2(b), the applicable standard of proof in state civil RICO actions was held to be a preponderance of the evidence; thus, the Supreme Court of Georgia overruled Simpson Consulting, Inc. v. Barclays Bank PLC, 227 Ga. App. 648 (1997), and those other cases holding to the contrary, specifically, Blanton v. Bank of America, 256 Ga. App. 103 (2002), In re Copelan, 250 Ga. App. 856 (2001) and Tronitec, Inc. v. Shealy, 249 Ga. App. 442 (2001). Williams Gen. Corp. v. Stone, 279 Ga. 428, 614 S.E.2d 758 (2005).

Charging entire statute is not injuriously inapplicable to a civil case. Central of Ga. Ry. v. McGuire, 10 Ga. App. 483, 73 S.E. 702 (1912) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-3).

Charge ignoring statute in an action for debt is erroneous. Central of Ga. Ry. v.

Swann, 144 Ga. 11, 85 S.E. 1001 (1915) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-3).

Question for jury. — Preponderance is a question for the jury and should be decided not from mere number of witnesses, but from interest, opportunity, and general deportment and manner of testifying. Clark v. Cassidy, 62 Ga. 607 (1879).

Question of law. — When the evidence as a whole, with all reasonable inferences and deductions to be drawn therefrom, presents no conflict in any material particular, and points only to one result, and in that sense there is no question of fact to be determined, then it becomes a question of law, when the evidence is properly presented, to decide whether the verdict is supported by the evidence. Dyal v. Sanders, 194 Ga. 228, 21 S.E.2d 596 (1942).

In res ipsa loquitur case the plaintiff is not required to eliminate with certainty all other possible causes or inferences, which would mean that the plaintiff must prove a civil case beyond a reasonable doubt. All that is needed is evidence from which reasonable men can say that on the whole it is more likely that there was negligence associated with the cause of the event than that there was not. It is enough that the court cannot say that the jury could not reasonably come to that conclusion. Hospital Auth. v. Eason, 113 Ga. App. 401, 148 S.E.2d 499, rev'd on other grounds, 222 Ga. 536, 150 S.E.2d 812 (1966).

Specific performance. — Notwithstanding this statute, to authorize specific performance of a parol contract for the sale of land or to authorize reformation of a written contract for such sale, the evidence must be so clear, strong, and satisfactory as to leave no reasonable doubt as to the agreement. Redman Bros. v. Mays, 129 Ga. 435, 59 S.E. 212 (1907); Williams v. Segers, 147 Ga. 219, 93 S.E. 215 (1918); Gordon v. Spellman, 148 Ga. 394, 96 S.E. 1006 (1918); Lloyd v. Redford, 148 Ga. 575, 97 S.E. 523 (1918); Allen v. Allen, 151 Ga. 278, 106 S.E. 81 (1921); Ezell v. Mobley, 160 Ga. 872, 129 S.E. 532 (1925) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-3).

Administrative hearings. — Preponderance of evidence standard was applicable in a disciplinary proceeding conducted by the Board of Dentistry. Georgia Bd. of Dentistry v. Pence, 223 Ga. App. 603, 478 S.E.2d 437 (1996).

Instances when preponderance of evidence was sufficient. — In the following cases the preponderance was sufficient to satisfy the jury: Berry v. Mathewes, 7 Ga. 457 (1849) (whether a party has waived lien given by contract); M.J. Atkins & Co. v. Cobb, 56 Ga. 86 (1876) (proving that goods purchased were inferior); Crockett v. Crockett, 73 Ga. 647 (1884) (to correct a mistake in a voluntary deed); Poullain v. Poullain, 76 Ga. 420, 4 S.E. 92 (1886) (to overcome findings of fact by an auditor or master); Atlanta Journal v. Mayson, 92 Ga. 640, 18 S.E. 1010, 44 Am. St. R. 104 (1893) (in an action for libel although a plea of justification, imputes crime to the plaintiff); Drakeford v. Adams, 98 Ga. 722, 25 S.E. 833 (1896) (action by receiver to recover money to prove that the respondent had such money); Brothers v. Horne, 140 Ga. 617, 79 S.E. 468 (1913) (to authorize a recovery in trover); Harp v. Adams, 142 Ga. 5, 82 S.E. 246 (1914) (to prove the material allegations in a probate of a nuncupative will); Cowart v. Strickland, 149 Ga. 397, 100 S.E. 447, 7 A.L.R. 1110 (1919) (to prove forgery of a deed in an action of ejectment); Carter v. Norton, 25 Ga. App. 79, 102 S.E. 648 (1920) (in a plea of justification, in an action for slander); Currie v. State, 153 Ga. 178, 111 S.E. 727 (1922) (defense of insanity on a trial for murder must be proved by a preponderance); Goosby v. State, 153 Ga. 496, 112 S.E. 467 (1922) (insanity by preponderance of evidence in murder trial); Mansor v. Opelinsky, 30 Ga. App. 158, 117 S.E. 113 (1923) (purchase price of goods).

Criminal Cases

Proof required. — Burden of proof is on the state to show that defendant's guilt to a moral and reasonable certainty and beyond a moral and reasonable doubt. Blakeley v. State, 78 Ga. App. 516, 51 S.E.2d 598 (1949); Life Ins. Co. v. Lawler, 211 Ga. 246, 85 S.E.2d 1 (1954).

Degree of certainty required. — Mathematical certainty is not required and cannot be attained in a legal investigation; moral and reasonable certainty is all the law requires. McNaughton v. State, 136 Ga. 600, 71 S.E. 1038 (1911), appeal dismissed, 223 U.S. 744, 32 S. Ct. 532, 56 L. Ed. 639 (1912).

"Moral and reasonable certainty." — Better practice in charging the jury on reasonable doubt is to omit the phrase "moral and reasonable certainty", since "what is perceived as 'moral' may differ from group to group, from class to class, and from individual to individual," and the equivocal nature of the term "reasonable" might conceivably lead a juror to apply to the evidence a lesser standard of proof than beyond a reasonable doubt. Gearin v. State, 208 Ga. App. 878, 432 S.E.2d 818 (1993).

Court's instruction that "No person shall be convicted of any crime unless and until each element of the crime is proven beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral and reasonable certainty..." was not reasonably likely to be interpreted by the jury to allow conviction on proof not meeting the standard of beyond a reasonable doubt or on factors other than the government's proof when, in defining reasonable doubt, the court did not equate it with anything else and repeated the "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard many times. Nevertheless, the "moral certainty" terminology should not be used in jury instructions. Lloyd v. State, 214 Ga. App. 564, 448 S.E.2d 729 (1994).

Charging entire statute not prejudicial. — While it is the better practice in criminal cases to omit from the charge the portion of the statute relating to preponderance of the evidence, no prejudicial error is shown when the entire statute is charged. Howell v. State, 124 Ga. 698, 52 S.E. 649 (1906); Williams v. State, 125 Ga. 302, 54 S.E. 108 (1906); Holmes v. State, 131 Ga. 806, 63 S.E. 347 (1909); Brundage v. State, 7 Ga. App. 726, 67 S.E. 1051 (1910); Fowler v. State, 187 Ga. 472, 1 S.E.2d 18 (1939) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-3).

Failure to charge statute not prejudicial. — When the court properly instructs the jury as to the law of reasonable doubt, the failure to charge the provisions of this statute affords no cause for a new trial. Skinner v. State, 98 Ga. 126, 26 S.E. 475 (1896); Middleton v. State, 7 Ga. App. 1, 66 S.E. 22 (1909); Fort v. State, 31 Ga. App. 525, 121 S.E. 128 (1924); Albritton v. State, 175 Ga. 891, 166 S.E. 643 (1932) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-3).

Province of jury. — When evidence is adduced to authorize a conviction in a criminal case, it is the province of the jury to decide the weight and credit to be given the evidence and whether the state's proof when considered together with that submitted on behalf of the defendant meets the standard of removing every reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused. Whitus v. State, 222 Ga. 103, 149 S.E.2d 130 (1966), rev'd on other grounds, 385 U.S. 545, 87 S. Ct. 643, 17 L. Ed. 2d 599 (1967).

24-4-4. Determining where preponderance of evidence lies.

In determining where the preponderance of evidence lies, the jury may consider all the facts and circumstances of the case, the witnesses’ manner of testifying, their intelligence, their means and opportunity for knowing the facts to which they testified, the nature of the facts to which they testified, the probability or improbability of their testimony, their interest or want of interest, and their personal credibility so far as the same may legitimately appear from the trial. The jury may also consider the number of the witnesses, though the preponderance is not necessarily with the greater number. (Civil Code 1895, § 5146; Civil Code 1910, § 5732; Code 1933, § 38-107.)

- 2. CRIMINAL CASES

General Consideration

Statute not mandatory as to jury. — Directions in this statute are for the jury only and not mandatory as to the jury but merely addressed to the jury’s discretion. Alexander v. State, 1 Ga. App. 289, 57 S.E. 996 (1907) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Jury “may” consider rules. — It was not error to charge that jury “may” consider the rules of this statute. Louisville & N.R.R. v. Rodgers, 21 Ga. App. 324, 94 S.E. 321 (1917); Hatcher v. Bray, 88 Ga. App. 344, 77 S.E.2d 64 (1953) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Jury “will” consider rules. — There was no error in using the word “will” instead of the word “may” in connection with this statute. Robinson v. State, 158 Ga. 47, 122 S.E. 886 (1924) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Province of jury. — It is the province of the jury to determine the credibility of witnesses. Caldwell v. Caldwell, 59 Ga. App. 637,

1 S.E.2d 764 (1939) (interest of witness); Couch v. State, 73 Ga. App. 153, 35 S.E.2d 708 (1945) (bias of witness); Pantone v. Pantone, 206 Ga. 305, 57 S.E.2d 77 (1950) (weight and credit of testimony); Harrison v. Regents of Univ. Sys., 99 Ga. App. 762, 109 S.E.2d 854 (1959) (interest of witness); Freedman v. Housing Auth., 108 Ga. App. 418, 136 S.E.2d 544 (1963) (bias of witness); Brown v. Nutter, 125 Ga. App. 449, 188 S.E.2d 133 (1972) (credibility of party); Brown Transp. Co. v. Parker, 129 Ga. App. 737, 201 S.E.2d 17 (1973) (party at interest).

Within the closing argument presented by the state, the probability or improbability of a police officer’s testimony, as well as an interest or want of interest and personal credibility, could properly be considered by the jury. Cantrell v. State, 290 Ga. App. 651, 660 S.E.2d 468 (2008).

Equal credibility of witnesses. — Personal credibility of the witnesses in conflict must first be equal before the other contingencies named in this statute will apply equally. Nashville, C. & S.L. Ry. v. Hubble, 139 Ga. 300, 76 S.E. 1009 (1913); Georgia Power Co. v. Burger, 63 Ga. App. 784, 11 S.E.2d 834 (1940) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Unimpeached witnesses. — Rule that the uncontradicted testimony of unimpeached witnesses cannot be arbitrarily disregarded does not mean that the jury are obliged to believe testimony which the jury in fact discredits, but means that the jury are to consider the testimony of every witness who is sworn, and not arbitrarily disregard the testimony of any witness. Caldwell v. Caldwell, 59 Ga. App. 637, 1 S.E.2d 764 (1939); American Cas. Co. v. Windham, 26 F. Supp. 261 (M.D. Ga.), aff'd, 107 F.2d 88 (5th Cir. 1939), cert. denied, 309 U.S. 674, 60 S. Ct. 714, 84 L. Ed. 1019 (1940); Pantone v. Pantone, 206 Ga. 305, 57 S.E.2d 77 (1950); Brown v. Nutter, 125 Ga. App. 449, 188 S.E.2d 133 (1972); Brown Transp. Co. v. Parker, 129 Ga. App. 737, 201 S.E.2d 17 (1973).

Testimony of party who offers oneself as a witness in one's own behalf is to be construed most strongly against that party. Western & Atl. R.R. v. Michael, 42 Ga. App. 603, 157 S.E. 226 (1931).

Equivocal testimony of party. — Testimony of a party who offers oneself as a witness in one's own behalf is to be construed most strongly against that party when it is self-contradictory, vague, or equivocal. Brooks v. Douglas, 154 Ga. App. 54, 267 S.E.2d 495 (1980).

Court's charge to jury that equivocal testimony of a party is to be construed most strongly against that party and that there should not be a finding in that party's favor if that version would support a verdict against that party is reversible error when other competent evidence supports the equivocal testimony of that witness, because such a charge unjustly prejudices the jury. Weathers v. Cowan, 176 Ga. App. 19, 335 S.E.2d 392 (1985).

Testimony of principal witness. — Instruction that "when the testimony of a party or a principal witness is vague, equivocal or self-contradictory, it should be construed most strongly against the cause for which he is testifying" violates this statute unless the party is the sole witness testifying in that party's behalf. Slaton Mach. Sales, Inc. v. Owens-Illinois, Inc., 138 Ga. App. 80, 225 S.E.2d 473 (1976) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Unwillingness of witness to commit oneself. — Testimony of a witness is not to be excluded merely because the witness prefaces the witness's statement by an expression of unwillingness to commit oneself absolutely and positively to the accuracy of what one says. Holcombe v. State, 5 Ga. App. 47, 62 S.E. 647 (1908).

Number of witnesses. — While a plaintiff may sustain plaintiff's case by the greater number of witnesses, this does not necessarily mean that the preponderance of the testimony is in the plaintiff's favor. Sometimes, in the minds of jurors, the testimony of one witness is of more weight and credit than that of a host of witnesses. McGriff v. McGriff, 154 Ga. 560, 115 S.E. 21 (1922).

When number of witnesses equal. — Ruling that it might amount to reversible error, in charging the provisions of this statute, to fail to include in the charge the provision that "the jury may also consider the number of witnesses, though the preponderance is not necessary with the greater number," does not apply to a case if the number of witnesses on both sides are the same. Atlanta Gas-Light Co. v. Cook, 35 Ga. App. 622, 134 S.E. 198 (1926) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Argument to jury concerning credibility. — While it is the right of counsel for the defendant in counsel's argument to the jury to comment on the credibility of a witness for the state, and to accuse the witness of having committed perjury, counsel has no absolute right while doing so to point the witness out to the jury as the witness sits in the courtroom. Corley v. State, 64 Ga. App. 841, 14 S.E.2d 121 (1941).

Argument to jury concerning deposition testimony. — Counsel may by argument call attention to the fact that the opponent relied on written depositions, and that this manner of the witnesses in testifying cannot in this way be observed, although the witnesses themselves were in court. Georgia, Fla. & Ala. Ry. v. Sasser, 4 Ga. App. 276, 61 S.E. 505 (1908).

Personal knowledge of juror. — Juror must not consider any personal knowledge that the juror might have in reference to the plaintiff's character. Georgia Ry. & Elec. Co. v. Dougherty, 4 Ga. App. 614, 62 S.E. 158 (1908).

Appellate court considers only the sufficiency of the evidence; the weight of the evidence is within the sole province of the jury. Sherman v. Stephens, 30 Ga. App. 509, 118 S.E. 567 (1923); Reaves v. Columbus Elec. & Power Co., 32 Ga. App. 140, 122 S.E. 824, cert. denied, 32 Ga. App. 807 (1924); Crawley v. Marta, 147 Ga. App. 293, 248 S.E.2d 555 (1978); Coleman v. State, 150 Ga. App. 380, 258 S.E.2d 12 (1979).

Instructions

1. Civil Cases

Failure to charge on preponderance of the evidence is not error in the absence of a special request. — See Freeman v. Coleman

Instructions (Cont'd)
1. Civil Cases (Cont'd)

Ray & Co., 88 Ga. 421, 14 S.E. 551 (1892); Rome Ry. & Light Co. v. King, 33 Ga. App. 383, 126 S.E. 294 (1925); Loftin v. Carroll County Bd. of Educ., 70 Ga. App. 315, 28 S.E.2d 372 (1943); Flatauer v. Goodman, 84 Ga. App. 881, 67 S.E.2d 794 (1951).

Instruction must be full and complete. —

If the court undertakes to charge the jury on the preponderance of the evidence as laid down in this statute, it is the court's duty to instruct the jury fully and completely with respect thereto and not merely to charge certain portions of that statute. A.F. Gossett & Sons v. Wilder, 46 Ga. App. 651, 168 S.E. 903 (1933); Travelers Indem. Co. v. Paramount Publix Corp., 52 Ga. App. 239, 182 S.E. 923 (1935); Sconyers v. State, 67 Ga. App. 902, 21 S.E.2d 504 (1942); Fountain v. McCallum, 194 Ga. 269, 21 S.E.2d 610 (1942); Smaha v. George, 195 Ga. 412, 24 S.E.2d 385 (1943); Turner v. Joiner, 77 Ga. App. 603, 48 S.E.2d 907 (1948); Southern Ry. v. Florence, 81 Ga. App. 1, 57 S.E.2d 856 (1950); Georgia Power Co. v. Pittman, 92 Ga. App. 673, 89 S.E.2d 577 (1955); Bell v. Proctor, 212 Ga. 325, 92 S.E.2d 514 (1956); Williams v. Southern Ry., 99 Ga. App. 503, 109 S.E.2d 343 (1959) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Incomplete charge not necessarily reversible. — If the language in A.F. Gossett & Sons v. Wilder, 46 Ga. App. 651, 168 S.E. 903 (1933), is so construed that it is always reversible error for a trial judge, in charging the provisions of this statute, to omit any of the provisions therein, such language is expressly disapproved. Georgia Power Co. v. Burger, 63 Ga. App. 784, 11 S.E.2d 834 (1940) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Existence of reversible error depends on particular facts. — In charging to the jury the provisions of this statute, the better practice is to charge the statute in its entirety, but the omission of some of the provisions, may or may not be error, depending on the facts of the case. Georgia Power Co. v. Burger, 63 Ga. App. 784, 11 S.E.2d 834 (1940); Callaway v. Fischer, 69 Ga. App. 251, 25 S.E.2d 131 (1943); Cedrone v. Beck, 74 Ga. App. 488, 40 S.E.2d 388 (1946); City of Louisville v. Clark, 108 Ga. App. 389, 133 S.E.2d 45 (1963); Carter v. Wyatt, 113 Ga.

App. 235, 148 S.E.2d 74 (1966) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Statute as means for determining credibility. — It is not error to charge that the language of this statute is also a means for determining the credibility of witnesses. Andrews Taxi & U-Drive It Co. v. McEver, 101 Ga. App. 383, 114 S.E.2d 145 (1960); Collins v. Porterfield, 102 Ga. App. 294, 116 S.E.2d 105 (1960); Chandler v. Alabama Power Co., 104 Ga. App. 521, 122 S.E.2d 317 (1961), rev'd on other grounds, 217 Ga. 550, 123 S.E.2d 767 (1962) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Detailed charge unauthorized. — Trial court is not authorized to charge a jury in specific detail as to certain testimony neutralizing other testimony because what has been proven is solely and exclusively to be determined by the jury. Fules, Inc. v. Rutland, 123 Ga. App. 23, 179 S.E.2d 290 (1970).

Error must be shown. — Even if the court has not instructed in the terms of this statute, error must be shown for a reversal. Southern Ry. v. Wessinger, 32 Ga. App. 551, 124 S.E. 100, cert. denied, 32 Ga. App. 807 (1924) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Specific exceptions. — In order to take advantage of an omission to charge a specific part of this statute, it is necessary to make specific exception. Harris v. Central of Ga. Ry., 30 Ga. App. 720, 119 S.E. 349 (1923) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

2. Criminal Cases

Applicability to credibility. — Insofar as this statute relates to matters pertinent to the consideration of the credibility of witnesses, the statute may be given in a charge to the jury in a criminal case. Bell v. State, 47 Ga. App. 216, 169 S.E. 732 (1933); Campbell v. State, 53 Ga. App. 380, 186 S.E. 137 (1935); Moore v. State, 57 Ga. App. 287, 195 S.E. 320 (1938); Couch v. State, 73 Ga. App. 153, 35 S.E.2d 708 (1945); Andrews v. State, 196 Ga. 84, 26 S.E.2d 263, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 780, 64 S. Ct. 87, 88 L. Ed. 468 (1943), overruled on other grounds, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955); McDonald v. State, 104 Ga. App. 578, 122 S.E.2d 145 (1961) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Inapplicability to quantum of proof. — This statute, insofar as it relates to the determination of where the preponderance of the evidence lies has no application to a criminal case and should not be charged. Baker v. State, 47 Ga. App. 205, 170 S.E. 209 (1933); Eller v. State, 48 Ga. App. 163, 172 S.E. 592 (1934); Sconyers v. State, 67 Ga. App. 902, 21 S.E.2d 504 (1942); Couch v. State, 73 Ga. App. 153, 35 S.E.2d 708 (1945); McDonald v. State, 104 Ga. App. 578, 122 S.E.2d 145 (1961) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

Harmless error. — While it is ordinarily inapt to charge this statute in a criminal case, doing so is not reversible error if the instruction appears to be harmless. Eller v. State, 48 Ga. App. 163, 172 S.E. 592 (1934); Andrews v. State, 196 Ga. 84, 26 S.E.2d 263, cert. denied, 320 U.S. 780, 64 S. Ct. 87, 88 L. Ed. 468 (1943), overruled on other grounds, Frady v. State, 212 Ga. 84, 90 S.E.2d 664 (1955); Harper v. State, 201 Ga. 10, 39 S.E.2d 45 (1946); Fountain v. State, 207 Ga. 144, 60 S.E.2d 433 (1950), overruled on other grounds, Lavender v. State, 234 Ga. 608, 216 S.E.2d 855 (1975) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-4).

24-4-5. Reasonable doubt in criminal cases.

Whether dependent upon direct or circumstantial evidence, the true question in criminal cases is not whether it is possible that the conclusion at which the evidence points may be false, but whether there is sufficient evidence to satisfy the mind and conscience beyond a reasonable doubt. (Penal Code 1895, § 987; Penal Code 1910, § 1013; Code 1933, § 38-110.)

History of Code section. — This Code section is derived from the decision in John v. State, 33 Ga. 257 (1862).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Statute applies to recorder's courts. Scott v. Mayor of Athens, 111 Ga. App. 173, 140 S.E.2d 922 (1965) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-5).

Preponderance of evidence standard inapplicable. — Law of the preponderance of evidence is not applicable in criminal cases. McDonald v. State, 104 Ga. App. 578, 122 S.E.2d 145 (1961).

Reasonable and moral certainty. — Reasonable doubt is such as leaves the mind in an uncertain and wavering condition where it is impossible to say with reasonable and moral certainty that the accused is guilty. Dumas v. State, 63 Ga. 600 (1879); Davis v. State, 114 Ga. 104, 39 S.E. 906 (1901).

Mathematical certainty not required and cannot be attained in a legal investigation; moral and reasonable certainty is all that the law requires. McNaughton v. State, 136 Ga. 600, 71 S.E. 1038 (1911), appeal dismissed, 223 U.S. 744, 32 S. Ct. 532, 56 L. Ed. 639 (1912).

Mere doubt insufficient. — Reasonable doubt is not a vague or conjectural doubt on a mere guess. Giles v. State, 6 Ga. 276 (1849); Bone v. State, 102 Ga. 387, 390 S.E. 845 (1897); Brantley v. State, 133 Ga. 264, 65 S.E. 426 (1909).

Bare suspicion not sufficient. — Bare suspicion of guilt is not sufficient to authorize a conviction. Oneil v. State, 48 Ga. 66 (1873); Hammond v. State, 2 Ga. App. 384, 58 S.E. 509 (1907); Diggs v. State, 90 Ga. App. 853, 84 S.E.2d 611 (1954); Scott v. Mayor of Athens, 111 Ga. App. 173, 140 S.E.2d 922 (1965); Muckle v. State, 165 Ga. App. 873, 303 S.E.2d 54 (1983).

Reason for doubt. — In the charge of the court on the subject of reasonable doubt, it was not error to include the phrase, "a doubt for which you can give a reason." Vann v. State, 83 Ga. 44, 9 S.E. 945 (1889); Bryant v. State, 197 Ga. 641, 30 S.E.2d 259

(1944); Carter v. State, 71 Ga. App. 626, 31 S.E.2d 666 (1944).

Moral certainty equated with reasonable doubt. — Phrases, “to a moral and reasonable certainty” and “beyond a reasonable doubt,” and applied to the quality of proof in a case, are identical in meaning. Austin v. State, 6 Ga. App. 211, 64 S.E. 670 (1909); Dicks v. State, 155 Ga. App. 591, 271 S.E.2d 727 (1980).

Moral certainty equated with absolute certainty. — Statute requires proof to a moral certainty, as distinguished from an absolute certainty. As applied to a judicial trial for a crime, the two phrases are synonymous and equivalent; each signifies such proof as satisfies the judgment and consciences of the jury, as reasonable men and applying their reason to the evidence before them, that the crime charged has been committed by the defendant, and so satisfies them as to leave no other reasonable conclusion possible. Bone v. State, 102 Ga. 387, 30 S.E. 845 (1897).

Reversible error despite defendant's failure to object to the charge. — After trial court gave the jury the suggested pattern charge on reasonable doubt the court summarized the charge by saying “In other words, if you honestly believe he's guilty, convict him. If you honestly believe he is not guilty, find him not guilty.” Jones v. State, 252 Ga. App. 332, 556 S.E.2d 238 (2001).

Trial court's instruction that “neither does [reasonable doubt] mean a possibility that the defendant may be innocent” violates defendant's state and federal due process rights. Mangum v. State, 274 Ga. 573, 555 S.E.2d 451 (2001).

Conflicts in testimony do not preclude finding of guilt. — While there may be conflicts in the testimony of witnesses at trial, a rational trier of fact, in certain cases, may still reasonably find from the evidence adduced at trial proof of defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Hammonds v. State, 157 Ga. App. 393, 277 S.E.2d 762 (1981).

Quantum of proof. — Burden of proof is on the state in all criminal cases to show the defendant's guilt to a moral and reasonable certainty and beyond a moral and reasonable doubt. Walker v. State, 137 Ga. 398, 73 S.E. 368 (1912); Montgomery v. State, 202 Ga. 678, 44 S.E.2d 242 (1947); Blakeley v.

State, 78 Ga. App. 516, 51 S.E.2d 598 (1949); Life Ins. Co. v. Lawler, 211 Ga. 246, 85 S.E.2d 1 (1954).

Proof beyond reasonable doubt required in criminal contempt prosecution. — It is a denial of a defendant's right of due process of law under the federal and state constitutions and O.C.G.A. § 24-4-5 to fail to require proof beyond a reasonable doubt in a criminal contempt prosecution because the result of such a conviction is to deny the defendant's liberty and the levy of a penal fine. In re Crane, 253 Ga. 667, 324 S.E.2d 443 (1985).

It is not necessary for state to prove that it was impossible for offenses charged to have been committed by anybody else. Perry v. State, 158 Ga. App. 349, 280 S.E.2d 390 (1981).

Every element of crime must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Gosha v. State, 56 Ga. 36 (1876) (venue); Bell v. State, 91 Ga. 15, 16 S.E. 207 (1892) (capacity to commit crime); Barnes v. State, 113 Ga. 716, 39 S.E. 488 (1901) (grade of offense); Glover v. State, 114 Ga. 828, 40 S.E. 998 (1902) (identity of defendant); Green v. State, 4 Ga. App. 260, 61 S.E. 234 (1908) (venue); Simpson v. State, 12 Ga. App. 292, 77 S.E. 105 (1913) (grade of offense); Davis v. State, 46 Ga. App. 174, 167 S.E. 205 (1932) (possession of stolen article).

Circumstantial evidence sufficient to convict if the evidence is consistent with the hypothesis of the guilt of the defendant and excludes every other reasonable hypothesis. Graham v. State, 183 Ga. 881, 189 S.E. 910 (1937); Carter v. State, 57 Ga. App. 180, 194 S.E. 842 (1938); Dominick v. State, 66 Ga. App. 531, 18 S.E.2d 502 (1942); Diggs v. State, 90 Ga. App. 853, 84 S.E.2d 611 (1954); Crane v. State, 123 Ga. App. 226, 180 S.E.2d 289 (1971); Lewis v. State, 149 Ga. App. 181, 254 S.E.2d 142 (1979); Barfield v. State, 160 Ga. App. 228, 286 S.E.2d 516 (1981).

To sustain a conviction on circumstantial evidence only, the state must prove facts that are not only consistent with the hypothesis of the guilt of the accused, but the facts proved must exclude every other reasonable hypothesis. Johnson v. State, 159 Ga. App. 497, 283 S.E.2d 711 (1981).

Circumstantial evidence may outweigh positive evidence in probative value. Stephens v. State, 127 Ga. App. 416, 193 S.E.2d 870 (1972).

Two theories presented. — When the facts in evidence and all reasonable deductions therefrom present two theories, one of guilt and the other consistent with innocence, the justice and humanity of the law compel the acceptance of the theory which is consistent with innocence. Davis v. State, 13 Ga. App. 142, 78 S.E. 866 (1913); Rutland v. State, 46 Ga. App. 417, 167 S.E. 705 (1933); Barnett v. State, 153 Ga. App. 430, 265 S.E.2d 348 (1980); Johnson v. State, 159 Ga. App. 497, 283 S.E.2d 711 (1981).

An instruction that the existence of two equal theories, guilt or innocence, requires acquittal is not error unless the evidence relied on by the state is wholly circumstantial, in which case the word "equal" should not appear in the instruction. Carpenter v. State, 167 Ga. App. 634, 307 S.E.2d 19 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 79, 310 S.E.2d 912 (1984).

Presumption of innocence. — Every accused person has a presumption of innocence in the accused's favor, and the accused cannot be convicted until this evidence is overcome and the accused's guilt established beyond all reasonable doubt. Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168 (1879); Campbell v. State, 100 Ga. 267, 28 S.E. 71 (1897); Wimberly v. State, 12 Ga. App. 540, 77 S.E. 879 (1913).

Reasonable doubt must be charged. — In every criminal case the court should charge the jury that to authorize conviction, guilt must be proved "beyond a reasonable doubt"; and, unless the evidence demands the verdict rendered, the failure to do so will be reversible error. Norman v. State, 10 Ga. App. 802, 74 S.E. 428 (1912).

Not error to charge this statute. — It is never error for the trial court to charge the jury on the subject of reasonable doubt in the language of this statute. Thomas v. State, 33 Ga. App. 680, 127 S.E. 891 (1925); McDowell v. State, 78 Ga. App. 116, 50 S.E.2d 633 (1948) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-5).

Charging entire statute unnecessary. — When the charge given was not the entire charge on reasonable doubt as found in this statute, if the charge was fair and did not shift any burden to the defendant the charge is approved. Jones v. State, 139 Ga. App. 366, 228 S.E.2d 387 (1976) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-5).

Definition of reasonable doubt unnecessary. — Court need not attempt to define reasonable doubt. Jordan v. State, 16 Ga. App. 393, 85 S.E. 455 (1915); Bell v. State, 148 Ga. 352, 96 S.E. 861 (1918); Floyd v. State, 58 Ga. App. 867, 200 S.E. 207 (1938); Fountain v. State, 71 Ga. App. 191, 30 S.E.2d 359 (1944); Brock v. State, 91 Ga. App. 141, 85 S.E.2d 177 (1954); Lingo v. State, 96 Ga. App. 379, 100 S.E.2d 116 (1957).

Province of jury. — It is the province of the jury to decide the weight and credit to be given the evidence. Fortson v. State, 69 Ga. App. 378, 25 S.E.2d 820 (1943); Whitus v. State, 222 Ga. 103, 149 S.E.2d 130 (1966); Armour v. State, 154 Ga. App. 740, 270 S.E.2d 22 (1980); Mosley v. State, 157 Ga. App. 578, 278 S.E.2d 154 (1981); Davis v. State, 159 Ga. App. 197, 283 S.E.2d 17 (1981); Painter v. State, 159 Ga. App. 479, 283 S.E.2d 695 (1981).

Whether every reasonable hypothesis except that of guilt of the defendant has been excluded is question for jury, when the jury is properly instructed. Barfield v. State, 160 Ga. App. 228, 286 S.E.2d 516 (1981).

Instructions not error in the following cases. — See Smith v. State, 34 Ga. App. 779, 131 S.E. 923 (1926); Lucas v. State, 48 Ga. App. 42, 171 S.E. 850 (1933); Pound v. State, 180 Ga. 83, 178 S.E. 291 (1935); Stowe v. State, 51 Ga. App. 726, 181 S.E. 419 (1935); Pulliam v. State, 196 Ga. 782, 28 S.E.2d 139 (1943); Rogers v. State, 72 Ga. App. 581, 278 S.E.2d 156 (1981).

Erroneous charge. — Following charge was held inaccurate: "Whether dependent upon positive or circumstantial evidence, the true question in all criminal cases is not that the conclusion to which the evidence points may be false, but whether or not the state has satisfied the minds and consciences of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused." King v. State, 163 Ga. 313, 136 S.E. 154 (1926).

OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Statute inapplicable to contempt case. — Criminal contempt is not strictly speaking a “criminal case” and as such does not require proof beyond a reasonable doubt as required for other criminal cases. 1979 Op. Att’y Gen. No. 79-36.

24-4-6. When conviction may be had on circumstantial evidence.

SUFFICIENCY OF CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE

APPEAL

General Consideration

Meaning of this statute is so clear and manifest as not to require explanation. Morris v. State, 176 Ga. 243, 167 S.E. 509 (1933) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6).

Statute constitutes standard of proof. — Although O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 is designated as a rule of evidence, in substance the statute is actually a standard of proof required for a conviction based upon circumstantial evidence. Wilcox v. Ford, 813 F.2d 1140 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 925, 108 S. Ct. 287, 98 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1987).

Standard in federal court. — In setting out the federal constitutional standard in Jackson v. Virginia 443 U.S. 307 (1979), the United States Supreme Court expressly rejected the standard of proof now embodied in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, and that state standard has no place in a federal appellate court's sufficiency of the evidence analysis in a habeas corpus case. Wilcox v. Ford, 813 F.2d 1140 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 925, 108 S. Ct. 287, 98 L. Ed. 2d 247 (1987); Bishop v. Kelso, 914 F.2d 1468 (11th Cir. 1990).

Question of admissibility of circumstantial evidence is largely in the discretion of the trial court, and when facts are such that the jury may or may not make an inference pertinent to the issue, it is not error to permit the jury to hear the circumstantial evidence. Bond v. State, 104 Ga. App. 627,

122 S.E.2d 310 (1961).

Statute applicable to municipal court sitting as a jury. Hanjaras v. City of Atlanta, 6 Ga. App. 575, 65 S.E. 356 (1909); Porter v. Mayor of Athens, 18 Ga. App. 232, 89 S.E. 173 (1916) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6).

Statute applies to circumstantial evidence, not direct evidence. — Defendant's reliance on the circumstantial evidence rule of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to assert defendant's innocence for the crimes of armed robbery and hijacking a motor vehicle was misplaced as use of that rule presumed that only circumstantial evidence was offered, but, in fact, direct evidence was offered in the form of the victim's positive identification of defendant at the scene of the arrest. Lane v. State, 255 Ga. App. 274, 564 S.E.2d 857 (2002).

Trial court did not err in denying defendant's motion for directed verdict of acquittal as direct evidence that defendant fired at the victim and defendant's own admission that defendant fired at the victim was sufficient to submit the question of whether defendant was guilty of aggravated assault to the jury; no error occurred pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, involving a conviction based solely on circumstantial evidence, as the state offered more than circumstantial evidence to support the state's case against defendant. Cobb v. State, 268 Ga. App. 66, 601 S.E.2d 443 (2004).

Defendant's claim that the evidence was insufficient to disprove alternative hypotheses of innocence necessarily presumed that the evidence was entirely circumstantial, failed in light of the direct evidence of the victim's in-court identification of defendant. Banks v. State, 269 Ga. App. 653, 605 S.E.2d 47 (2004).

In attacking defendant's convictions for malice murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony arising from a shooting death, defendant's reliance on O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was misplaced because there was direct evidence of defendant's guilt in the form of defendant's own statement and eyewitness testimony that defendant approached the victim's car armed with a pistol and that multiple shots were fired. Wallace v. State, 279 Ga. 26, 608 S.E.2d 634 (2005).

When defendant sat in a stolen would-be getaway car while the accomplice murdered a victim, and then defendant and the accomplice abandoned that car and fled the scene, defendant's conviction for the accomplice's crime was not based solely on circumstantial evidence, as a neighbor saw a person leaning into the stolen car who fit defendant's physical appearance, and defendant admitted to being that person. Jackson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 279, 617 S.E.2d 249 (2005).

Evidence supported a defendant's conviction for possession of a firearm by a convicted felon as defendant's possession of the victim's handgun and shotgun on the night of the crimes was shown by the victim's direct testimony since: (1) the victim testified that two men forced their way into the victim's house, hit the victim in the head with a blunt object, recovered a .380 caliber handgun and a 20-gauge single-barrel shotgun, forced the victim to give them thousands of dollars the victim had hidden in the attic; (2) during a consensual search, the police found a .380 caliber handgun hidden in the defendant's bedroom that was identified as the victim's by the victim and that bore the same serial number as the victim's gun; and (3) the victim identified defendant in a photo array and at trial; the evidence authorized the jury to find that the defendant was in actual possession of the handgun on February 21 and that the defendant continued to be in at least constructive possession of the gun when the gun was found in the defendant's bedroom. Tanksley v. State, 281 Ga. App. 61, 635 S.E.2d 353 (2006).

Defendant's argument that the evidence presented by the state failed to exclude every alternative, reasonable hypothesis failed; the reasonable hypothesis rule, under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, had no application to the case as there was direct evidence of the defendant's guilt in the form of the victim's prior inconsistent statements about being beaten by the defendant. Meeks v. State, 281 Ga. App. 334, 636 S.E.2d 77 (2006).

In a drug possession case, the defendant was not convicted based on circumstantial evidence that, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, failed to exclude every other hypothesis save that of the defendant's guilt; the passenger's testimony that the defendant handed the passenger drugs and told the passenger to discard the drugs provided direct evidence that the defendant possessed more than an ounce of marijuana in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30. Curtis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 322, 638 S.E.2d 773 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 203 (Ga. 2007).

Because the victim's testimony provided direct evidence of defendant's guilt, the rule that the facts had to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused was not at issue. Mack v. State, 294 Ga. App. 518, 669 S.E.2d 487 (2008).

Because a codefendant's prior inconsistent statements were based on the codefendant's eyewitness account of what occurred, the statements were direct evidence of the defendant's guilt, rendering the reasonable hypothesis rule inapplicable. Green v. State, 298 Ga. App. 17, 679 S.E.2d 348 (2009).

There was no merit to the defendant's argument that the state's evidence failed to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of the defendant's guilt because the prior statement of the defendant's father to an investigator provided direct evidence that the defendant had moved and supported the charge that the defendant had changed residences without notifying the local authorities as required by O.C.G.A. § 42-1-12. State v. Canup, 300 Ga. App. 678, 686 S.E.2d 275 (2009).

Venue may be shown by circumstantial evidence. Graham v. State, 16 Ga. App. 221, 84 S.E. 981 (1915); Dickerson v. State, 186 Ga. 557, 199 S.E. 142 (1938).

Case involving life or imprisonment. — Statute should never be relaxed in a case involving life or imprisonment. Cook v. State, 114 Ga. 523, 40 S.E. 703 (1902); Creech v. State, 30 Ga. App. 631, 118 S.E. 501 (1923) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6).

Incriminary statements. — When the defendant makes incriminatory statements after the victim's death, the case is not one depending entirely upon circumstantial evidence. Phipps v. State, 203 Ga. App. 128, 416 S.E.2d 319, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 907, 416 S.E.2d 319 (1992).

Defendant was not convicted of possession of a firearm by a convicted felon under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-131(b) merely based on circumstantial evidence that failed, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis except that of the defendant's guilt; the defendant made several admissions to officers that constituted direct evidence, including that the defendant had a gun in the defendant's bedroom and that the defendant used the gun to hunt. Parramore v. State, 277 Ga. App. 372, 626 S.E.2d 567 (2006).

Confession is not circumstantial evidence; thus, defendant was not entitled to directed verdict under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 since the defendant failed to prove that defendant's confession was unlawfully obtained. Bigham v. State, 222 Ga. App. 353, 474 S.E.2d 254 (1996).

Defendant's admission that the defendant shot the victim but did so in self-defense removed the case from the rule that a conviction based entirely on circumstantial evidence can be affirmed only if every reasonable hypothesis other than guilt is excluded. Wright v. State, 294 Ga. App. 20, 668 S.E.2d 505 (2008).

Proven facts must be inconsistent with innocence to warrant a conviction on circumstantial evidence. Riley v. State, 1 Ga. App. 651, 57 S.E. 1031 (1907); Middleton v. State, 7 Ga. App. 1, 66 S.E. 22 (1909).

When the circumstances authorize a mere conjecture of guilt. Fowler v. State, 32 Ga. App. 361, 123 S.E. 43 (1924); Vinson v. State, 120 Ga. App. 425, 170 S.E.2d 749 (1969); Jackson v. State, 152 Ga. App. 441, 263 S.E.2d 181 (1979); Hall v. State, 155 Ga. App. 211, 270 S.E.2d 377 (1980).

Exclusion of Reasonable Hypothesis

In general. — When the state relies for a conviction on circumstantial evidence alone, the proved facts must not only be consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but must exclude every other reasonable hypothesis except that of the guilt of the accused. Amorous v. State, 1 Ga. App. 313, 57 S.E. 999 (1907); Toomer v. State, 130 Ga. 63, 60 S.E. 198 (1908); Carter v. State, 57 Ga. App. 180, 194 S.E. 842 (1938); Blakeley v. State, 78 Ga. App. 226, 180 S.E.2d 289 (1971); Ridley v. State, 232 Ga. 646, 208 S.E.2d 466 (1974); Wright v. State, 147 Ga. App. 111, 248 S.E.2d 183 (1978); Barnett v. State, 153 Ga. If the state relies upon circumstantial evidence, that evidence must be so strong as to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused. It must be inconsistent with the accused's innocence. This court has ruled on several occasions that, in cases involving life or liberty, this rule must not be relaxed. Parks v. State, 202 Ga. 84, 42 S.E.2d 103 (1947).

In a trial for aggravated assault, although there were certain discrepancies in the evidence, and a portion of the evidence was circumstantial rather than direct, the quantum of evidence in the defendant's favor fell far short of that necessary to “demand” a verdict of acquittal; since there was direct evidence pointing to the same conclusion as the circumstantial evidence, the verdict was not disturbed on appeal. Cobb v. State, 195 Ga. App. 429, 393 S.E.2d 723 (1990).

In a prosecution of the offense of terroristic threats, the state’s failure to present evidence excluding a reasonable hypothesis of innocence resulted in a failure of proof in regard to several elements of the crime charged and should have precluded the jury’s return of a verdict of guilty. Cooley v. State, 219 Ga. App. 176, 464 S.E.2d 619 (1995).

Circumstantial evidence is worth nothing if circumstances are reasonably consistent with the hypothesis of innocence as well as the hypothesis of guilt. Johnson v. State, 159 Ga. App. 497, 283 S.E.2d 711 (1981).

“Exclusion of reasonable hypothesis” only applied in cases when evidence was purely circumstantial; hence, the defendant could not benefit from the that legal principle when all the state’s evidence, including the identification evidence, was direct evidence. Morales v. State, 286 Ga. App. 698, 649 S.E.2d 873 (2007).

Term “hypothesis” refers to such reasonable inferences as are ordinarily drawn by men in the light of their experience in everyday life. White v. State, 18 Ga. Reasonableness question for jury. — Whether or not in a given case circumstances are sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save the guilt of the accused is primarily a question for determination by the jury. *Fortson v. Question of whether every other reasonable hypothesis has been excluded is generally a question for the jury. Muckle v. State, 165 Ga. App. 873, 303 S.E.2d 54 (1983); Bird v. State, 178 Ga. App. 687, 344 S.E.2d 468 (1986).

What is a reasonable hypothesis is generally a question for the jury, and there is no yardstick to determine what is a “reasonable” hypothesis save the opinion of the jurors. Jenkins v. State, 201 Ga. App. 395, 411 S.E.2d 122 (1991).

Only reasonable hypotheses need be excluded. — To sustain a conviction, it is not required that the evidence exclude every possibility or every inference that may be drawn from proven facts; it is only necessary to exclude reasonable inferences and reasonable hypotheses which may be drawn from the evidence under all the facts and circumstances surrounding the particular case. Reese v. State, 94 Ga. App. 387, 94 S.E.2d 741 (1956); Bobo v. State, 100 Ga. App. 643, 112 S.E.2d 205 (1959); Samsell v. State, 222 Ga. 235, 149 S.E.2d 367 (1966); Alexander v. State, 223 Ga. 34, 153 S.E.2d 431 (1967); Townsend v. State, 115 Ga. App. 428, 258 S.E.2d 212 (1979); Baldwin v. State, 153 Ga. App. 35, 264 S.E.2d 528 (1980); Thompson v. State, 154 Ga. App. 704, 269 S.E.2d 474 (1980); Brewer v. State, 156 Ga. App. 468, 274 S.E.2d 817 (1980); Strickland v. State, 156 Ga. App. 475, 274 S.E.2d 823 (1980); Perry v. State, 158 Ga. App. 349, 280 S.E.2d 390 (1981); Slack v. State, 159 Ga. App. 185, 283 S.E.2d 64 (1981); In re J.P., 160 Ga. App. 896, 288 S.E.2d 607 (1982).

Rule as to the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence to support a conviction is that the evidence exclude every reasonable hypothesis except that of guilt, not that it remove every possibility of the innocence of the defendant. Barfield v. State, 160 Ga. App. 228, 286 S.E.2d 516 (1981).

To sustain the judgment of conviction, the evidence need not exclude every inference or hypothesis except guilt of the accused, but only reasonable inferences and hypotheses so as to justify the inference, beyond reasonable doubt, of guilt. Chambless v. State, 165 Ga. App. 194, 300 S.E.2d 201 (1983); Hulsey v. State, 210 Ga. App. 251, 435 S.E.2d 713 (1993).

Conviction based solely upon circumstantial evidence must be supported by facts which not only are consistent with guilt of the accused, but should exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused. This does not mean that the state must exclude every possible hypothesis showing innocence, but any reasonable hypothesis showing innocence. Robinson v. State, 168 Ga. App. 569, 309 S.E.2d 845 (1983).

Circumstantial evidence must include only reasonable hypothesis; it need not exclude every inference or hypothesis except that of the defendant's guilt. Smith v. State, 257 Ga. 381, 359 S.E.2d 662 (1987).

When a conviction is based on circumstantial evidence, although the circumstantial evidence must exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save the defendant's guilt, it need not exclude every inference or hypothesis. Mason v. State, 199 Ga. App. 691, 405 S.E.2d 747 (1991).

When the evidence connecting a defendant to the charged crime is circumstantial, to warrant a conviction the proved facts shall not only be consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but shall exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused. Dean v. State, 203 Ga. App. 836, 418 S.E.2d 117 (1992).

Beyond the witnesses' identification of a juvenile's hairstyle and clothing as those worn by one of the burglars, and beyond the burglars' going to the juvenile's home to escape, the juvenile's possession of the stolen items soon after the burglary was sufficient to uphold the court's adjudication of delinquency on that charge; furthermore, any reasonable hypothesis of innocence was undermined by the identification of the juvenile's hairstyle and clothes and by the identification of the juvenile's residence as the place to which the burglars escaped. In the Interest of A.D., 282 Ga. App. 586, 639 S.E.2d 556 (2006).

Evidence supporting two theories. — When the circumstantial evidence supports more than one theory, one consistent with guilt and another with innocence, it does not exclude every other reasonable hypothesis except guilt and is not sufficient to prove the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Carr v. State, 119 Ga. App. 540, 167 S.E.2d 707 (1969); Roberson v. State, 145 Ga. App. 687, 244 S.E.2d 629 (1978); Kreager v. State, 148 Ga. App. 548, 252 S.E.2d 1 (1978); Johnson v. State, 159 Ga. App. 497, 283 S.E.2d 711 (1981).

When evidence failed to establish whether the defendant first took property and then killed the victim and ransacked the house, or first killed the victim and then took the property and ransacked the house, the evidence was insufficient to meet the standard of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 and, moreover, was insufficient for a rational trier of fact to have found the defendant guilty of armed robbery beyond a reasonable doubt. Miles v. State, 261 Ga. 232, 403 S.E.2d 794 (1991).

Consideration of defendant's explanation. — In making a determination of whether any other reasonable hypothesis exists, the defendant's explanation must be taken into consideration insofar as it is consistent with the circumstantial evidence properly admitted. Elam v. State, 125 Ga. App. 427, 187 S.E.2d 920 (1972); Townsend v. State, 127 Ga. App. 797, 195 S.E.2d 474 (1972); Wright v. State, 147 Ga. App. 111, 248 S.E.2d 183 (1978); Jackson v. State, 152 Ga. App. 441, 263 S.E.2d 181 (1979); Barnett v. State, 153 Ga. App. 430, 265 S.E.2d 348 (1980); Bogan v. State, 158 Ga. App. 1, 279 S.E.2d 229 (1981); Ragan v. State, 250 Ga. App. 89, 550 S.E.2d 476 (2001).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions on four counts of aggravated battery and one count of cruelty to children in the first degree after the 17-month-old daughter of a girlfriend was found with hot-water immersion burns incurred while defendant was watching the daughter for the girlfriend; the jury was free to reject the explanation that defendant had no criminal intent at the time the burns were incurred and that defendant maliciously and intentionally immersed the baby in hot water after the baby soiled a diaper, especially since defendant's explanations were not consistent with the evidence. Lee v. State, 275 Ga. App. 93, 619 S.E.2d 767 (2005).

Because sufficient evidence was presented to support a finding that the defendant was intoxicated to the level that the intoxication caused both the defendant's loss of consciousness and an accident resulting in the defendant's truck straddling a ditch with the truck's nose down at close to a 90-degree angle, and the responding deputies testified that the defendant appeared to be under the influence of alcohol to the extent that it was less safe to drive, the defendant's conviction for violating O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(a)(1) was supported by sufficient direct evidence of guilt; moreover, based on the evidence, the trial court could reasonably reject as unreasonable the hypothesis that the defendant became intoxicated after the accident occurred. Stewart v. State, 288 Ga. App. 735, 655 S.E.2d 328 (2007).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's convictions on one count of simple assault and two counts of battery, which arose from a fight with a romantic friend, as it was within the jury's province to consider defendant's self-defense theory and reject the defense; jury heard witnesses and observed testimony and was more capable of determining reasonableness of the hypothesis produced by evidence or lack of evidence than appellate court. Thompson v. State, 291 Ga. App. 355, 662 S.E.2d 135 (2008).

Evidence raising an inference of a defendant's innocence improperly excluded. — During a trial for felony murder while in the commission of cruelty to a child arising from the death of a defendant's child from brain trauma sustained while the child was in the defendant's care, the defendant was improperly prevented from cross-examining a person who was in the apartment at the time about the person's history of inappropriate behavior toward the person's own child, including allegations of child abuse, because it was a crucial element of the defense that the person was a likely suspect, and, under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, the circumstantial evidence did not exclude the reasonable hypothesis that the person was the likely culprit; the defendant's conviction required reversal because it was not highly probable that the jury's verdict would have been different if the evidence had been admitted, and the error therefore could not be considered harmless. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. 373, 637 S.E.2d 652 (2006).

Error to charge guilt in less reasonable explanation. — Charge given by trial court in theft case that the jury could have inferred guilt unless there was from the evidence a reasonable explanation of possession consistent with a plea of innocence was not a sufficient restatement of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. The jury was not adequately instructed that the state's circumstantial evidence of guilt should "exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused." McChargue v. State, 209 Ga. App. 612, 434 S.E.2d 153 (1993).

Proof to moral certainty. — It is not necessary to show that it was impossible for the offense to have been committed by anybody else or that it might not, by bare possibility, have been done by another; it is sufficient to show to a moral certainty that it was the defendant. Johnson v. State, 126 Ga. App. 93, 189 S.E.2d 900 (1972); Neal v. State, 130 Ga. App. 708, 204 S.E.2d 451 (1974); Harris v. State, 236 Ga. 766, 225 S.E.2d 263 (1976); Van Voltenburg v. State, 138 Ga. App. 628, 227 S.E.2d 451 (1976); Castleberry v. State, 152 Ga. App. 769, 264 S.E.2d 239 (1979); Strickland v. State, 156 Ga. App. 475, 274 S.E.2d 823 (1980).

O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 does not mean that the act might by bare possibility have been done by somebody else, but that the state should show to a moral certainty that it was the defendant's act. McGee v. State, 159 Ga. App. 763, 285 S.E.2d 224 (1981).

Burden on state. — Defendant does not have the obligation to offer a theory consistent with innocence. Rather, the state has the burden of proving guilt. Howard v. State, 148 Ga. App. 598, 251 S.E.2d 829 (1979).

Burden under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to present evidence excluding every other reasonable hypothesis save that of guilt, is upon the state. Cornish v. State, 187 Ga. App. 140, 369 S.E.2d 515 (1988).

Hypothesis considered by jury. — Questions as to the reasonableness of hypothesis are generally to be decided by the jury and when the jury finds that the evidence, though circumstantial, was sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of guilt, that finding will not be disturbed unless the verdict of guilty is insupportable as a matter of law. Robbins v. State, 269 Ga. 500, 499 S.E.2d 323 (1998); Callahan v. State, 249 Ga. App. 108, 547 S.E.2d 741 (2001).

Evidence did not exclude very reasonable hypothesis. — Circumstantial evidence was insufficient for adjudication as a delinquent for acts that would have constituted cocaine possession if committed by an adult because the circumstantial evidence of defendant's spatial proximity to cocaine found in a car's console and the fact that the defendant did not live near the parking lot where the car was parked did not exclude every reasonable hypothesis other than constructive possession. In re J.S., No. A10A0654, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 399 (Apr. 16, 2010).

Instructions

Abstract principles for jury. — In trying a case depending upon circumstantial evidence, very few abstract principles should be given to the jury. Dacus v. State, 56 Ga. App. 439, 193 S.E. 93 (1937).

Request to charge not waived when request not in writing. — As the defendant's request to charge the jury on circumstantial evidence as set forth in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 directed the trial court to the language in the pattern jury instructions that defendant wished to have the trial court use, and the trial court recognized what was requested, the defendant's request to charge the principle stated in § 24-4-6 was not waived by the failure to properly submit the request in writing under Ga. Unif. Super. Ct. R. 10.3. Davis v. State, 285 Ga. 176, 674 S.E.2d 879 (2009).

When charge required. — When the conviction depends entirely upon circumstantial evidence, the court's failure to charge the law pertaining to circumstantial evidence is reversible error, even in the absence of a timely written request. Harris v. State, 18 Ga. App. 710, 90 S.E. 370 (1916); Coggin v. State, 41 Ga. App. 659, 154 S.E. 376 (1930); Towler v. State, 44 Ga. App. 262, 161 S.E. 164 (1931); *Cofer v. Charge on circumstantial evidence must be given when the defendant has made a timely written request therefor. Hancock v. State, 158 Ga. App. 829, 282 S.E.2d 401 (1981); Dunaway v. State, 214 Ga. App. 128, 447 S.E.2d 153 (1994).

If the state's case depends, in whole or in part, on circumstantial evidence, a charge on the law of circumstantial evidence must be given on request whether or not the jury is authorized to find that the direct evidence presented by witness testimony has been impeached. Gidden v. State, 205 Ga. App. 245, 422 S.E.2d 30, cert. denied, 205 Ga. App. 900, 422 S.E.2d 30 (1992).

When the state's case depends, in whole or in part, on circumstantial evidence, a charge on the law of circumstantial evidence must be given on request. Postell v. State, 261 Ga. 842, 412 S.E.2d 831 (1992).

When the case against the defendant is close or doubtful and is composed solely of circumstantial evidence, it is reversible error for a trial court to fail to charge O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 even absent a request. Jenkins v. State, 209 Ga. App. 19, 432 S.E.2d 270 (1993).

Since no drugs were found in the defendant's actual possession, the case was dependent on circumstantial evidence and it was error to refuse to so charge upon written request. Lowe v. State, 208 Ga. App. 49, 430 S.E.2d 169 (1993), overruled on other grounds, Kelly v. State, 212 Ga. App. 278, 442 S.E.2d 462 (1994).

Instruction required in DUI conviction. — In a prosecution for driving under the influence of alcohol, defendant was entitled to defendant's requested instruction on circumstantial evidence based on a reasonable hypothesis from defendant's use of Benadryl that the defendant was not guilty of the crime charged. Cato v. State, 212 Ga. App. 417, 441 S.E.2d 900 (1994).

It is error to fail to charge the substance of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 when the circumstances from which a guilty intent can be inferred are consistent with an innocent intention or an intention different from that charged against the accused. Hathcock v. State, 214 Ga. App. 188, 447 S.E.2d 104 (1994).

In a prosecution for driving under the influence of alcohol, evidence upon which an officer based the officer's opinion that defendant was impaired and a less safe driver was circumstantial, and the failure to give a requested charge on O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was reversible error. Tomko v. State, 233 Ga. App. 20, 503 S.E.2d 300 (1998).

Instruction required in child molestation conviction. — In a prosecution for child molestation, it was reversible error to refuse to give defendant's requested charge on circumstantial evidence, when defendant offered evidence of an intention other than to arouse defendant's or the child's sexual desires and the trial court gave the jury no instructions under which the jury could consider this evidence. Hathcock v. State, 214 Ga. App. 188, 447 S.E.2d 104 (1994).

Two different rules governing when the trial court must instruct the jury on O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 are: (1) the charge must be given absent a request if the case against the defendant is wholly circumstantial; and (2) the charge must be given upon request if the case relies to any degree upon circumstantial evidence. Yarn v. State, 215 Ga. App. 883, 452 S.E.2d 537 (1994), aff'd, 265 Ga. 787, 462 S.E.2d 359 (1995).

Whenever the state introduces circumstantial evidence of the defendant's guilt, it is error not to charge under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 if such has been timely requested; however, it is not error to fail to give such a charge in the absence of a timely request when the state's case depends both upon direct and circumstantial evidence. Stubbs v. State, 215 Ga. App. 873, 452 S.E.2d 571 (1994), rev'd in part on other grounds, 265 Ga. 883, 463 S.E.2d 686 (1995), vacated on other grounds, 219 Ga. App. 871, 467 S.E.2d 612 (1996); Davis v. State, 266 Ga. 801, 471 S.E.2d 191 (1996).

Instruction required in DUI conviction and operating unsafe motor vehicle. — In a prosecution for driving under the influence and driving an unsafe motor vehicle with defective equipment, the state was required to prove defendant was driving the car, proof of which was dependent in part on circumstantial evidence requiring the giving of a charge under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Coates v. State, 216 Ga. App. 93, 453 S.E.2d 35 (1994).

When the state's case is composed solely of circumstantial evidence, a defendant is relieved from the necessity of requesting a charge on O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6; even in the absence of such a request, it may be reversible error to fail to give the instruction. Yarn v. State, 265 Ga. 787, 462 S.E.2d 359 (1995).

Trial court must charge on the law of circumstantial evidence, even absent a request, if the case against the defendant is wholly circumstantial, and if the case relies to any degree upon circumstantial evidence, a charge on circumstantial evidence is required upon written request. Massey v. State, 270 Ga. 76, 508 S.E.2d 149 (1998).

Instruction in kidnapping case not required when direct evidence exists. — Trial court's failure to give a charge under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was not harmful as a matter of law because the state presented direct evidence that the defendant committed the crime of kidnapping. Holden v. State, 287 Ga. App. 472, 651 S.E.2d 552 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 153 (Ga. 2008).

Charge on circumstantial evidence is required, upon request in appropriate cases, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Kelly v. State, 212 Ga. App. 278, 442 S.E.2d 462 (1994).

Only when evidence is wholly circumstantial is substance of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 required to be given in charge, and when there was direct evidence, as well as circumstantial, and when there was no such equality of theories of guilt or innocence as to require such charge it was not error to refuse charge as requested by defendant. Bearden v. State, 163 Ga. App. 434, 294 S.E.2d 667 (1982).

Only when the case is wholly dependent on circumstantial evidence is a charge on circumstantial evidence required. Galloway v. State, 165 Ga. App. 536, 301 S.E.2d 894 (1983).

Jury charge under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, though requested by a defendant, is required only when the evidence relied on for conviction is entirely circumstantial. Griffith v. State, 172 Ga. App. 255, 322 S.E.2d 921

(1984); Todd v. State, 184 Ga. App. 750, 362 S.E.2d 400 (1987).

Instruction not required in DUI trial. — When the defendant was charged with driving under the influence with a blood alcohol percentage of .10, the evidence introduced by the state in support of this charge, the results from the breath test, was characterized as direct evidence, not circumstantial evidence, and the trial court did not err in refusing to give a circumstantial evidence instruction. Cawthon v. State, 235 Ga. App. 791, 510 S.E.2d 586 (1998).

Charge required if possession of stolen goods is only evidence of burglary. — In a burglary prosecution, if the only evidence tending to connect the accused with the alleged offense is the accused's unsatisfactorily explained possession of recently stolen goods, it is error for the trial court to fail to give, with or without request, a charge on the principle contained in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Price v. State, 180 Ga. App. 215, 348 S.E.2d 740 (1986).

When charge not required. — Unless the evidence relied upon for conviction is entirely circumstantial, it is not error to fail to charge the law of circumstantial evidence in the absence of a request to do so. Wilson v. State, 152 Ga. 337, 110 S.E. 8 (1921); Chamblee v. State, 50 Ga. App. 251, 177 S.E. 824 (1934); Roberts v. State, 50 Ga. App. 307, 177 S.E. 825 (1934); Wyatt v. State, 50 Ga. App. 266, 177 S.E. 840 (1934); Summers v. State, 63 Ga. App. 445, 11 S.E.2d 409 (1940); Hall v. State, 66 Ga. App. 655, 19 S.E.2d 40 (1942); Allen v. State, 194 Ga. 430, 22 S.E.2d 65 (1942); Miller v. State, 69 Ga. App. 847, 26 S.E.2d 851 (1943); Newsome v. State, 69 Ga. App. 445, 26 S.E.2d 113 (1943); *Daniels v. Ct. 350, 148 L. Ed. 2d 282 (2000).

Refusal to give a requested instruction on O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 is not error except when the case is totally dependent upon circumstantial evidence. Heath v. State, 186 Ga. App. 655, 368 S.E.2d 346 (1988); Lewis v. State, 198 Ga. App. 808, 403 S.E.2d 233, cert. denied, 198 Ga. App. 898, 403 S.E.2d 233 (1991).

When there is some direct evidence against the defendant, it is not error to fail to charge on circumstantial evidence. Terrell v. State, 258 Ga. 722, 373 S.E.2d 751 (1988).

Trial court did not err in refusing to give defendant's requested instruction on circumstantial evidence since the evidence in the case was not entirely circumstantial. Ebenezer v. State, 191 Ga. App. 901, 383 S.E.2d 373 (1989); Rainey v. State, 216 Ga. App. 557, 455 S.E.2d 73 (1995), aff'd, 266 Ga. 163, 465 S.E.2d 447 (1996); Carter v. State, 240 Ga. App. 203, 523 S.E.2d 47 (1999).

Trial court did not err by failing to instruct the jury on circumstantial evidence since direct evidence of guilt obviated the requirement of such a charge. Baines v. State, 201 Ga. App. 354, 411 S.E.2d 95 (1991).

In a case involving both direct and circumstantial evidence, it was not reversible error for the trial court to fail to give a charge on circumstantial evidence as contained in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, nor to fail to instruct the jury that a conviction based on circumstantial evidence is permissible only if the offense charged was proved beyond a reasonable doubt and to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis. This type of instruction is required only when the case is totally dependent upon circumstantial evidence. Williams v. State, 199 Ga. App. 566, 405 S.E.2d 716 (1991).

Trial court did not err in failing to give a charge on circumstantial evidence, since the requested charge was not adjusted to the principles involved in the case since a charge on how the jury should treat a defendant's testimony in the context of a circumstantial evidence case was included but defendant did not testify. Minor v. State, 264 Ga. 195, 442 S.E.2d 754 (1994).

Failure to charge on O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 is not reversible error when the case is not close or doubtful, the charge on reasonable doubt is full and fair, and no other reasonable hypothesis save that of guilt was offered. Cato v. State, 212 Ga. App. 417, 441 S.E.2d 900 (1994).

Even if the victims were impeached, a charge on circumstantial evidence was not warranted because there was no other evidence authorizing a verdict of guilty. Miller v. State, 212 Ga. App. 193, 441 S.E.2d 443 (1994).

In a prosecution for trafficking in cocaine involving direct and circumstantial evidence, in the absence of any evidence evincing a plausible explanation or reasonable hypothesis of innocence and, particularly in the context of the entire charge in the case, the omission of a charge reciting the principle in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was not reversible error. Roura v. State, 214 Ga. App. 43, 447 S.E.2d 52 (1994).

Because there was some direct evidence of defendant's guilt and no request was made for a charge on circumstantial evidence, the trial court's failure to give an instruction in the language of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was not error. Brooks v. State, 265 Ga. 548, 458 S.E.2d 349 (1995).

When the state's case includes both direct and circumstantial evidence, a defendant is not relieved from the necessity of requesting the charge and, in the absence of such a request, it is not error to fail to give the charge. Yarn v. State, 265 Ga. 787, 462 S.E.2d 359 (1995).

Failure to give a requested circumstantial evidence charge was not error because the evidence was consistent only with defendant's guilt as to the acts alleged in the indictment and was completely inconsistent with a reasonable hypothesis of innocence. Carroll v. State, 224 Ga. App. 543, 481 S.E.2d 562 (1997).

Defendant must request a circumstantial evidence charge within a similar transaction charge since the case against the defendant is not wholly circumstantial. Johnson v. State, 236 Ga. App. 252, 511 S.E.2d 603 (1999), aff'd, 272 Ga. 254, 526 S.E.2d 549 (2000).

In a prosecution for child molestation, a charge under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was not appropriate since the evidence directly contradicted defendant's contention that inadvertent contact was made with the victim's leg or thigh as a result of a trip and fall. Turner v. State, 245 Ga. App. 294, 536 S.E.2d 814 (2000), overruled on other grounds, Miller v. State, 285 Ga. 285, 676 S.E.2d 173 (2009).

Since there was no request to charge on the circumstantial evidence rule, the charge was needed only if the state's case was based wholly on circumstantial evidence, and no such charge was needed when defendant's cousin testified that the cousin saw defendant rob a store; that was direct evidence, not circumstantial. Moore v. State, 268 Ga. App. 398, 601 S.E.2d 854 (2004).

Defense counsel was not ineffective in violation of Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XIV, for failing to request a charge on circumstantial evidence based on O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, which imposed certain requirements for convictions based on circumstantial evidence; the trial court adequately charged the jury on reasonable doubt, and direct evidence for both offenses was presented. Guillen v. State, 275 Ga. App. 316, 620 S.E.2d 518 (2005).

Because the defendant did not request a charge under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, the trial court did not commit reversible error in failing to give the charge. Barrino v. State, 282 Ga. App. 496, 639 S.E.2d 489 (2006).

Prosecution against the defendant on charges of burglary, theft by taking, and criminal trespass included both direct and circumstantial evidence, and convictions on those charges were not subject to being reversed merely because the trial court failed to charge O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 as the defendant failed to request that charge. Rodriguez v. State, 283 Ga. App. 752, 642 S.E.2d 705 (2007).

Because the defendant made an oral request that the jury be charged on the law under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, but did not make a written request for that charge, the trial court did not err in failing to charge the jury as the defendant requested. Attaway v. State, 284 Ga. App. 855, 644 S.E.2d 919 (2007).

When the evidence at trial consisted of both direct and circumstantial evidence, the defendant did not request in writing a charge regarding O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, and defense counsel stated that the trial court's proposed charges were sufficient, it was not error not to give a charge based on § 24-4-6. Moore v. State, 286 Ga. App. 313, 649 S.E.2d 337 (2007).

Because the evidence rested largely on the direct evidence provided by the eyewitnesses to the event, and there was no reasonable likelihood that had the circumstantial evidence charge been given to the jury the outcome of the trial would have differed, the defendant's trial counsel could not be found ineffective in failing to request the instruction. Holden v. State, 287 Ga. App. 472, 651 S.E.2d 552 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 153 (Ga. 2008).

Because the testimony from the medical examiner amounted to direct, and not circumstantial, evidence that: (1) the accident the defendant was charged with causing caused the decedent's death; (2) either the defendant's or the other impact caused the blunt force trauma to the decedent's head; and (3) any of the impacts, alone, could have caused the trauma, the defendant's requested circumstantial evidence charge was properly denied by the trial court. Kirk v. State, 289 Ga. App. 125, 656 S.E.2d 251 (2008).

In a defendant's prosecution for, inter alia, felony murder, the trial court did not err by failing to instruct the jury on the law of circumstantial evidence as set forth in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 because both direct and circumstantial evidence were presented by the state and the defendant failed to request a circumstantial evidence instruction. Sumlin v. State, 283 Ga. 264, 658 S.E.2d 596 (2008).

In convictions of aggravated sodomy, kidnapping, burglary, and aggravated assault, a trial court did not err in failing to sua sponte instruct the jury about circumstantial evidence because the victims provided direct evidence of defendant's guilt. Fortune v. State, 300 Ga. App. 550, 685 S.E.2d 466 (2009).

Trial court did not err in failing to charge

the jury on circumstantial evidence because nothing of record showed that the defendant requested such a charge; nevertheless, the record showed that the trial court properly charged the jury sua sponte on circumstantial evidence, and when trial counsel was asked if counsel objected to the jury charge as given counsel indicated that counsel did not, which resulted in waiver on appeal. Jackson v. State, No. A10A0501, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 325 (Mar. 25, 2010).

Charge not required when guilt is the only reasonable hypothesis. — Even in a case which is wholly dependent on circumstantial evidence, if from the proved facts only one reasonable hypothesis presents itself, i.e., that the defendant is guilty of the offense charged, then a failure to charge O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 does not furnish cause for a new trial. Hawes v. State, 240 Ga. 327, 240 S.E.2d 833 (1977). But see Stewart v. State, 232 Ga. App. 565, 502 S.E.2d 502 (1998).

Better practice to charge statute on circumstantial evidence when the evidence upon which the state depends for conviction is both direct and circumstantial. Loomis v. State, 78 Ga. App. 153, 51 S.E.2d 13 (1948); Jackson v. State, 92 Ga. App. 774, 90 S.E.2d 29 (1955); Ramsey v. State, 212 Ga. 381, 92 S.E.2d 866 (1956); Holton v. State, 192 Ga. App. 745, 386 S.E.2d 404 (1989) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6).

Circumstantial evidence charge should have been given. — When state introduced circumstantial as well as direct evidence in the state's case against defendant, defendant was entitled to have defendant's requested charge on circumstantial evidence given to the jury. Mims v. State, 264 Ga. 271, 443 S.E.2d 845 (1994).

A trial court's failure to give the circumstantial evidence charge under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 constituted reversible error, even though the defendant failed to request such a charge, because the evidence against the defendant in a cocaine trafficking case under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(a)(1) was entirely circumstantial based on the defendant's participation in the crime with the defendant's sibling and a third party. Martinez v. State, No. A09A1955, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 278 (Mar. 24, 2010).

Charging precise language of statute unnecessary. — Failure of the court to charge the law of circumstantial evidence in the exact language of the statute is not error. Sellers v. State, 36 Ga. App. 653, 137 S.E. 912 (1927); Thompson v. State, 166 Ga. 512, 143 S.E. 896 (1928); Brent v. State, 44 Ga. App. 777, 163 S.E. 319 (1932); Pound v. State, 180 Ga. 83, 178 S.E. 291 (1935); Rowland v. State, 51 Ga. App. 54, 179 S.E. 585 (1935); Sanders v. State, 71 Ga. App. 334, 30 S.E.2d 810 (1944); Townsend v. State, 86 Ga. App. 459, 71 S.E.2d 738 (1952); Roman v. State, 155 Ga. App. 355, 271 S.E.2d 21 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6).

Trial court need not track the exact language of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 in order to satisfy the requirement that the jury be instructed on the principle of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence to warrant a conviction. Price v. State, 180 Ga. App. 215, 348 S.E.2d 740 (1986).

Trial court was not required to give the exact language of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 in the court's charge to the jury. Richards v. State, 189 Ga. App. 146, 375 S.E.2d 278 (1988).

Charge on circumstantial evidence which added the word "alone" to the statutory phrase "to warrant a conviction on circumstantial evidence," was the functional equivalent of the statutory language because the trial court did not have to track the exact language in order to properly instruct the jury on the principle contained therein. Lowe v. State, 267 Ga. 180, 476 S.E.2d 583 (1996); Wynn v. State, 236 Ga. App. 98, 511 S.E.2d 201 (1999); Morris v. State, 239 Ga. App. 100, 520 S.E.2d 485 (1999).

When a circumstantial evidence charge given to the jury added the word "alone" to the phrase "to warrant a conviction on circumstantial evidence," it was the functional equivalent of the rule contained in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 and was not error. Martin v. State, 235 Ga. App. 844, 510 S.E.2d 602 (1998).

Trial court did not err in giving a circumstantial evidence charge that was the functional equivalent of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 since the trial court added the word "alone" twice, substituted the word "theory" for "hypothesis," and amplified upon the statutory language. Johnson v. State, 251 Ga. App. 455, 554 S.E.2d 587 (2001).

Failure to track statute's language held to be error. — Even though the trial court instructed the jury on the definitions of direct and circumstantial evidence and the difference between them, its refusal to give defendant's requested charge tracking the language of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was reversible error. Waits v. State, 232 Ga. App. 357, 501 S.E.2d 870 (1998).

Charge using the statutory language satisfied the requirement that, where the state's case depends, in whole or in part, on circumstantial evidence, a charge on the law of circumstantial evidence must be given on request. Wiley v. State, 238 Ga. App. 334, 519 S.E.2d 10 (1999).

When the defendant makes incriminatory statements after the victim's death, the case is not one depending entirely upon circumstantial evidence. Stewart v. State, 163 Ga. App. 735, 295 S.E.2d 112 (1982); Yarborough v. State, 183 Ga. App. 198, 358 S.E.2d 484 (1987).

Instruction defining circumstantial evidence and its weight approved. — Following instruction is entirely consistent with O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6: "Circumstantial evidence is the proof of facts or circumstances by direct evidence from which you may infer other related or connected facts which are reasonable and justified in the light of your experience. Circumstantial evidence alone will not justify a finding of guilt unless the circumstances are entirely consistent with the defendant's guilt, wholly inconsistent with any reasonable theory of the defendant's innocence, and are so convincing as to exclude a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt." Carpenter v. State, 167 Ga. App. 634, 307 S.E.2d 19 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 79, 310 S.E.2d 912 (1984).

Court's instruction was proper which instructed the jury concerning the differences between direct and circumstantial evidence and charged that the comparative weight of circumstantial evidence and direct evidence on any given issue is a question of fact for the jury to decide. Grier v. State, 217 Ga. App. 409, 458 S.E.2d 139 (1995).

Defendant's request that the court give a "two theories" charge did not constitute a request for a charge on circumstantial evidence. Grier v. State, 217 Ga. App. 409, 458 S.E.2d 139 (1995).

Charge language describing two equal theories. — Charge language describing two equal theories, one of guilt and the other of innocence, did not accurately state the principle addressed. The charge related to the weight of the evidence and therefore was not an accurate statement of the "two theories" principle. Langston v. State, 208 Ga. App. 175, 430 S.E.2d 365 (1993); Blue v. State, 212 Ga. App. 847, 433 S.E.2d 635 (1994).

Defendant was not entitled to an instruction that, when the facts, evidence and all reasonable deductions therefrom present two reasonable theories, one of guilt and the other consistent with innocence, the justice and humanity of the law compels acceptance of the theory which is consistent with innocence; the requested charge was not substantially equivalent to the principle set forth in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Jones v. State, 213 Ga. App. 11, 444 S.E.2d 89 (1994).

When the trial court properly charged the jury on the law of circumstantial evidence, the presumption of innocence and the need to prove the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, it was not error to refuse to give the "two theories" charge. Stephens v. State, 214 Ga. App. 183, 447 S.E.2d 26 (1994).

It is never error to refuse to give a requested "two equal theories" charge when a trial court properly instructs the jury on circumstantial evidence. Smith v. State, 264 Ga. 857, 452 S.E.2d 494 (1995); Mitchell v. State, 233 Ga. App. 92, 503 S.E.2d 293 (1998).

Failure to charge circumstantial evidence harmless error since the case is not close or doubtful and the charge on reasonable doubt is full and fair. Germany v. State, 235 Ga. 836, 221 S.E.2d 817 (1976); Hawes v. State, 240 Ga. 327, 240 S.E.2d 833 (1977). But see Stewart v. State, 232 Ga. App. 565, 502 S.E.2d 502 (1998); Playmate Cinema, Inc. v. State, 154 Ga. App. 871, 269 S.E.2d 883 (1980); Hinton v. State, 215 Ga. App. 750, 452 S.E.2d 519 (1994); Livery v. State, 233 Ga. App. 882, 506 S.E.2d 165 (1998); Burks v. State, 246 Ga. App. 22, 538 S.E.2d 769 (2000).

Trial court's failure to instruct a jury on the burden of proof required to convict defendant of armed robbery with circumstantial evidence was harmless error given the overwhelming direct evidence of defendant's guilt, which included a videotape of the robbery, defendant's parent's identification of defendant as the person on the videotape with a gun, and defendant's accomplice's confession and implication of defendant in the crime. Bradwell v. State, 262 Ga. App. 651, 586 S.E.2d 355 (2003).

Although the state's case against the defendant was based on both direct and circumstantial evidence, the trial court's failure to give the requested jury charge on circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was harmless error given the overwhelming evidence of guilt. Gregory v. State, 277 Ga. App. 664, 627 S.E.2d 79 (2006).

With regard to defendant's malice murder conviction, the trial court did not err by refusing to give defendant's requested jury instruction in the language of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, which provides that a conviction based on circumstantial evidence can be affirmed only if every reasonable hypothesis other than guilt is excluded, as defendant's admission to having shot the victim, but claiming self-defense, removed the case from that rule. Even assuming that the state introduced circumstantial evidence to establish some item of proof, and that defendant's requested charge should have been given, any error was harmless in light of the overwhelming evidence of guilt. Thompson v. State, 283 Ga. 581, 662 S.E.2d 124 (2008).

Failure to charge reversible error. — Failure to give the defendant's requested charge, which tracked O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, and instructed the jury that, to warrant a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the facts must exclude every reasonable theory other than guilt of the accused, was reversible error in a driving under the influence case, since the officer's opinion that the defendant was impaired was based on circumstantial evidence. Taylor v. State, 278 Ga. App. 181, 628 S.E.2d 611 (2006).

As the defendant's request to charge directed the trial court to the language in the pattern jury instructions on circumstantial evidence, which was a proper statement of the law as set forth in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, the case largely depended on circumstantial evidence, and evidence of the defendant's guilt was not overwhelming, the failure to give the requested instruction was reversible error. Davis v. State, 285 Ga. 176, 674 S.E.2d 879 (2009).

Defendant's conviction for serving alcohol to a minor, under O.C.G.A. § 3-3-23(a)(1), was reversed because: (1) the state relied on circumstantial evidence to show that defendant knowingly served alcohol to a minor; and (2) the trial court erroneously refused defendant's request for an instruction on circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Butler v. State, 298 Ga. App. 129, 679 S.E.2d 361 (2009).

Effect of jury discrediting direct evidence.

— When the only direct evidence comes from a witness who the jury was authorized to find had been impeached, and the trial court properly instructed the jury on the law of impeachment, it is error requiring the grant of a new trial for the trial court to fail to instruct the jury on the law of circumstantial evidence. Horne v. State, 93 Ga. App. 345, 91 S.E.2d 824 (1956); Gibson v. State, 150 Ga. App. 718, 258 S.E.2d 537 (1979).

It was not erroneous for the court, in the absence of a timely and appropriate request, to omit to charge the law of circumstantial evidence to be applied in the event the jury should not believe that the confession which had been introduced into evidence had been made. Ellis v. State, 51 Ga. App. 557, 181 S.E. 87 (1935).

Elaboration unnecessary. — When the judge sufficiently covered the provisions of this statute in the judge's charge to the jury, refusal of a request to elaborate upon this statute was not error. Reynolds v. State, 170 Ga. 810, 154 S.E. 229 (1930); Dacus v. State, 56 Ga. App. 439, 193 S.E. 93 (1937); Flynn v. State, 77 Ga. App. 791, 50 S.E.2d 91 (1948) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6).

Extraneous charge concerning circumstantial evidence. — Charge relating to circumstantial evidence, if erroneous because of contention that only direct evidence was introduced, was not injurious to the accused, as it gave a rule more favorable than the accused could claim. Latimer v. State, 188 Ga. 775, 4 S.E.2d 631 (1939).

Charge invading province of jury. — When in a prosecution for possession of beer for purposes of sale, charge to the jury that frequent presence of quantities of beer was sufficient to meet the circumstantial evidence rule was error in that it constituted an invasion of the province of the jury. Crider v. State, 98 Ga. App. 164, 105 S.E.2d 506 (1958).

Charge containing opinion of court. — When in prosecution for larceny the state's evidence was wholly circumstantial, charge that the state had introduced evidence tending to establish the fact that the defendant was guilty of the charge was clearly, though inadvertently, an intimation of the court's opinion as to what had been proved in the case and constituted reversible error. Rowland v. State, 71 Ga. App. 154, 30 S.E.2d 368 (1944).

Failure to recharge not error. — When the court defined direct and circumstantial evidence and then charged when circumstantial evidence was sufficient to convict after a conviction is sought on circumstantial evidence, an omission to recharge the law of circumstantial evidence in immediate connection with the law of reasonable doubt did not amount to an expression of opinion that direct evidence had been introduced, and did not exclude from the consideration of the jury the law that requires the evidence to be sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused before a conviction would be authorized in a case depending upon circumstantial evidence only. Lucas v. State, 48 Ga. App. 42, 171 S.E. 850 (1933).

Charge using "should" instead of "must", in quoting this statute, does not require a new trial. Adams v. State, 34 Ga. App. 144, 128 S.E. 924 (1925); Poulos v. State, 71 Ga. App. 730, 32 S.E.2d 101 (1944) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6).

Effect of admission. — Rule of this statute should not have been omitted from the instructions to the jury since the state relied wholly on circumstantial evidence and on an admission. Harvey v. State, 111 Ga. App. 279, 141 S.E.2d 604 (1965) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6).

Instruction held not erroneous. — When the trial court charged the jury that "when the facts in evidence and all reasonable deductions therefrom present two theories, one of guilt and the other consistent with innocence, justice and humanity of the law compel the acceptance of the theory that is consistent with innocence," instruction was at least as beneficial to defendant if not more so, than a charge in the exact language of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, and thus was not error. Price v. State, 180 Ga. App. 215, 348 S.E.2d 740 (1986).

In a prosecution for burglary, the trial court did not err in giving an instruction as to recent possession of stolen property after a charge on circumstantial evidence. Martin v. State, 228 Ga. App. 59, 491 S.E.2d 142 (1997).

Direct evidence was presented in the following cases, obviating the need to charge circumstantial evidence. — See Ellis v. State, 51 Ga. App. 557, 181 S.E. 87 (1935) (confession); Gilder v. State, 52 Ga. App. 252, 183 S.E. 95 (1935) (presumption derived from direct evidence); Kittle v. State, 54 Ga. App. 231, 187 S.E. 611 (1936) (confession); Walker v. State, 63 Ga. App. 297, 11 S.E.2d 45 (1940) (confession); Summers v. State, 63 Ga. App. 445, 11 S.E.2d 409 (1940) (testimony that contract never existed); Wilson v. State, 76 Ga. App. 257, 45 S.E.2d 709 (1947) (admission); Lyons v. State, 90 Ga. App. 25, 81 S.E.2d 890 (1954) (statement of guilt); Ryals v. State, 193 Ga. App. 68, 387 S.E.2d 33 (1989) (confession); Brown v. State, 214 Ga. App. 481, 448 S.E.2d 259 (1994) (child molestation).

Instruction not warranted when evidence is not entirely circumstantial. — When a case is not entirely based on circumstantial evidence, a requested charge on circumstantial evidence is not warranted. Fuller v. State, 166 Ga. App. 734, 305 S.E.2d 463 (1983).

When there is direct evidence, the trial court does not err by not also charging that the defendant's explanation must be taken into consideration insofar as it is consistent with the circumstantial evidence properly admitted. Brown v. State, 251 Ga. 598, 308 S.E.2d 182 (1983); Preston v. State, 183 Ga. App. 20, 357 S.E.2d 825, cert. denied, 183 Ga. App. 906, 357 S.E.2d 825 (1987).

When the state's case included both direct and circumstantial evidence and the defendant did not request a charge on circumstantial evidence, the failure of the court to give such a charge was not error. Livery v. State, 233 Ga. App. 882, 506 S.E.2d 165 (1998).

No direct evidence presented in the following cases, hence charge on circumstantial evidence was required. — Turner v. State, 40 Ga. App. 662, 151 S.E. 120 (1929) (possession of stolen goods in burglary or larceny case); Hodges v. State, 52 Ga. App. 378, 183 S.E. 216 (1936) (whiskey on property adjoining defendant's); De Loach v. State, 57 Ga. App. 799, 196 S.E. 924 (1938) (possession of stolen goods in larceny case).

Sufficiency of Circumstantial Evidence

Sufficiency is for jury even though all evidence is circumstantial. — When, at the close of the state's case, all six defendants move for directed verdicts of acquittal, if there is any evidence of guilt, it is for the jury to decide whether that evidence, circumstantial though it may be, is sufficient to warrant a conviction. Castillo v. State, 166 Ga. App. 817, 305 S.E.2d 629 (1983).

Defendant must be connected with criminal act. Newman v. State, 26 Ga. 633 (1859); Griffin v. State, 2 Ga. App. 534, 58 S.E. 781 (1907); Dougherty v. State, 7 Ga. App. 91, 66 S.E. 276 (1909).

Despite defendant's assertion that the evidence against the defendant was completely circumstantial and did not exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of the defendant's guilt, any inconsistencies in the evidence presented were for the jury to resolve, and resolution of such conflicts did not render the evidence insufficient. Sims v. State, 278 Ga. 587, 604 S.E.2d 799 (2004).

Evidence sufficient for DUI conviction. — When evidence of defendant's intoxication may have been circumstantial in nature, but the defense put up no evidence of a reasonable alternative hypothesis, and the arguments that were offered by the defense were rejected by the jury, the evidence was sufficient to find that defendant was intoxicated so as to support a DUI conviction. Green v. State, 244 Ga. App. 565, 536 S.E.2d 240 (2000).

Sufficient circumstantial evidence existed to support the defendant's convictions given that: (1) the defendant admitted to drinking and driving the vehicle that an officer testified to as having a warm engine; (2) the defendant had slurred speech, bloodshot eyes, and swaying movements; and (3) the surrounding circumstances helped to show that the defendant had been drinking and driving recently enough to satisfy the three-hour requirement under O.C.G.A. § 40-6-391(a)(5). O'Connell v. State, 285 Ga. App. 835, 648 S.E.2d 147 (2007).

Defendant's conviction of murder and armed robbery was supported by sufficient evidence; pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, to sustain a conviction based on circumstantial evidence, the evidence had to exclude all reasonable hypotheses other than the defendant's guilt, and there was sufficient evidence from which a rational trier of fact could have excluded all reasonable hypotheses other than defendant's guilt, based on the facts that defendant was the last person in the victim's store on the night of the murder, the victim's blood was found on defendant's shoes, and defendant began spending money heavily after the crime even though the defendant did not have a job at the time. Bibbs v. State, 275 Ga. 659, 571 S.E.2d 770 (2002).

Evidence sufficient for armed robbery conviction. — Although defendant was convicted on circumstantial evidence, the conviction was properly supported by that evidence as the facts that were proven at trial were not only consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but excluded every other reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of defendant since the defendant could not explain the presence of a distinctive boot print on the bathroom floor of the store defendant was accused of burglarizing, the presence of defendant's fingerprints on the bathroom wall seven feet off the ground, or defendant's fingerprints on a drink bottle in a space above the bathroom ceiling where defendant had hidden while defendant waited for the store to close so defendant could commit an armed robbery of the store. Lighten v. State, 259 Ga. App. 280, 576 S.E.2d 658 (2003).

From the defendant's words, demeanor, companionship, and conduct before and after an armed robbery, a jury could have concluded beyond a reasonable doubt that the state established the requisite intent; the evidence authorized the jury to find that before an armed robbery, the defendant had planned to take money from a convenience store, the defendant's accomplice went into the store, took the money from the clerk at gunpoint, and then joined the defendant with the money, and that when the cohorts realized moments later that the police suspected the pair of the armed robbery, the defendant disobeyed police commands to stop, acted as the getaway driver in a high speed chase, and then tried to flee the police on foot. Espinosa v. State, 285 Ga. App. 69, 645 S.E.2d 529 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 760 (Ga. 2007).

Evidence sufficient for assault and rape conviction. — State presented direct evidence of the defendant's assault and rape of the victim in the form of the victim's testimony, and thus O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 did not apply, and the state was not required to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of guilt. Tarver v. State, 280 Ga. App. 89, 633 S.E.2d 415 (2006).

Evidence sufficient for aggravated sexual battery conviction. — Circumstantial evidence that a defendant chastised the defendant's two-year-old child for soiling a diaper by poking the child's anus with a stick, resulting in perineal lacerations, was sufficient to support a conviction for aggravated sexual battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b). Viers v. State, No. A09A2293, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 202 (Mar. 8, 2010).

Evidence sufficient for conviction of sexual exploitation. — Evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of five counts of sexual exploitation of children beyond a reasonable doubt because the evidence was more than sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis that someone other than the defendant possessed a USB drive containing explicit sexual images of children, which was found at a hotel; given the testimony of a forensic computer specialist, coupled with the fact that the defendant possessed several computers, a digital camera, and another USB drive in the defendant's home in Arkansas, a rational trier of fact could find that the defendant inadvertently left the USB drive on the fifth floor of the hotel, and the jury could also conclude that the defendant knowingly possessed material depicting minors engaged in sexually explicit conduct in light of evidence that sexually explicit images of children were saved to the USB drive within seconds of the time two photographs of the defendant were saved to that drive. Hunt v. State, No. A10A0394, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 345 (Mar. 31, 2010).

Evidence sufficient for armed robbery and aggravated assault conviction. — When the testimonies of the victim, a doctor, and other witnesses were a sufficient indication under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 of the severity of the blow to show that a bludgeon device was used as an offensive weapon, there was sufficient competent evidence to find defendant guilty of armed robbery and aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a) and 16-8-41(a). Garrett v. State, 263 Ga. App. 310, 587 S.E.2d 794 (2003).

Ample evidence concerning the child victim's condition and expert testimony regarding the child's condition was presented to authorize the jury to find defendant guilty of committing felony murder by holding the child in scalding water, and guilty of committing cruelty to a child by failing to provide medical attention, and to reject the evidence and hypotheses defendant presented in an attempt to refute the charges. Robles v. State, 277 Ga. 415, 589 S.E.2d 566 (2003).

Despite the defendant's claim of innocence, convictions for armed robbery and two counts of aggravated assault were upheld on appeal, given sufficient evidence showing that the defendant waited at the scene of the robbery and then assisted the codefendants in an attempted escape; hence, the defendant was not entitled to a directed verdict of acquittal and the state was not required to exclude every reasonable hypothesis except guilt as required by O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Jordan v. State, 281 Ga. App. 419, 636 S.E.2d 151 (2006).

Evidence sufficient for kidnapping conviction. — Because the eyewitness testimony showed that the defendant pushed, pulled, and then carried the victim out of a restaurant as the victim yelled for a coworker to call the police, and which was direct, not circumstantial, evidence that the victim did not go with the defendant willingly, sufficient evidence supported the defendant's kidnapping conviction. Holden v. State, 287 Ga. App. 472, 651 S.E.2d 552 (2007), cert. denied, 2008 Ga. LEXIS 153 (Ga. 2008).

Evidence sufficient for shoplifting conviction. — Evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's convictions on three counts of shoplifting following eyewitness testimony that the defendant had concealed cologne bottles under the defendant's shirt at a drugstore and had walked out of a grocery store carrying items that had not been paid for supported two of the counts; also, testimony that video games had been taken from a video store without being purchased, and that the defendant had the games on the defendant's person about 20 minutes after leaving the video store and at the time of the defendant's apprehension for shoplifting at the drug store was sufficient circumstantial evidence to exclude every reasonable hypothesis of the defendant's innocence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Crosby v. State, 287 Ga. App. 109, 650 S.E.2d 775 (2007).

To the extent that a defendant's criminal intent to commit a shoplifting could only be shown by circumstantial evidence, based on the uncontroverted direct evidence that the defendant and the defendant's accomplice took a cart with merchandise into a restricted area, lied about their purpose of being in the area, surveyed various emergency exits from the store defendants were in, abandoned the merchandise when an emergency exit jammed, and lacked any means for paying for the merchandise, no reasonable hypothesis for the defendant's innocence existed that was consistent with the evidence. Alford v. State, 292 Ga. App. 514, 664 S.E.2d 870 (2008).

Evidence sufficient for marijuana conviction. — There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's conviction for possession of more than an ounce of marijuana as although the evidence of the defendant's constructive possession of the marijuana found in a shoebox in the backseat of the car the defendant was operating was circumstantial, it was within the jury's province to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis other than the defendant's guilt. The car owner testified that the owner did not possess the vehicle for over three months and the defendant's passenger testified that the marijuana did not belong to the passenger; thus, the jury was entitled to find that the proved facts excluded the possibility that the car owner left the marijuana on the backseat where the marijuana had gone unnoticed for several months or that the passenger had left the marijuana in the backseat. Prather v. State, 293 Ga. App. 312, 667 S.E.2d 113 (2008).

Evidence sufficient for possession with intent to distribute. — Evidence of a defendant's unusual behavior in lifting up and kneeling next to the only doghouse in a dog pen that concealed contraband, the defendant's attempt to hide in the bushes when law enforcement officers arrived, and the defendant's previous history of selling drugs to passers-by from the same property, provided sufficient evidence from which a rational trier of fact could conclude, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant had knowledge of the presence of the contraband, access to it, and the power and intention to exercise control over it. Price v. State, No. A10A0448, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 377 (Apr. 7, 2010).

Evidence was sufficient to establish the defendant's conviction for possession of marijuana with intent to distribute in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30(j)(1) because during the execution of a search warrant at the defendant's residence, police officers seized eighteen baggies of marijuana individually packaged in a manner that was indicative of possession with intent to distribute, and the residence belonged to the defendant, which permitted an inference that the defendant controlled the premises and was in constructive possession of the drug contraband; the circumstantial evidence implied the defendant's consciousness of guilt and further supported the defendant's conviction because when the officers approached the residence, the defendant fled inside to the closet area where the drugs were later located, and when the officers searched the closet, the officers discovered that the jacket the defendant had been wearing was placed over the box containing the drugs. Williams v. State, No. A09A1854, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 321 (Mar. 29, 2010).

Evidence insufficient to convict defendant of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute. — There was insufficient evidence of intent to convict the defendant of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30 as there was no evidence that the cocaine had been divided and packaged for individual sale or as to a personal use quantity; thus, the circumstantial evidence did not permit a rational trier to exclude the reasonable hypothesis, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, that the defendant intended to use the cocaine. Florence v. State, 282 Ga. App. 31, 637 S.E.2d 779 (2006).

While the evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of possession of cocaine found in a pill bottle in the defendant's vehicle, it was insufficient to prove that the defendant intended to distribute the cocaine under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30(b) because the state produced no evidence that the defendant had scales, cutting implements, weapons, a large amount of cash, a customer list, or drug packaging materials; there was no evidence of prior convictions of drug possession with intent to distribute, no testimony that the defendant was seen selling or trying to sell drugs, no expert testimony that the amount of drugs seized was inconsistent with personal use, and no evidence as to the amount of cocaine seized. Under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, storing drugs in a pill bottle, and possessing an unidentified number of sales-size pieces of the drug, without more, equally supported the hypothesis that the person found with the drugs was a user rather than a dealer. Hicks v. State, 293 Ga. App. 830, 668 S.E.2d 474 (2008).

Evidence insufficient for criminal trespass conviction. — Because all the evidence was circumstantial as a defendant was not seen removing anything from the alleged victim's barn, the defendant's conviction for criminal trespass under O.C.G.A. § 16-7-21 was inappropriate pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 because although the defendant was on the victim's property without permission, it was not proven that the defendant was there for a criminal purpose as the evidence indicated that the defendant was at the barn to drop off a saw that the defendant wanted to sell to the victim. Parker v. State, 297 Ga. App. 384, 677 S.E.2d 345 (2009).

Evidence insufficient for burglary conviction. — Because all the evidence was circumstantial as a defendant was not seen removing anything from the alleged victim's barn, the defendant's conviction for burglary was inappropriate pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 as the evidence did not exclude the reasonable hypothesis that the defendant was only at the victim's barn to drop off a saw the defendant wanted to sell to the victim based on a telephone message left by the defendant for the victim and eyewitness testimony. Parker v. State, 297 Ga. App. 384, 677 S.E.2d 345 (2009).

Conspiracy may be shown by circumstantial evidence. Dixon v. State, 116 Ga. 186, 42 S.E. 357 (1902); McLeroy v. State, 125 Ga. 240, 54 S.E. 125 (1906); Cook v. State, 22 Ga. App. 770, 97 S.E. 264 (1918); Sentell v. State, 227 Ga. 153, 179 S.E.2d 234 (1971).

Corpus delicti may be shown by circumstantial evidence. Hutchings v. State, 4 Ga. App. 451, 61 S.E. 837 (1908); Hurt v. State, 18 Ga. App. 110, 88 S.E. 901 (1916); Wright v. State, 199 Ga. 576, 34 S.E.2d 879 (1945); Hilliard v. State, 92 Ga. App. 294, 88 S.E.2d 425 (1955); Reese v. State, 94 Ga. App. 387, 94 S.E.2d 741 (1956); Brown v. State, 98 Ga. App. 350, 105 S.E.2d 785 (1958); Townsend v. State, 127 Ga. App. 797, 195 S.E.2d 474 (1972).

Fingerprint evidence. — To warrant a conviction based solely on fingerprint evidence, the fingerprints corresponding to those of the defendant must have been found in the place where the crime was committed, and under such circumstances that the fingerprints could only have been impressed at the time when the crime was committed. Jackson v. State, 158 Ga. App. 530, 281 S.E.2d 252 (1981).

Fingerprints of the defendant found on bottles at the crime scene were sufficient to support the defendant's conviction for murder since the condition of the crime scene made it clear that the bottles were left just before the victim's death and the evidence suggested no occasion for the defendant to have left defendant's fingerprints there except during the crime. Leonard v. State, 269 Ga. 867, 506 S.E.2d 853 (1998).

Possession of pistol may be shown by circumstantial evidence. Reese v. State, 3 Ga. App. 532, 60 S.E. 122 (1908); Williams v. State, 12 Ga. App. 84, 76 S.E. 785 (1912).

Burglary conviction. — Sufficient circumstantial evidence of defendant's intent supported defendant's burglary conviction as defendant admitted entering the victim's home, and the victim testified that medications and cash were missing from the victim's home after the incident and that no one else had been in the victim's home from the time that the victim last saw the items until the victim noticed the items missing; the trial court's comments as to defendant's intent referred to the trial court's reason for finding defendant not guilty of burglary with intent to commit rape, and did not go to defendant's burglary with intent to commit theft. Joyner v. State, 267 Ga. App. 309, 599 S.E.2d 286 (2004).

Regarding defendants' convictions for burglary and theft by receiving stolen property, sufficient evidence authorized the jury's decision to reject one defendant's version of events — that defendants believed that the property involved belonged to an accomplice — because, with regard to one of the burglarized residences, the fact that defendants were unsuccessful in taking anything from the home was irrelevant to the burglary convictions since the crime was completed upon entry into the dwelling. As to the second residence, the fact that property from that residence was found in the vehicle in which defendants were in was sufficient to establish that the property had been stolen. Clark v. State, 289 Ga. App. 612, 658 S.E.2d 190 (2008).

Circumstantial evidence supported a defendant's conviction of burglarizing a garden center. On the morning the garden center burglary was discovered, the defendant was caught burglarizing a car dealership two doors down; gloves that fell from the defendant's pocket at the dealership came from the garden center; a shoe print on another glove from the center matched the defendant's boots; an investigator who drove by the area the previous evening testified that neither building showed signs of forced entry at that time; and the defendant stated that the defendant could have committed the garden center burglary but did not remember doing so. Johnson v. State, 291 Ga. App. 253, 661 S.E.2d 642 (2008).

Defendant's burglary conviction in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1 was supported by sufficient evidence because the defendant entered the victim's house without permission and there was circumstantial evidence that the defendant intended to commit a theft therein since there was money in the house before the defendant entered, but the money was gone after the defendant left. Hall v. State, 294 Ga. App. 274, 668 S.E.2d 880 (2008).

Although circumstantial, the evidence was sufficient to support the defendant's conviction of burglary under O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1(a). The victim's stolen computer was discovered in the attic area between the victim's side of a duplex and the defendant's side, and an officer noticed a path in the insulation from the defendant's side to the victim's attic access door. Norful v. State, 296 Ga. App. 387, 674 S.E.2d 633 (2009).

Burglary and aggravated assault. — Defendant's convictions of aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and burglary, O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1, were affirmed as there was sufficient circumstantial evidence under

O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to prove that the defendant was the person who committed the acts in question, based on witness testimony and the discovery of clothes and a gun used in the robbery in the defendant's room. Moore v. State, 277 Ga. App. 474, 627 S.E.2d 107 (2006).

Aggravated battery. — Trial court properly denied a motion for a directed verdict of acquittal pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1(a) since there was ample circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 for the jury to have found that the defendant was guilty of aggravated battery, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a); defendant's claim that the defendant tripped and fell while carrying the infant son was contradicted by expert testimony that the injury to the infant's brain was caused by Shaken Baby Syndrome. Lindo v. State, 278 Ga. App. 228, 628 S.E.2d 665 (2006).

Victim was struck from behind with a beer bottle; the victim's head was cut, requiring stitches. The circumstantial evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant of aggravated assault because: (1) the victim saw the defendant standing close behind the victim after the blow was struck, and defendant began fighting with the victim; (2) similar transaction evidence showed the defendant's history of making unprovoked attacks on unsuspecting victims; and (3) a bartender's testimony that someone else committed the crime was internally inconsistent and uncorroborated. Maiorano v. State, 294 Ga. App. 726, 669 S.E.2d 678 (2008).

Malice murder. — Defendant's conviction for malice murder was affirmed as it could be concluded that the evidence of malice murder, though circumstantial, was sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis, save that of the guilt of the accused since: (1) the defendant was upset with the victim; (2) the defendant got a rifle and carried the rifle into the bedroom; (3) the victim asked the defendant to put the rifle down twice, but the defendant refused; (4) the defendant then shot the victim in the head; and (5) the defendant gave the police three versions of the events and the first two were refuted by a firearms expert and a supervisor in the criminal investigations division. Yeager v. State, 281 Ga. 1, 635 S.E.2d 704 (2006).

Defendant's conviction for felony murder and related charges was upheld on appeal because the evidence showed that the defendant had admitted to killing the defendant's girlfriend and others and the gun used to shoot the victim was the same that the defendant had shot at a party earlier in the evening; the defendant had asked the victim for a ride home from the party and the evidence indicated that defendant shot the victim twice and dumped the body in a wooded area. Lee v. State, 281 Ga. 511, 640 S.E.2d 287 (2007).

Circumstantial evidence was sufficient to support defendant's malice murder conviction of her husband because they had a tumultuous marriage; she was faced that day with explaining her entanglement with the victim's finances; she was in financial difficulty, as she had filed for bankruptcy, and she was the beneficiary of the victim's insurance policies; defendant could not account for 30 minutes of her whereabouts during the relevant time; and defendant's gun, which had recently been used, matched the type used to kill the victim. Merritt v. State, 285 Ga. 778, 683 S.E.2d 855 (2009).

Evidence was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to conclude beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of malice murder because the jury was authorized to find that the defendant met with the victim's husband and other codefendants on at least two occasions to discuss the murder of the victim, that the defendant accepted money from the husband prior to the murder, that the defendant instructed one of the codefendants on how to kill the victim, that the defendant drove to the victim's home with the husband and another codefendant on the morning of the murder, and that the defendant demanded and accepted money from the husband as compensation for the murder. Owens v. State, 286 Ga. 821, (2010).

Possession of stolen goods may authorize conviction. — Fact that stolen goods were in defendant's possession shortly after commission of the burglary would, in and of itself, authorize the jury to infer that defendant was guilty, unless the defendant explained satisfactorily the defendant's possession of such stolen goods. McGee v. State, 159 Ga. App. 763, 285 S.E.2d 224 (1981).

Circumstantial evidence was sufficient to show specific facts in the following cases. —

See Johnson v. State, 119 Ga. 446, 46 S.E. 634 (1904) (specific acts of sexual intercourse); Jordan v. State, 119 Ga. 443, 46 S.E. 679 (1904) (bar to statute of limitations); Little v. State, 3 Ga. App. 441, 60 S.E. 113 (1908) (weapon of assault); Glover v. State, 15 Ga. App. 44, 82 S.E. 602 (1914) (intention); Burke v. State, 183 Ga. 726, 189 S.E. 516 (1937) (identity of defendant); Smith v. State, 154 Ga. App. 497, 268 S.E.2d 714 (1980) (prior similar offense); Baxter v. State, 160 Ga. App. 181, 286 S.E.2d 460 (1981) (similar modus operandi); Shaw v. State, 211 Ga. App. 647, 440 S.E.2d 245 (1994) (burglary); Alford v. State, 224 Ga. App. 451, 480 S.E.2d 893 (1997) (attempted burglary); Gooch v. State, 249 Ga. App. 643, 549 S.E.2d 724 (2001) (possession of methamphetamine); Hill v. State, 276 Ga. 220, 576 S.E.2d 886 (2003) (felony murder, armed robbery, and possession of a firearm).

Robbery. — When a defendant was arrested for one robbery, but connected to three prior robberies by witnesses who identified the mask taken from the defendant's car as being the mask worn in the three prior robberies, and other similarities were shown between the methods used in all of the robberies, there was more than sufficient evidence to convict the defendant. Gamble v. State, 194 Ga. App. 765, 391 S.E.2d 801 (1990).

When the defendant jumped out of defendant's vehicle and began running away upon the approach of officers, narcotics were found in the immediate area of defendant's residence, the defendant was in possession of large amounts of money in small denominations, and no other persons were present in the area, there was more than sufficient evidence to convict the defendant. Jones v. State, 208 Ga. App. 559, 430 S.E.2d 877 (1993).

Even though the evidence that defendant forcibly entered the elderly victims' home, attacked and robbed the victims, inflicted fatal injuries, then later sold or attempted to sell items stolen from the victims, along with similar transaction evidence that defendant was involved in a pattern of conduct of forcing defendant's way into the homes of elderly victims, attacking the victims, and then stealing items from them to trade for crack cocaine, was largely circumstantial, the largely circumstantial evidence was sufficient for the jury to exclude every reasonable hypothesis except defendant's guilt of the armed robbery and murder of the victims. Weston v. State, 276 Ga. 680, 580 S.E.2d 204 (2003).

Evidence sufficient for robbery by sudden snatching conviction. — Although the victim never saw the defendant with the wallet, there was sufficient evidence to show that at the moment the defendant's companion darted in front of the victim's cart distracting the victim's attention, the defendant snatched the wallet from the victim's purse; despite the victim's detection of the defendant's efforts, nothing more was needed to prove the elements of the crime of robbery by sudden snatching. Andrews v. State, 270 Ga. App. 362, 606 S.E.2d 587 (2004).

Evidence sufficient for possession of tools for commission of crime conviction. — Items stolen from victims' vehicles found in the defendant's car, stopped as the vehicle left the area of the thefts were sufficient to sustain convictions of entering an auto with the intent to commit theft, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-18; however, as there was no similar testimony as to items stolen from different victims, insufficient evidence supported other convictions, because the defendant's presence at the scene of the crime, without any other direct evidence, was insufficient to convict the defendant of the crimes that a passenger admitted to committing. Along with the stolen items found in the defendant's vehicle, and the defendant's presence at the crime scene where cars were broken into with the kind of tools found in the defendant's vehicle, the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for possession of tools for the commission of a crime. Walker v. State, 281 Ga. App. 94, 635 S.E.2d 577 (2006).

Evidence sufficient for felony murder and armed robbery convictions. — Given the testimony provided by both the codefendant and the codefendant's former wife, to whom the defendant admitted to firing the fatal shots killing the victim, which netted the victim's cellular phone and pager and evidence describing how the defendant participated in the events that happened before, during, and after the commission of the crimes, sufficient evidence was presented to uphold the defendant's convictions for felony murder and armed robbery as a party to the crimes. Pruitt v. State, 282 Ga. 30, 644 S.E.2d 837 (2007).

Evidence sufficient for convictions for aggravated assault, burglary, and possession of a firearm. — Given that the circumstantial evidence presented against the defendant sufficiently showed that: (1) the victim shot one of the intruders who committed the burglary; (2) shortly after the burglary, the defendant was treated for a gunshot wound and arrived at the hospital in a vehicle matching the description of the automobile seen leaving the crime scene; (3) the DNA evidence on ski masks found at the scene matched that of the owner of the car and the other passenger, who was also the defendant's brother; and (4) according to the defendant's brother, the driver of the car admitted to shooting the victim, the defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, burglary, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony were affirmed on appeal. Sherman v. State, 284 Ga. App. 809, 644 S.E.2d 901 (2007).

Evidence sufficient for possession of drugs. — If the totality of the evidence was sufficient to connect defendant to possession of drugs, even though there was evidence to authorize a contrary finding, the conviction would be sustained. Blair v. State, 216 Ga. App. 545, 455 S.E.2d 97 (1995).

Evidence sufficient for cocaine possession and possession with intent to distribute conviction. — Defendant's convictions for possessing 28 grams or more of cocaine, possessing cocaine with intent to distribute, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony were upheld on appeal as sufficient evidence was presented via the direct testimony of the defendant's live-in girlfriend, which when combined with the evidence showing their joint constructive possession of the drugs and gun tended to connect and identify the defendant with the crimes charged. Allen v. State, 286 Ga. App. 469, 649 S.E.2d 583 (2007).

Evidence that cocaine was found in the roof of defendant's vehicle and almost $1,000 in cash was found in defendant's pocket, although circumstantial, was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of possession of cocaine with intent to distribute. Johnson v. State, 274 Ga. App. 282, 617 S.E.2d 252 (2005), rev'd on other grounds, 280 Ga. 511, 630 S.E.2d 377 (2006); vacated, in part, 283 Ga. App. 630, 642 S.E.2d 340 (2007).

Given an alternative school's security officer's actual observation of a hand-to-hand exchange from a juvenile to another student at the school and the discovery of marijuana in the recipient's hand immediately thereafter, the only reasonable hypothesis was that the juvenile had just possessed the marijuana satisfying O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. In the Interest of T.M., No. A10A0211, 2010 Ga. App. LEXIS 351 (Apr. 1, 2010).

Evidence sufficient for methamphetamine possession conviction. — An officer found methamphetamine in a portion of a truck where the defendant kept personal belongings; the defendant was the sole occupant of the vehicle. The defendant's testimony denying possession of the drugs and stating that others had equal access to the truck did not establish under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 that the circumstantial evidence was insufficient to convict the defendant of possession of methamphetamine. Bryson v. State, 293 Ga. App. 392, 667 S.E.2d 170 (2008).

Evidence sufficient for involuntary manslaughter conviction. — There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's conviction for involuntary manslaughter of the defendant's romantic friend given the evidence of the defendant's admission that the defendant placed the friend in a headlock during a fight, and the medical examiner's findings that the friend was strangled to death. As a result, the jury was authorized to exclude all other reasonable hypotheses and conclude that the defendant unintentionally caused the friend's death while committing simple battery. Lemon v. State, 293 Ga. App. 488, 667 S.E.2d 654 (2008).

Evidence sufficient for armed robbery, burglary, and possession of a firearm conviction. — After two intruders burglarized and robbed a home at gunpoint, a pickup truck near the home fled from a patrol car and crashed, then two people matching the victims' description of the intruders fled from the truck. Since the defendant was trapped behind the steering wheel, and the items stolen from the home and a handgun were found in the truck, the circumstantial evidence was sufficient to convict the defendant as a party to armed robbery, burglary, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a burglary. Olds v. State, 293 Ga. App. 884, 668 S.E.2d 485 (2008).

Flight may be shown by circumstantial evidence. Terry v. State, 15 Ga. App. 108, 82 S.E. 635 (1914); Blakely v. State, 78 Ga. App. 262, 50 S.E.2d 762 (1948).

Flight of the accused is a circumstance which may be considered by the jury in determining the accused's guilt. Brooks v. State, 63 Ga. App. 575, 11 S.E.2d 688 (1940); Kirkland v. State, 67 Ga. App. 256, 19 S.E.2d 787 (1942); Tyler v. State, 91 Ga. App. 87, 84 S.E.2d 843 (1954).

Flight considered alone. — Mere fact of flight alone is not an incriminatory circumstance of sufficient probative value of itself to authorize a conviction for a crime. Burchfield v. State, 40 Ga. App. 506, 150 S.E. 459 (1929); Seay v. State, 63 Ga. App. 286, 11 S.E.2d 54 (1940).

Flight is generally not sufficient to support a conviction even if the flight was from the scene of the crime. Muckle v. State, 165 Ga. App. 873, 303 S.E.2d 54 (1983).

Flight of concealment considered with other circumstances is sufficient to convict. Diggs v. State, 90 Ga. App. 853, 84 S.E.2d 611 (1954).

Inference of participation. — Confession of facts that are matter from which an inference of participation arises are circumstantial. Eberhart v. State, 41 Ga. 598 (1873); Riley v. State, 1 Ga. App. 651, 57 S.E. 1031 (1907).

Others having access. — Evidence that cocaine was found hidden on the outside of defendant's mobile home, which was parked in an area to which a large number of persons, not only visitors to the unit occupied by defendant but anyone having business in the mobile home park had potential access was insufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for possession of cocaine. Prescott v. State, 164 Ga. App. 671, 297 S.E.2d 362 (1982).

Trial court erred in denying the defendant's motion for new trial after a jury found the defendant guilty of possession of more than one ounce of marijuana in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30(j) because the evidence adduced at trial was insufficient to show that the defendant was in sole constructive possession of the contraband when the defendant alone was charged with possessing the marijuana although the passenger in his car had equal access to it, and the only legal evidence linking the defendant to the marijuana in the back seat was his spatial proximity to it; an officer's testimony concerning scales that were found in the car, to the extent it suggested some deception on the passenger's part, that deception did not give rise to the sole, reasonable inference that defendant was in sole constructive possession of the marijuana, and because the inference did not exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save the guilt of defendant, it was insufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that he was in sole constructive possession of the marijuana. Rogers v. State, 302 Ga. App. 65, 690 S.E.2d 437 (2010).

Mere presence of contraband on premises occupied by an accused is insufficient to sustain a conviction when there is also evidence of access by others. Shockley v. State, 166 Ga. App. 182, 303 S.E.2d 519 (1983).

Presence, and approval of act, not sufficient. — Presence at the scene of a crime is not sufficient to show that a defendant is a party to the crime under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20, and even approval of the act, not amounting to encouragement, will not suffice. This is so because of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 as to a conviction on circumstantial evidence. Ridgeway v. State, 187 Ga. App. 381, 370 S.E.2d 216 (1988).

Acquaintance, proximity, and dress insufficient. — Fact that defendant knew a momentarily detained drug suspect, had been seen associating with the suspect in the past, and was dressed in a fashion not uncommon to drug vendors was insufficient circumstantial evidence to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant had joint constructive possession over controlled substances found in a nearby cache. Brooks v. State, 206 Ga. App. 485, 425 S.E.2d 911 (1992).

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for arson. — Given evidence of defendant's serious altercation with a woman-resident of the subject arson house prior to the house's burning, defendant's identification at and around the premises minutes prior to, and after the fire, and other circumstantial indicia of motive, opportunity, and inconsistency, the evidence, though wholly circumstantial, was sufficient to sustain a conviction for arson. Jenkins v. State, 207 Ga. App. 500, 428 S.E.2d 410 (1993).

Circumstantial evidence presented at trial: that the defendant and the defendant's family were to leave a house they bought for failure to make payments, that the defendant was upset about the fact that the defendant was not going to receive the return of the earnest money, that defendant was alone in the house at the time of the fire, and that defendant appeared nervous was sufficient to convict defendant of arson. Burchette v. State, 260 Ga. App. 739, 580 S.E.2d 609 (2003), aff'd, 278 Ga. 1, 596 S.E.2d 162 (2004).

Jury was authorized to find defendant guilty of arson even though the evidence was circumstantial as the proven facts were consistent with the hypothesis of guilt and excluded every other reasonable hypothesis other than defendant's guilt as defendant's burning of three trucks using gasoline at a truck-driving school where defendant failed truck-driving courses, defendant's presence at a gas station around the time of the fire, and defendant's admission that defendant burned the trucks because an instructor "burned" defendant, meant defendant's conviction was supportable as a matter of law. Denson v. State, 259 Ga. App. 342, 577 S.E.2d 29 (2003).

Evidence insufficient for arson conviction. — Conviction of first degree arson, O.C.G.A. § 16-7-60(a)(2), was not supported by sufficient evidence since there was no showing that a truck allegedly burned by the defendant was designed for use as a dwelling, and there was no showing of a lack of consent to the burning by the lienholder on the truck or by the joint owner, the defendant's wife; neither the wife's insurance claim form stating that she did not procure the loss, nor an insurance payment to the lienholder showed the required lack of consent, and there was no evidence in the entirely circumstantial case from which a jury could have excluded the very reasonable alternate hypothesis that the lienholder consented to the fire so as to recover the insurance proceeds for payment on a loan owed by a financially-troubled debtor, the defendant. Prater v. State, 279 Ga. App. 527, 631 S.E.2d 746 (2006).

Evidence was sufficient for aggravated battery conviction. — Defendant's attempt to invoke the circumstantial evidence rule of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was rejected and the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction of aggravated battery as the evidence was not entirely circumstantial since there was direct evidence that: (1) defendant said that defendant was going to set the victim on fire; (2) defendant was present and poured the gasoline on the victim; (3) defendant reached in defendant's pocket for something just before the fire started; and (4) the victim questioned why defendant had done it. Miller v. State, 265 Ga. App. 402, 593 S.E.2d 943 (2004).

Convictions of arson, O.C.G.A. § 16-7-60(a), and stalking, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-90, were proper because the circumstantial evidence presented at trial included a kerosene-soaked, partially burned, mailing label addressed to the defendant found at the scene of a fire at the victim's home; the state also presented evidence of the defendant's escalating obsession with the victim and the threatening phone calls the defendant made to the victim shortly before the fire. Although the circumstantial evidence must have excluded every other reasonable hypothesis save defendant's guilt, the evidence need not have excluded every inference or hypothesis. Ransom v. State, 297 Ga. App. 902, 678 S.E.2d 574 (2009).

Direct evidence required. — Circumstances relied upon must be proved by direct evidence. Georgia Ry. & Elec. Co. v. Harris, 1 Ga. App. 714, 57 S.E. 1076 (1907).

Evidence sufficient. — Evidence sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis except that of defendant's guilt. Brown v. State, 260 Ga. 153, 391 S.E.2d 108 (1990); Grover v. State, 215 Ga. App. 907, 452 S.E.2d 586 (1994).

Evidence adduced at trial was sufficient to authorize a rational jury to find the defendant and the codefendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the malice murder, directly or as a party to the crimes, because questions as to the reasonableness of alternative hypotheses were for the jury to decide, and the evidence was sufficient to enable the jury to reject every alternative hypothesis of the crimes, save that of the guilt of the defendant and the codefendant. Krause v. State, 286 Ga. 745, 691 S.E.2d 211 (2010).

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction. — See Griffin v. State, 2 Ga. App. 534, 58 S.E. 781 (1907) (gaming); Perry v. State, 9 Ga. App. 871, 72 S.E. 446 (1911) (larceny); Brown v. State, 13 Ga. App. 144, 78 S.E. 868 (1913) (larceny); Smith v. State, 148 Ga. 332, 96 S.E. 632 (1918) (murder); Shirley v. State, 168 Ga. 344, 148 S.E. 91 (1929) (murder); *Cheatham v. Comparing the child's condition at the time the defendant took the child from the child's mother and shortly thereafter, with the child's condition at the time the child and the defendant appeared at the fire station, and considering the acts of abuse admitted by the defendant, the evidence, when viewed most favorably to the verdict, was sufficient to have authorized a rational trier of fact in finding beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant caused the child's death. Phipps v. State, 203 Ga. App. 128, 416 S.E.2d 319, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 907, 416 S.E.2d 319 (1992).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant of possession of cocaine with the intent to distribute, O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30(b), and possession of marijuana, O.C.G.A. § 16-13-2(b), because the circumstantial evidence established a meaningful connection between the defendant and the contraband, evidence which showed the defendant exercising power and dominion over the drugs found inside the wheel well on the front passenger's side of a car; the jury could infer that the drugs had been recently placed in the wheel well, and because the defendant had fled from the police, had been caught within arm's reach of the drugs, and had a large amount of cash in his pockets, the jury could infer that the defendant was a drug dealer and that the defendant had placed the drugs in the wheel well to avoid being prosecuted for possessing them. Wright v. State, 302 Ga. App. 332, 690 S.E.2d 654 (2010).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant of trafficking in methamphetamine because the evidence sufficed to sustain the conviction, and the jury was authorized to conclude that the circumstances excluded the hypothesis that another passenger had placed drugs in the bed of a truck; the passenger testified at trial that the passenger did not place the drugs in the truck bed, and a police officer testified that the passenger, whom the officer had in sight the entire time, never came within five-to-six feet of the truck and that the officer not only saw the defendant place the defendant's arm in the truck bed but heard an accompanying thump. Haggard v. State, 302 Ga. App. 502, 690 S.E.2d 651 (2010).

Evidence sufficient for murder conviction. — Physical evidence of signs of struggle at victim's residence, defendant's attempts to remove these, and defendant's subsequent behavior regarding the disposal of victim's body sufficed to permit the jury to exclude every other hypothesis save the guilt of the accused in a prosecution for murder. White v. State, 263 Ga. 94, 428 S.E.2d 789 (1993).

Evidence sufficient for burglary convictions. — Circumstantial evidence of the burglary was sufficient to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save defendants' guilt as was required by O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 since defendants were seen at the burglarized property at the time that the burglary occurred, defendants fled the scene, and one of the defendants gave the police inconsistent stories as to what defendants were doing on the property. Bollinger v. State, 259 Ga. App. 102, 576 S.E.2d 80 (2003).

Circumstantial evidence supported defendant's burglary conviction because: (1) defendant drove a truck that exactly matched the truck in the surveillance tape; (2) defendant had a board in defendant's truck with glass particles embedded in the board that were of the same thickness and physical chemical properties as the glass of the window that was broken during the crime; (3) a sweater cap and white gloves found in the truck appeared to match those worn by the perpetrator in the surveillance tape; and (4) the stolen television and videocassette recorder were found approximately 500 yards from the defendant's mother's home. Brooks v. State, 273 Ga. App. 691, 615 S.E.2d 829 (2005), overruled on other grounds, Schofield v. Holsey, 281 Ga. 809, 642 S.E.2d 56 (2007).

Evidence sufficient for trafficking in cocaine and possession of heroine with intent to distribute. — Defendant's convictions for trafficking in cocaine and possession of heroin with intent to distribute, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-13-30(b) and 16-13-31(a), were supported by sufficient circumstantial evidence, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6, since it was shown that a witness stated that defendant was residing in an apartment and selling drugs, a search of the apartment revealed drugs, cash, and photographs and papers with defendant's name on them, as well as a sweater which defendant was seen wearing, and defendant had changed the locks on the apartment; accordingly, the trial court's denial of defendant's motions for a directed verdict pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1 and for a new trial pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 5-5-23 were properly denied. Williams v. State, 262 Ga. App. 67, 584 S.E.2d 625 (2003).

Evidence sufficient for malice murder conviction. — There was sufficient evidence to enable a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of malice murder after the victim, found in defendant's home, had been beaten and died from a severe blow to the head. Hannah v. State, 278 Ga. 195, 599 S.E.2d 177 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support a malice murder conviction since witnesses saw the defendant arguing with the victim, go with the victim into an area behind a motel where the victim lived, heard shots from the area behind the motel, and later the victim's body was found in that area; also, the defendant was seen at a house with an item wrapped in cloth, and later, the defendant's gun, the murder weapon, was found in the yard of that house, wrapped in cloth. Smith v. State, 280 Ga. 161, 625 S.E.2d 766 (2006).

Bloody jogging suit belonging to the defendant found at the defendant's girlfriend's house with the victim's blood on it, witnesses' description of the defendant wearing that same jogging suit after the shooting, and a .380 pistol found hidden in a cinder block at the girlfriend's house that matched the type of gun used to kill the victim were sufficient evidence to support convictions for malice murder and other related crimes with regard to the killing of the girlfriend's neighbor. Hooks v. State, 280 Ga. 164, 626 S.E.2d 114 (2006).

Evidence that the defendant threatened to kill the victim on numerous occasions, sometimes while brandishing a knife; that shortly before the victim was fatally stabbed, the defendant was seen in the victim's front yard; and that police matched the boots the defendant was wearing that night to a footprint at the crime scene was sufficient to convict the defendant of malice murder. Smith v. State, 284 Ga. 304, 667 S.E.2d 65 (2008).

Evidence sufficient for robbery convictions. — There was sufficient evidence of defendant's intent to participate in the robbery of a delivery man since the evidence showed that defendant was privy to the robbery plan, participated in the robbery, and convened with the codefendants after the robbery. In the Interest of C.L.B., 267 Ga. App. 456, 600 S.E.2d 407 (2004).

Denial of defendant's motion for a new trial was affirmed as defendant's fingerprint was on the robbery note, the victim eliminated all but the defendant's and one other's photos from a photo lineup, the victim's description matched the defendant's appearance, and the victim in a similar robbery positively identified the defendant as the robber; a defense witness's testimony that the witness saw defendant playing with cards in the hotel lobby a few days before the robbery did not exonerate the defendant as the witness did not see the defendant playing with cards similar to the one on which the robbery note was written. Dailey v. State, 271 Ga. App. 492, 610 S.E.2d 126 (2005).

Evidence sufficient for criminal attempt to commit armed robbery. — Jury was authorized to conclude that the evidence excluded every reasonable hypothesis except the defendant's guilt of criminal attempt to commit armed robbery because the defendant surreptitiously watched others at a fast food restaurant, wore a mask, and drew a BB handgun that resembled a semi-automatic weapon when the defendant was confronted by a police officer. New v. State, 270 Ga. App. 341, 606 S.E.2d 865 (2004).

Evidence sufficient for possession of drugs conviction. — Jury could rationally find from circumstantial evidence that defendant committed the offenses of possession of both amphetamine and GHB because substances found in defendant's gym locker were tested and found to be amphetamine and GHB, the amount of GHB found could be for personal use over a long period of time, and the containers in which the substances were found contained several prints that could not be identified but contained one that matched defendant's finger. Hobbs v. State, 272 Ga. App. 148, 611 S.E.2d 775 (2005).

As the defendant was the driver, owner, and sole occupant of a vehicle, and 250 grams of methamphetamine were found hidden beneath the steering column, within arm's reach of the driver, the circumstantial evidence was sufficient to establish the defendant's "knowing" possession of the drugs as required by O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(e). The mere possibility that someone other than the defendant committed the crime was not such a reasonable hypothesis as had to be excluded in order for circumstantial evidence to authorize a verdict of guilty under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Garcia v. State, 293 Ga. App. 422, 667 S.E.2d 205 (2008).

Evidence sufficient for possession of cocaine conviction. — Circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for possession of cocaine, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30, as the defendant was approached by two undercover officers and upon seeing that one of the officers had a badge, defendant turned around and made a throwing motion with a clenched fist in the direction of a trash barrel; defendant was in an area known for drug sales, and three pieces of crack cocaine were found in the vicinity of the trash barrel. Woods v. State, 275 Ga. App. 471, 620 S.E.2d 660 (2005).

Police officer testified about searching a patrol car before transporting the defendant in the car, and about the officer's suspicions that the defendant had stuffed something underneath the backseat because the officer saw debris on the back of the defendant's pants and on the backseat. This circumstantial evidence was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to convict the defendant of possessing the cocaine found wedged underneath the backseat. Simmons v. State, 299 Ga. App. 21, 681 S.E.2d 712 (2009).

Evidence sufficient for rape conviction. — Combination of circumstantial and direct evidence, including the victim's identification of the attacker, DNA evidence, and the testimony of several eyewitnesses who saw a man fitting the defendant's description in the area near the time of the attack, was sufficient to sustain a rape conviction. McKeehan v. State, 274 Ga. App. 14, 616 S.E.2d 489 (2005).

Evidence sufficient for malice murder and attempted arson convictions. — Malice murder and attempted arson convictions were upheld as: (1) the evidence presented showed that an attempted arson was inextricably linked to the victim's murder, and the jury was authorized to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty; (2) the admission of two handwritten documents that defendant had penned was proper, as their prejudicial impact did not outweigh their probative value; and (3) the trial court did not abuse the court's discretion in determining that any prejudicial impact of a religious prayer asking for strength, and an expression of uncertainty as to what "makes me tick," did not outweigh the probative value of the evidence. Fortson v. State, 280 Ga. 376, 628 S.E.2d 104 (2006).

Evidence sufficient for felony murder while in commission of cruelty to children conviction. — Evidence that a defendant's 13-month-old child died while in the defendant's care from brain trauma caused by being struck by or against an object or violently shaken at a time when one other person and that person's child were in the defendant's apartment provided sufficient circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to enable a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of felony murder while in the commission of cruelty to a child; questions as to the reasonableness of hypotheses were to be decided by the jury, and the jury's finding was not to be disturbed unless the guilty verdict was insupportable as a matter of law. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. 373, 637 S.E.2d 652 (2006).

Evidence sufficient for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute and proximity to housing project convictions. — Defendant's convictions for possession of cocaine with intent to distribute and possession of a controlled substance within 1,000 feet of a housing project, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-13-30(b) and 16-13-32.5(b), were based on sufficient evidence since the state proved by circumstantial evidence pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 that defendant had been walking back and forth to an overturned bucket when people approached from the street in what appeared to be drug transactions, and the drugs were found under the bucket; there was evidence that the amount of drugs recovered were more than one would use for personal use, indicating an intent to distribute, and there was also evidence indicating the proximity of the bucket to a nearby public housing complex. Reason v. State, 283 Ga. App. 608, 642 S.E.2d 236 (2007).

Evidence sufficient for malice murder and armed robbery convictions. — Evidence, which included uncontroverted testimony from an eyewitness who saw the defendant order a store employee into the street shortly before the employee was shot, the testimony of two other eyewitnesses, and the fact that calls had been made from the employee's stolen cellular phone to the defendant's mother, was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of malice murder, armed robbery, and a number of other associated crimes. Horne v. State, 281 Ga. 799, 642 S.E.2d 659 (2007).

Evidence sufficient for felony murder and arson convictions. — Circumstantial evidence was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to support the defendant's arson and felony murder convictions and to exclude the theory that an intruder set the fire in the house since the defendant rented a room from the victim: (1) testimony of neighbors contradicted the defendant's claim that the defendant was asleep and unaware of the fire; (2) there was no evidence of a forced entry other than that of the neighbors who tried to save the victim; (3) the layout of the house authorized the jury to find that the defendant would have noticed an intruder; and (4) a motive could be inferred from the fact that the defendant owed rent to the victim and that the victim was planning to ask the defendant for the rent. Green v. State, 283 Ga. 126, 657 S.E.2d 221 (2008).

Evidence sufficient for trafficking marijuana conviction. — There was sufficient evidence to support the defendant's conviction for trafficking marijuana as the jury was authorized to conclude that it was not reasonable, as the defendant suggested, that someone other than the defendant placed over 21 pounds of marijuana in open view in the back of a trailer of which the defendant had the only key, without the defendant's knowledge. Mora v. State, 292 Ga. App. 860, 666 S.E.2d 412 (2008).

Evidence sufficient for felony murder conviction. — Circumstantial evidence supported the defendant's conviction of the felony murder of the defendant's two-month-old child. The victim's grandparent had not had contact with the victim on the day of the murder, and the evidence that the victim was well when the victim's other parent left the house, combined with a medical examiner's testimony and time line regarding the time of the child's death, excluded the other parent's guilt as well. Nixon v. State, 284 Ga. 800, 671 S.E.2d 503 (2009).

Evidence authorized the jury to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of felony murder and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime because there was substantial corroborating evidence in addition to the accomplice's testimony; the defendant stated that the defendant had killed someone, other witnesses corroborated the accomplice's testimony regarding the arrival and departure of the two men on the night of the shooting, and blood was found on the shirt the defendant wore that night and tried to have destroyed. Gonnella v. State, 286 Ga. 211, 686 S.E.2d 644 (2009).

Evidence sufficient for felony murder and aggravated assault conviction. — Contrary to a defendant's contention that the state presented only circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 that did not exclude all reasonable hypotheses except that of the defendant's guilt, the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction for felony murder and aggravated assault; the defendant's infant child died of a massive closed head trauma complicated by blunt force chest trauma, and the defendant had the sole care of the child just before the child suffered rib injuries allegedly due to the defendant pushing on the child's chest while the child was choking and just before the child suffered seizure-like symptoms. Berryhill v. State, 285 Ga. 198, 674 S.E.2d 920 (2009).

Evidence authorized the jury to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of murder, felony murder, aggravated assault, and possession of a weapon during the commission of a felony because contrary to the defendant's arguments, the evidence showed that the person who was sitting in the back seat of the victim's car was not sitting directly behind the victim, but instead, that person was in the rear seat on the passenger's side of the car; the forensics testing showed that the murderer was located to the left of the victim, not the right, and there was blood spatter on the seat behind the victim from which the jury could have inferred that no one was sitting there at the time of the shooting. Julius v. State, 286 Ga. 413, 687 S.E.2d 828 (2010).

Evidence sufficient for aggravated child molestation conviction. — Evidence, including that defendant had access and opportunity to infect a victim at least two weeks prior to the victim exhibiting symptoms, and that the victim's immediate outcry was consistent with the victim's statement to a doctor identifying defendant, and excluding the hypothesis that the victim's father was present prior to the onset of the victim's symptoms, was sufficient to convict defendant of aggravated child molestation in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(c). Zuniga v. State, 300 Ga. App. 45, 684 S.E.2d 77 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0169, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 125 (Ga. 2010).

Evidence sufficient as there is direct evidence. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for shoplifting, and the state was not required under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to present evidence excluding every other reasonable hypothesis except defendant's guilt because the state's case was not based on circumstantial evidence, but on the direct testimony of an eyewitness to the shoplifting. Fitzpatrick v. State, 271 Ga. App. 804, 611 S.E.2d 95 (2005).

Defendant's claim that the evidence was insufficient to support defendant's conviction for theft by shoplifting because the evidence was completely circumstantial and did not exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of the defendant's guilt failed; contrary to the defendant's contention, the testimony from a store's loss prevention employee that the employee observed the defendant remove an item from a shelf, place the item in the defendant's back pocket, and then leave the store without presenting the item to a cashier was direct not circumstantial evidence. Walton v. State, 291 Ga. App. 736, 662 S.E.2d 820 (2008).

Evidence held insufficient to support conviction. — See Park v. State, 123 Ga. 164, 51 S.E. 317 (1905) (murder); Bush v. State, 7 Ga. App. 607, 67 S.E. 685 (1910) (larceny); *Calhoun v. tain lane); Calhoun v. State, 213 Ga. App. 375, 444 S.E.2d 405 (1994) (shoplifting); Jordan v. State, 225 Ga. App. 424, 484 S.E.2d 60 (1997) (trafficking in cocaine); *Mitchell v. App. 829, 493 S.E.2d 38 (1997) (possession with intent to distribute marijuana); Greene v. State, 230 Ga. App. 155, 495 S.E.2d 634 (1998) (drug violation); Johnson v. State, 245 Ga. App. 583, 538 S.E.2d 481 (2000) (possession of cocaine).

When the defendant drove a codefendant away from the crime scene in a subdivision after the codefendant shot the victim, to the extent that the evidence that the defendant's car had been parked at some point with the car's front end facing in the direction going out of the subdivision constituted circumstantial evidence of the defendant's guilt as a party, the evidence did not exclude every other reasonable hypothesis, as required by O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. Ratana v. State, 297 Ga. App. 747, 678 S.E.2d 193 (2009).

Except as to one incident, the evidence was insufficient to show that a mother aided and abetted her husband's sexual abuse of their twin daughters when they were between four and eight years old, because the record showed that the mother had no knowledge of seven of the eight incidents until she took the children to therapy, and the prosecution's circumstantial evidence—including the fact of the family's nudist lifestyle, the existence of pornographic movies in the home, and the fact that during therapy, the mother advised the girls to not talk about their father—was insufficient to prove aiding and abetting beyond a reasonable doubt. Naylor v. State, 300 Ga. App. 401, 685 S.E.2d 383 (2009).

Evidence insufficient for cocaine possession conviction. — When: (1) defendant's only connection to cocaine that was found in a jacket was that defendant picked up the jacket after the jacket had been lying outside on an air conditioner in close proximity to a juvenile who was suspected in drug transactions and an unidentified woman; and (2) there was no evidence as to who placed the jacket on the air conditioner, the evidence against defendant was entirely circumstantial and did not exclude every other hypothesis except guilt; therefore, the evidence was insufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to support defendant's conviction of possessing cocaine in violation of the Georgia Controlled Substances Act, O.C.G.A. § 16-13-20 et seq. Stephens v. State, 258 Ga. App. 774, 575 S.E.2d 661 (2002).

State failed to prove the state's case that defendant, a minor, was delinquent under O.C.G.A. § 15-11-2 for trafficking in cocaine in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31 as the state did not prove the necessary connection between defendant and the drugs, other than spatial proximity, which was insufficient; the fact that defendant was in a house in the middle of the night with non-family members, that a large amount of cocaine and cash were found in the house, although not visible, and that defendant was sitting on a couch where a bag containing crack cocaine was found did not establish the necessary connection, and did not exclude all other possibilities except the guilt of defendant under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. In re E.A.D., 271 Ga. App. 531, 610 S.E.2d 153 (2005).

Evidence insufficient for financial identity fraud. — Because the state's evidence failed to demonstrate that the defendant accessed the resources of another by using identifying information to procure a cell phone, and a service contract for the cell phone, and failed to establish that defendant either knew that a store clerk: (1) could not issue a phone without accessing the resources of a specific individual; (2) would need to use the identifying information of that individual to access such resources; or (3) in fact used such identifying information to access the resources of another for the purpose of providing defendant with a cell phone, the evidence was insufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction of financial identity fraud. Jones v. State, 285 Ga. App. 822, 648 S.E.2d 133 (2007).

Evidence insufficient for theft by taking conviction. — Evidence did not support the finding that a juvenile defendant committed theft by taking. Although there was circumstantial evidence that the defendant had a key to the home from which items were taken and had been in and out of the home at the time of the theft, the defendant testified that the defendant had left the door unlocked and returned to the home to find the home ransacked; the circumstantial evidence supported the defendant's version of the facts as well as the state's and thus did not warrant a finding of guilt under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6. In the Interest of M.H., 288 Ga. App. 663, 655 S.E.2d 249 (2007).

Evidence insufficient for methamphetamine possession. — Evidence of a defendant's unconsciousness, possibly due to consumption of alcohol or other legal substances, and the defendant's spatial proximity to methamphetamine and pipes used to smoke it, to which two codefendants had equal access, was insufficient circumstantial evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save that the defendant possessed methamphetamine. Therefore, the evidence was insufficient to support the defendant's conviction. O'Neill v. State, 285 Ga. 125, 674 S.E.2d 302 (2009).

Circumstantial evidence was insufficient to show constructive possession of methamphetamine found in a car, in which defendant was a passenger, because there was no evidence, besides spatial proximity, connecting the defendant with the contraband since there was no evidence showing that the defendant knew that a baggy found in the car contained contraband or the defendant hid the baggy in the car. Millsaps v. State, 300 Ga. App. 383, 685 S.E.2d 371 (2009).

Evidence insufficient for aggravated battery, aggravated assault, and firearm possession conviction. — Convictions of aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24, aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106, were not supported by sufficient evidence because, although the defendant's conduct before the crime was suspicious, the circumstantial evidence against the defendant was insufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6; the state did not show that the defendant was anywhere near the scene at the time of the shooting, did not present evidence connecting a weapon used in the shooting to the defendant, and, although a witness testified that three days before the shooting, the witness saw the defendant's brother hand the defendant a gun, the witness could not identify the type of gun involved, and this testimony did not connect the defendant with the shooting. The state also failed to adduce evidence that the defendant intentionally aided, abetted, or encouraged the commission of the crimes of which the defendant was convicted. Gresham v. State, 298 Ga. App. 136, 679 S.E.2d 344 (2009).

Evidence insufficient for theft by receiving property conviction. — Circumstantial evidence of a larcenous taking was insufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for theft by receiving beyond a reasonable doubt because the officer's testimony that radio dispatch identified the pistol as stolen was non-probative hearsay and the fact that the weapon was labeled for law enforcement use only and loaded with police-issue ammunition did not exclude the possibility that the weapon may have been given away or sold "on the black market" in violation of the warning. Lopez v. State, 259 Ga. App. 720, 578 S.E.2d 304 (2003).

Evidence insufficient for malice murder, aggravated assault, and firearm possession convictions. — Evidence did not show that defendant intentionally or knowingly provided handguns to two cousins who used the guns to commit murder and other crimes, and because defendant was not present when the crimes were committed and the evidence did not exclude all possibilities except guilt, the state supreme court reversed defendant's convictions for malice murder, aggravated assault, possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon. Clyde v. State, 276 Ga. 839, 584 S.E.2d 253 (2003).

Evidence insufficient for weapons conviction. — Circumstantial evidence was insufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to prove that defendant had constructive possession of a gun found in a car in which defendant was riding as a passenger or to support defendant's convictions for carrying a concealed weapon under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-126(a) or possession of a firearm by a convicted felon under O.C.G.A. § 16-11-131(b) since: (1) the car was stopped for a traffic offense, and was searched, revealing the gun; (2) all of the occupants in the car denied possessing the gun; (3) the gun was found under a seat where defendant had been sitting; (4) the arresting officers did not see defendant bend over or appear to put anything under the seat; and (5) because defendant was only a passenger in a car that defendant did not own or control, there was no presumption that defendant possessed the gun. Wofford v. State, 262 Ga. App. 291, 585 S.E.2d 207 (2003).

Evidence insufficient for marijuana possession conviction. — Evidence did not support defendant's conviction for possession of marijuana with intent to distribute as the mere fact that a package of marijuana was addressed, but not delivered, to an apartment leased by defendant did not tie defendant to the drugs; the evidence was circumstantial and it was equally plausible that the codefendants were independently dealing in marijuana. Patten v. State, 275 Ga. App. 574, 621 S.E.2d 550 (2005).

Intoxication causing accident. — Circumstantial evidence that defendant's alleged intoxication caused the accident was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-6 to exclude defendant's reasonable hypotheses of innocence due to mechanical failure. Griffin v. State, 242 Ga. App. 878, 531 S.E.2d 752 (2000).

Appeal

Question on appeal is whether there were sufficient circumstances to enable twelve men who found the facts to conclude that the accused was guilty. Brown v. State, 13 Ga. App. 144, 78 S.E. 868 (1913).

Appellate courts do not undertake to weigh circumstantial evidence, but look only to seek if there is sufficient competent evidence to support the verdict, when viewed in the light most favorable to the verdict. Hopkins v. State, 167 Ga. App. 811, 307 S.E.2d 707 (1983).

Presumption in favor of verdict. — After the verdict, the testimony is construed in the testimony's most favorable light to the prevailing party, which is in this case, the state, for every presumption and inference is in favor of the verdict. This rule has been applied when the evidence is circumstantial. Townsend v. State, 127 Ga. App. 797, 195 S.E.2d 474 (1972).

Should a trial court decline to direct the verdict and the jury then finds the defendant guilty, the appellate court is obliged to review the evidence in a light most favorable to the jury verdict. Muckle v. State, 165 Ga. App. 873, 303 S.E.2d 54 (1983).

Verdict will not be disturbed when circumstances are aided by direct evidence. McGinnis v. State, 31 Ga. 236 (1860); Hudson v. State, 92 Ga. 472, 17 S.E. 847 (1893); Coney v. State, 101 Ga. 582, 28 S.E. 918 (1897).

Verdict not disturbed unless unsupportable as matter of law. — If a jury is authorized to find that the evidence, circumstantial though it may be, is sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of guilt, the verdict of the jury will not be disturbed by the appellate court unless the verdict is insupportable as a matter of law. Brewer v. State, 156 Ga. App. 468, 274 S.E.2d 817 (1980); Lawhorn v. State, 200 Ga. App. 451, 408 S.E.2d 425 (1991).

Questions of reasonableness are generally decided by the jury, and the appellate court will not disturb the jury's finding that the evidence was sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of guilt unless the verdict is unsupportable as a matter of law. Shockley v. State, 166 Ga. App. 182, 303 S.E.2d 519 (1983).

Questions as to reasonableness are generally to be decided by the jury which heard the evidence and when the jury is authorized to find that the evidence, though circumstantial, was sufficient to exclude every reasonable hypothesis save that of guilt, the appellate court will not disturb the finding, unless the verdict is unsupportable as a matter of law. Chambless v. State, 165 Ga. App. 194, 300 S.E.2d 201 (1983).

When verdict overturned. — Supreme Court is admittedly without authority to interfere with a verdict supported by direct evidence; it may declare, however, even though the jury has found otherwise, and the trial judge has approved their finding, that the proven circumstances do not sustain by their consistency the claim of the state as to the guilt of the defendant. Willoughby v. City of Atlanta, 50 Ga. App. 180, 177 S.E. 527 (1934).

Hypothesis consistent with innocence. — When there appears a hypothesis from the evidence, or from the lack of evidence and the defendant's statement, pointing to the innocence of the accused and which, tested by all human experience, is a reasonable one, an appellate court, may declare it so as a matter of law. Wood v. State, 156 Ga. App. 810, 275 S.E.2d 694 (1980); Walker v. State, 157 Ga. App. 728, 278 S.E.2d 487 (1981).

24-4-7. Positive testimony preferred over negative; exception.

The existence of a fact testified to by one positive witness is to be believed, rather than that such fact did not exist because many other witnesses who had the same opportunity of observation swear that they did not see or know of its having existed. This rule shall not apply when two parties have equal facilities for seeing or hearing a thing and one swears that it occurred while the other swears that it did not. (Civil Code 1895, § 5165; Penal Code 1895, § 985; Civil Code 1910, § 5751; Penal Code 1910, § 1011; Code 1933, § 38-111.)

History of Code section. — This Code section is derived from the decisions in Cobb

v. State, 27 Ga. 648 (1859) and Atlanta & W.P.R.R. v. Johnson, 66 Ga. 260 (1881).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

Reason for this statute is probably that the law would not care to attribute perjury to a witness unless necessary, and negative testimony as a result may be taken as an oversight on the part of a witness to observe the fact in question. The last provision of the statute provides for those cases where a witness may swear positively to the nonoccurrence of a fact. Such testimony is of as much weight as positive testimony. Skinner v. State, 108 Ga. 747, 32 S.E. 844 (1899); Nelms v. State, 123 Ga. 575, 51 S.E. 588 (1905); Hunter v. State, 4 Ga. App. 761, 62 S.E. 466 (1908) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-7).

Rule of this statute is so aptly stated that to instruct the jury in the language of the statute is ordinarily error. Warrick v. State, 125 Ga. 133, 53 S.E. 1027 (1906); Moore v. State, 57 Ga. App. 287, 195 S.E. 320 (1938); Great Am. Indem. Co. v. Oxford, 68 Ga. App. 884, 24 S.E.2d 726 (1943) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-7).

Failure to charge not error in absence of request. — In the absence of a request, it is not error for the court to fail to charge this statute as to positive and negative testimony. Grice v. State, 224 Ga. 376, 162 S.E.2d 432 (1968) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-7).

Witnesses of equal credibility. — Statute applies only if the witnesses are of equal credibility. Great Am. Indem. Co. v. Oxford, 68 Ga. App. 844, 24 S.E.2d 726 (1943); Rider v. State, 196 Ga. 767, 27 S.E.2d 667 (1943); Kaylor v. Kaylor, 199 Ga. 516, 35 S.E.2d 1 (1945) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-7).

Qualification of rule. — This statute does not apply when two parties have equal facilities for seeing or hearing a thing and one swears that it occurred and the other that it did not. Weeks v. State, 79 Ga. 36, 3 S.E. 323 (1887); Skinner v. State, 108 Ga. 747, 32 S.E. 844 (1899); Nelms v. State, 123 Ga. 575, 51 S.E. 588 (1905); Wood v. State, 1 Ga. App. 684, 58 S.E. 271 (1907); Benton v. State, 3 Ga. App. 453, 60 S.E. 116 (1908) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-7).

Credibility of witnesses. — When this statute is applicable, it is error for the court to give the statute in charge to the jury without further instructing the jury that in weighing such testimony the jury should take into consideration the credibility of the witnesses. Central of Ga. Ry. v. Sowell, 3 Ga. App. 142, 59 S.E. 323 (1907); Georgia R.R. & Banking Co. v. Radford, 144 Ga. 22, 85 S.E. 1006 (1915); Georgia Ry. & Power Co. v. Pounds, 20 Ga. App. 201, 92 S.E. 1026 (1917); McDuffie v. State, 24 Ga. App. 653, 101 S.E. 812 (1920); Green v. State, 26 Ga. App. 109, 105 S.E. 634 (1920); Carter v. State, 34 Ga. App. 230, 129 S.E. 10 (1925); Moore v. State, 57 Ga. App. 287, 195 S.E. 320 (1938); Progressive Life Ins. Co. v. Archer, 73 Ga. App. 639, 37 S.E.2d 713 (1946); Goodyear Clearwater Mills v. Wheeler, 77 Ga. App. 570, 49 S.E.2d 184 (1948).

Jurors not obliged to discard negative evidence merely because of the existence of positive evidence in conflict with it. Innis v. State, 42 Ga. 473 (1871); Hunter v. State, 4 Ga. App. 761, 62 S.E. 466 (1908);

Pendergrast v. Greeson, 6 Ga. App. 47, 64 S.E. 282 (1909); Pollard v. Gorman, 52 Ga. App. 127, 182 S.E. 678 (1935); Jefferson Std. Life Ins. Co. v. Bentley, 55 Ga. App. 272, 190 S.E. 50 (1937); Progressive Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 71 Ga. App. 157, 30 S.E.2d 411 (1944); Abbot Inv. Co. v. Jefferson County, 77 Ga. App. 76, 49 S.E.2d 918 (1948); Ellis v. Southern Ry., 96 Ga. App. 687, 101 S.E.2d 230 (1957); Allison v. Cobb County, 97 Ga. App. 331, 103 S.E.2d 195 (1958).

Reconciliation of testimony. — When the testimony of witnesses who testified positively may be true without it being necessary to reject any of the negative testimony as untrue, and the testimony can be harmonized without discrediting any witness, it is the duty of the jury to prefer the positive testimony. Gamblin v. State, 33 Ga. App. 51, 125 S.E. 517 (1924).

Types of evidence. — Law and logic both recognize the fact that testimony as to a thing may be positive, negative, or contradictory. Hughes v. Etheridge, 39 Ga. App. 730, 148 S.E. 358 (1929).

Failure to explain meaning of positive and negative evidence is not error in the absence of a special request. Southern Ry. v. Maddox, 63 Ga. App. 508, 11 S.E.2d 501 (1940).

Instruction on latter part of statute is usually necessary to fully explain to the jury the distinction between testimony which is negative in character and that which is contradictory of positive testimony, and which otherwise might be thought to be negative. Benton v. State, 3 Ga. App. 453, 60 S.E. 116 (1908) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-7).

Positive and negative evidence defined in the following cases: McConnell v. State, 67 Ga. 633 (1881); Hunter v. State, 4 Ga. App. 761, 62 S.E. 466 (1908); Heywood v. State, 12 Ga. App. 643, 77 S.E. 1130 (1913); Progressive Life Ins. Co. v. Archer, 73 Ga. App. 639, 37 S.E.2d 713 (1946).

Charge favorable to losing party. — If the positive evidence in regard to the facts under consideration was introduced by the losing party, and the negative evidence in regard to such facts was introduced by the successful party, a charge to the effect that positive testimony should outweigh that which is negative without qualification, would be more favorable to the losing party than the losing party would have a right to ask; and such error in favor of the unsuccessful litigant would not furnish ground for a reversal on the losing party's motion. Rider v. State, 196 Ga. 767, 27 S.E.2d 667 (1943).

Testimony sufficient to charge on positive and negative evidence as to whether automobile turned over in accident. Progressive Life Ins. Co. v. Archer, 73 Ga. App. 639, 37 S.E.2d 713 (1946).

Issue properly submitted to jury. — When the existence of a fact was affirmed by positive evidence and denied by negative evidence, an issue was raised, and the trial judge committed no error in properly submitting such issue to the jury. Pollard v. Gorman, 52 Ga. App. 127, 182 S.E. 678 (1935); Abbot Inv. Co. v. Jefferson County, 77 Ga. App. 761, 49 S.E.2d 918 (1948).

Positive and negative testimony at play. — When there was testimony that immediately before plaintiff's mule was struck by a train, a horse and colt crossed the track in front of the train and this testimony, by a section hand was corroborated by the section foreman, but the engineer of the train testified that the engineer did not see such a horse or colt cross the track in front of the train, although there was nothing which could have obstructed the engineer's view of them, the rule relative to positive and negative testimony is called into play, and, under a proper instruction from the court, the jury was authorized to believe the positive testimony of the section hand and section foreman rather than that of the engineer. Atlantic Coast Line R.R. v. Hodges, 90 Ga. App. 870, 84 S.E.2d 711 (1954).

Refusal to charge O.C.G.A. § 24-4-7 was not error. — See Green v. State, 253 Ga. 693, 324 S.E.2d 181 (1985).

On appeal. — Statute will not justify the setting aside of the jury's verdict on appeal when there is evidence to support the verdict. Kelly v. Gaskins, 238 Ga. 730, 235 S.E.2d 386 (1977) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-7).

244-8. Number of witnesses required generally; exceptions; effect of corroboration.

The testimony of a single witness is generally sufficient to establish a fact. However, in certain cases, including prosecutions for treason, prosecutions for perjury, and felony cases where the only witness is an accomplice, the testimony of a single witness is not sufficient. Nevertheless, corroborating circumstances may dispense with the necessity for the testimony of a second witness, except in prosecutions for treason. (Orig. General Consideration Statute inapplicable. — Exception stated in this statute does not apply when the state does not rely solely on the testimony of a single accomplice. Ross v. State, 245 Ga. 173, 263 S.E.2d 913 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8).

Admissibility of other crimes evidence is not governed by O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Turner v. State, 268 Ga. 213, 486 S.E.2d 839 (1997).

Failure to charge on accomplice testimony and corroboration was not error as the prosecution largely relied on other evidence, not accomplice testimony, to prove defendant’s guilt. Dillard v. State, 272 Ga. App. 523, 612 S.E.2d 804 (2005).

Victim’s testimony that the victim knew both robbers and recognized the robbers during the robbery and the next day, even without the accomplice’s pretrial statement implicating the defendant, was direct and circumstantial evidence of the defendant’s participation in the crime and O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 was inapplicable. Jordan v. State, 278 Ga. App. 126, 628 S.E.2d 221 (2006).

Testimony of a single witness was sufficient to establish venue. — See Moreno v. State, 255 Ga. App. 88, 564 S.E.2d 505 (2002).

When a victim of an aggravated assault and battery testified that the incident, wherein her former boyfriend was following her closely in his car and then shot her, occurred in a particular county at a stated location, such was sufficient to establish venue for those crimes. Morris v. State, 263 Ga. App. 115, 587 S.E.2d 272 (2003).

Testimony of single witness to establish fact. — Testimony of a single witness is generally sufficient to establish a fact, and an officer’s testimony that the officer saw defendant’s hands on a plastic bag containing cocaine was sufficient to authorize a rational trier of fact to find that defendant possessed the cocaine. Lester v. State, 226 Ga. App. 373, 487 S.E.2d 25 (1997).

Testimony of a single witness was sufficient to authorize a jury’s verdict that defendant was guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of committing aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and that the defendant committed simple battery by intentionally kicking the victim on the ankle, causing a bruise. Ringo v. State, 236 Ga. App. 38, 510 S.E.2d 893 (1999).

Where the 14-year-old victim allegedly consented to having sex with defendant, the sexual molestation conviction under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a) was supported by sufficient evidence; under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-1, consent by the victim was irrelevant due to the inability of the victim to legally consent to intercourse, and it was for the jury to determine, in accordance with the testimony of at least a single witness pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, whether defendant's conduct was immoral or indecent under O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a). Slack v. State, 265 Ga. App. 306, 593 S.E.2d 664 (2004).

When an eye-witness identified defendant as the individual the witness saw leave the witness's storage shed with the witness's goods, the evidence sufficed to sustain a verdict of guilty on the charge of burglary under O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1(a). Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, a single witness is generally sufficient to establish a fact. Gibson v. State, 268 Ga. App. 696, 603 S.E.2d 319 (2004).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's burglary conviction after an employee of the burglarized store testified that the employee encountered defendant between 3:30 and 4:30 a.m. in the store, while defendant was trying to pry open the lock on a jewelry counter with a knife, the employee identified defendant from a photographic lineup and at trial, and under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the testimony of one witness is sufficient to establish a fact. Standfill v. State, 267 Ga. App. 612, 600 S.E.2d 695 (2004).

Defendant's multiple convictions for armed robbery, aggravated assault, kidnapping, possessing a firearm during the commission of a felony, burglary, and kidnapping with bodily injury, were supported by sufficient evidence because defendant and another robbed a store while holding the two owners at gunpoint, defendant led police on a high-speed car chase, and the defendant broke into and robbed two homes, one of which had an occupant that defendant beat; only one store owner's testimony was needed to establish the facts to support the aggravated assault conviction. Owens v. State, 271 Ga. App. 365, 609 S.E.2d 670 (2005).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant's convictions for child molestation, aggravated child molestation, statutory rape, and incest, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-6-3, 16-6-4, 16-6-4(c), and 16-6-22, because defendant's step-daughter gave detailed testimony as to the continuing sexual conduct that defendant inflicted on the step-daughter over a period of years as the testimony from just that witness was sufficient to support the convictions, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8; further, there was corroborative testimony from a friend of the step-daughter who witnessed at least one incident, and from an aunt who testified that the older step-daughter had sat in defendant's lap and that defendant rubbed her legs, which was properly admitted for purposes of corroboration, bent of mind, lustful disposition toward children, and motive. Lewis v. State, 275 Ga. App. 41, 619 S.E.2d 699 (2005).

Defendant's new trial motion under O.C.G.A. § 5-5-22 was properly denied as the fact that the state failed to turn over two videotaped statements from defendant's sons, arising from criminal charges due to a domestic dispute, was based on inadvertence rather than bad faith, there was unimpeached eyewitness testimony from other witnesses that was sufficient to support defendant's convictions pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, and there was no showing that defendant suffered the kind of prejudice that undermined confidence in the outcome of the trial; accordingly, defendant's Brady rights were not violated and there was no violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 17-16-6 and 17-16-7. Ely v. State, 275 Ga. App. 708, 621 S.E.2d 811 (2005).

Testimony of a single witness was sufficient to establish a fact under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, and the defendant's convictions for rape was supported by sufficient evidence since the victim testified that defendant forced her into a train boxcar, threatened to kill her, and had vaginal and oral sex with her against her will and without her consent. Davis v. State, 278 Ga. App. 628, 629 S.E.2d 537 (2006).

On appeal from convictions of armed robbery, aggravated assault, kidnapping, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, the defendant's sufficiency of the evidence claim lacked merit as independent corroboration of the alleged victim's testimony was unnecessary, given that testimony from a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact, and this included a victim's uncorroborated identification of an assailant; moreover, even if corroboration were needed, the similar transaction provided sufficient evidence of the defendant's identity, which was one of the purposes for which it was introduced. Pringle v. State, 281 Ga. App. 230, 635 S.E.2d 843 (2006).

In a prosecution for felony theft by taking of a van, the trial court was entitled to conclude that the victim was an innocent purchaser for value, believing the seller to be the owner, the defendant's claim to the contrary notwithstanding; moreover, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the testimony of a single witness was sufficient to establish this fact. Coursey v. State, 281 Ga. App. 494, 636 S.E.2d 669 (2006).

Because the victim's testimony, standing alone, was sufficient to establish the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, when the evidence showed: (1) two separate aggravated assaults, one with a knife and one with a hammer; (2) two separate instances of simple battery; and (3) a hours-long detention of the victim by the defendant, the evidence amply supported the jury's conviction on the charges of false imprisonment, aggravated assault, and simple battery. Brigman v. State, 282 Ga. App. 481, 639 S.E.2d 359 (2006).

Defendant's convictions for aggravated assault, aggravated battery, and first-degree child cruelty pursuant to O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a), 16-5-24(a), and 16-5-70(b) for participating in a drive-by shooting were supported by sufficient evidence because the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 and it was the function of the jury to evaluate the credibility of witnesses; based on the testimony of the witnesses to the shooting, a reasonable jury could have rejected the defendant's claims and determined that the defendant was a party to each of the crimes. Hill v. State, 282 Ga. App. 743, 639 S.E.2d 637 (2006).

Because sufficient evidence was presented via the testimony of the victim regarding the defendant's attack with a screwdriver, which was corroborated by the defendant's own admissions at trial, the defendant's simple battery conviction was upheld on appeal; moreover, the defendant's characterization of the incident as one involving mutual argument did not in and of itself justify the actions. Rainey v. State, 286 Ga. App. 682, 649 S.E.2d 871 (2007).

There was sufficient evidence to support defendant's conviction for armed robbery because the state met the state's burden of proving that defendant took the property of another from the person or the immediate presence of another by use of an offensive weapon; the state offered the testimony of the bus counter clerk as to the facts of the robbery and as to the identification of defendant as the gunman. That testimony, standing alone, was sufficient to support defendant's conviction. Range v. State, 289 Ga. App. 727, 658 S.E.2d 245 (2008).

Identification of officer sufficient. — Police detective's in-court identification of defendant as the drug seller was sufficient to sustain conviction. James v. State, 233 Ga. App. 516, 504 S.E.2d 533 (1998).

Undercover agent's in-court identification of defendant as the seller of crack cocaine was sufficient to authorize the jury's guilty verdict. Ivory v. State, 234 Ga. App. 858, 508 S.E.2d 421 (1998).

Although a videotape of the transaction provided helpful confirmation of an undercover officer's identification of the defendant as the seller of cocaine, the testimony of the officer, by itself, was sufficient to support the jury's determination of guilt. Williams v. State, 277 Ga. App. 633, 627 S.E.2d 196 (2006).

Testimony of a single witness is generally sufficient to establish a fact. Barber v. State, 236 Ga. App. 294, 512 S.E.2d 48 (1999); Moton v. State, 242 Ga. App. 397, 530 S.E.2d 31 (2000); Cecil v. State, 263 Ga. App. 48, 587 S.E.2d 197 (2003).

Victim's testimony sufficient. — Victim's statement in a videotape made by police that the victim was 16-years-old at the time defendant gave the victim marijuana and alcohol was sufficient to support defendant's conviction.

tion for contributing to the delinquency of a minor as the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact, such as the fact that the victim was a minor at the time the acts giving rise to the charge occurred. Little v. State, 262 Ga. App. 377, 585 S.E.2d 677 (2003).

Evidence was sufficient to support convictions against defendant for aggravated assault in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21 and aggravated battery in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24 since the victim identified defendant from a pre-trial photograph and from an in-court identification, a codefendant and a witness testified against defendant, and the gun that was used to shoot the victim was found near the car with shell casings in the car; it was noted that the testimony of just the victim was sufficient to establish a fact pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Dunn v. State, 262 Ga. App. 643, 586 S.E.2d 352 (2003).

Victim's testimony, alone, was sufficient to establish the time frame for the charged offenses. Henry v. State, 274 Ga. App. 139, 616 S.E.2d 883 (2005).

Evidence supported convictions for armed robbery and aggravated assault since after using defendant's mother's telephone number, defendant contacted the victim and arranged a meeting to buy shoes, the victim identified the car defendant was driving, which was registered to defendant's mother, the victim identified defendant from a pre-trial police photo array and at trial, and where, at the meeting arranged by the victim was shot in the face and defendant then rummaged through the victim's car where the victim kept the shoes. Waddell v. State, 277 Ga. App. 772, 627 S.E.2d 840 (2006), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 731, 2006 U.S. LEXIS 9304, 166 L.Ed.2d 567 (2006).

In a case in which the victim was allegedly bound and beaten by the defendant and thrown into a camper, which the defendant towed to a motel, the victim's testimony was sufficient to support a conviction for kidnapping with bodily injury under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-40 as the testimony of a single witness was all that was necessary under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Johnson v. State, 281 Ga. App. 7, 635 S.E.2d 278 (2006).

Trial court properly denied the defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, and the defendant's rape conviction was upheld on appeal, as the victim's testimony at trial that the defendant's sexual organ penetrated hers after telling the defendant to stop was sufficient in and of itself, and no evidence was presented that directly contradicted this statement. Scott v. State, 281 Ga. App. 106, 635 S.E.2d 582 (2006).

Despite the defendant's contentions that insufficient evidence as to a child's presence in the room when the victim was accosted required reversal of a cruelty to children conviction, such conviction was upheld, supported by the victim's testimony notifying the defendant of the presence of the child before the defendant fired a shot next to the victim's head. Price v. State, 281 Ga. App. 844, 637 S.E.2d 468 (2006).

Victim's testimony alone was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to establish the elements of a charge against the defendant of child molestation, in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a), as the victim testified that while she was at the defendant's home visiting his daughter, he requested that she kiss him and have sexual intercourse with him, and that he showed her his erect penis; there was also testimony from a jail nurse who confirmed that the defendant had a tattoo on his penis as described by the victim, and there was an internet instant-message conversation between the defendant and the victim, during which he apologized to her for his actions. Hammontree v. State, 283 Ga. App. 736, 642 S.E.2d 412 (2007).

Defendant's family violence battery conviction was affirmed on appeal as testimony from the victim, standing alone, describing the defendant's attack, when coupled with testimony regarding two prior incidents, sufficiently supported the conviction. Simmons v. State, 285 Ga. App. 129, 645 S.E.2d 622 (2007).

Despite the defendant's claim that the victim's testimony was too uncertain to support a conviction for aggravated sexual battery, the conviction was upheld on appeal as: (1) it was not for the appeals court to determine or question how the jury resolved any apparent conflicts or uncertainties in the evidence; (2) in general, the testimony of the victim was sufficient to establish a fact; and (3) corroboration was not required, and if corroboration were, the bite mark on the defendant's shoulder, which was testified to by the victim, provided sufficient corroboration. Boyt v. State, 286 Ga. App. 460, 649 S.E.2d 589 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to support armed robbery conviction since the victim testified that defendant took the victim's cell phone while defendant pointed a gun at the victim and threatened to shoot the victim; under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact. Burden v. State, 290 Ga. App. 734, 660 S.E.2d 481 (2008).

Sufficient evidence existed to support a defendant's convictions for incest and child molestation with regard to actions the defendant took toward the defendant's own children based on the children's recorded police interviews that were played for the jury; the testimony from a licensed clinical social worker who was admitted as an expert in child sexual abuse and the abuse's effect on children; and the testimony of the pediatric nurse practitioner who examined the victims and stated that, although the victims' physical exams were normal, the results were consistent with their reports of sexual abuse. The victims' testimony, standing alone, would have been sufficient to support the convictions; therefore, the trial court did not err by denying the defendant's motion for a directed verdict. Hubert v. State, 297 Ga. App. 71, 676 S.E.2d 436 (2009).

Sufficient evidence was presented to support a defendant's conviction for armed robbery because the victim, a taxi driver, identified the defendant as one of the perpetrators based, inter alia, on the victim's knowledge of the defendant from living in the same townhome complex; a single witness's testimony was sufficient to establish a fact under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Troutman v. State, 297 Ga. App. 196, 676 S.E.2d 836 (2009).

Because O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 provided that a victim's testimony, standing alone, was sufficient, the victim's testimony that defendant twice shot at the victim was sufficient to find defendant guilty of violating O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) despite testimony to the contrary. Hartley v. State, 299 Ga. App. 534, 683 S.E.2d 109 (2009).

Testimony of rape victim sufficient. — Evidence was more than sufficient to authorize a jury's verdict that the defendant was guilty, beyond a reasonable doubt, of rape because the victim's testimony that "it hurt" when the defendant pushed his penis in her vagina and that he threatened to put her family out of his house if she told her parents or if she refused sexual contact was more than sufficient evidence of force; the jury was authorized to consider that the victim failed to initially disclose the incidents because she was fearful of the defendant and that the defendant yelled at the victim when she moved during intercourse as additional evidence of his forcible acts, and the victim's testimony, together with her immediate and consistent outcry to her father, law enforcement, and an emergency room pediatrician, provided the jury with ample evidence of penetration. Matlock v. State, 302 Ga. App. 173, 690 S.E.2d 489 (2010).

Testimony of single informant sufficient to sustain conviction. — Because the informant's testimony was the only testimony in which defendant was identified as the person who sold the methamphetamine to the informant in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31, there was sufficient evidence to support the conviction; under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the testimony of one witness was sufficient to establish defendant's identity. Vasquez v. State, 275 Ga. App. 548, 621 S.E.2d 764 (2005).

Testimony of motorist sufficient. — Motorist's identification of defendant as the driver of a pick-up truck that hit the motorist's vehicle and then drove away was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to establish defendant's identity for purposes of defendant's conviction for leaving the scene of an accident and following too closely, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 40-6-270(a)(1) and 40-6-49. Craig v. State, 276 Ga. App. 329, 623 S.E.2d 518 (2005).

Officer's testimony sufficient. — Because the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact, and there was no requirement that an actual exchange of money for drugs be witnessed by more than one person or be recorded on videotape, the defendant's sale of cocaine conviction was upheld on appeal, based on a law enforcement agent's actions of handing the defendant $40 in exchange for two pieces of a substance that tested positive for cocaine. Hicks v. State, 281 Ga. App. 217, 635 S.E.2d 830 (2006).

When a deputy testified that the defendant resisted the deputy's efforts to break up a prison fight, then turned on the deputy, punched the deputy, and swung at the deputy repeatedly, injuring the deputy, there was sufficient evidence of mutiny in a penal institution and felony obstruction of an officer; the trial court was authorized under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-6 to infer from the circumstances that the defendant both knowingly and willfully obstructed the deputy by the use of violence and intended to cause the deputy serious bodily injury by striking the deputy with a fist, and under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 testimony of a single witness was sufficient. Butler v. State, 284 Ga. App. 802, 644 S.E.2d 898 (2007).

Sufficient evidence existed to support a finding that the arresting officer had a clear and unobstructed view of the defendant not wearing a seat belt as required by O.C.G.A. § 40-8-76.1(f), based solely on that officer's testimony, as the testimony of a single witness was sufficient to establish a fact. Schramm v. State, 286 Ga. App. 156, 648 S.E.2d 392 (2007).

Given that two officers testified that the officers saw the defendant, in plain view, packaging 35 grams of cocaine and 94 grams of marijuana into smaller packages, and the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact, the defendant's convictions for trafficking in cocaine and possession of marijuana with the intent to distribute were upheld on appeal. King v. State, 289 Ga. App. 461, 657 S.E.2d 570 (2008).

Testimony of arresting officer sufficient to convict. — Defendant was properly convicted of felony possession of marijuana as a deputy sheriff testified that the defendant admitted that the marijuana found in the trunk of a rental car belonged to the defendant. Even though the defendant denied saying this, or possessing the drugs, the credibility of witnesses was for the jury to determine, and under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the testimony of a single witness was sufficient to establish the facts. McKinney v. State, 293 Ga. App. 419, 667 S.E.2d 210 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's convictions for obstruction of a police officer and other related crimes, there was sufficient evidence to support the convictions based on the single testimony of the officer involved. Because it was the function of the jury to determine the credibility of witnesses and weigh any conflict in the evidence, the testimony of a single witness is generally sufficient to establish a fact; therefore, the testimony of the police officer who was involved in the altercation with the defendant was sufficient evidence for the jury to convict the defendant. Whatley v. State, 296 Ga. App. 72, 673 S.E.2d 510 (2009).

Testimony of police investigator sufficient. — Police investigator's testimony that the defendant held a three-inch knife to the investigator's throat amply supported a conviction under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Lloyd v. State, 280 Ga. 187, 625 S.E.2d 771 (2006).

Victim's testimony that the defendant raped the victim at knifepoint, standing alone, was sufficient to establish the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Johnson v. State, 280 Ga. App. 341, 634 S.E.2d 134 (2006).

Under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the victim's testimony that the defendant pulled a knife out of the defendant's pocket with the defendant's right hand and lunged at the victim was sufficient in itself to support convictions for aggravated assault and carrying a concealed weapon under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21 and 16-11-126. Testimony that the defendant had arthritis in the right hand at most created a conflict in the evidence, as there was also testimony that the defendant, a carpenter, used both hands in the defendant's trade. Carder v. State, 291 Ga. App. 265, 661 S.E.2d 632 (2008).

Victim testified that as the victim walked in front of the defendant's car, the defendant hit the gas pedal, throwing the victim onto the hood; accelerated when the victim asked the defendant to stop; and slammed on the brakes, causing the victim to slide down the hood, and the victim's legs and foot to be broken as they went underneath the car. As the victim's testimony alone was sufficient to establish these facts under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the defendant was properly convicted of aggravated battery. Cash v. State, 293 Ga. App. 702, 667 S.E.2d 691 (2008).

Victim's testimony that the defendant kicked in the door of the victim's residence, entered without permission, pointed a shotgun at the victim, and threatened to shoot the victim if the victim did not give defendant money was sufficient in and of itself to support the defendant's conviction for armed robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime. Reed v. State, 293 Ga. App. 479, 668 S.E.2d 1 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, there was sufficient evidence to support the conviction based on the victim's testimony that the defendant was the individual who approached the victim's car with a gun and ordered the victim out, causing the victim to be in fear. Kashamba v. State, 295 Ga. App. 540, 672 S.E.2d 512 (2009).

Victim's uncorroborated testimony that the defendant entered the victim's home by removing the back door from the door's hinges, ordered the victim at gunpoint to get in the defendant's truck, and did not bring the victim back home for hours, was sufficient to convict the defendant of burglary and kidnapping. Hollis v. State, 295 Ga. App. 529, 672 S.E.2d 487 (2009).

With regard to a defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, there was sufficient evidence to support the conviction based on the victim's testimony that the defendant was the individual who approached the victim's car with a gun and ordered the victim out, causing the victim to be in fear. Kashamba v. State, 295 Ga. App. 540, 672 S.E.2d 512 (2009).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for aggravated child molestation, child molestation, and false imprisonment with regard to allegations that the defendant forced a romantic friend's minor child to perform oral sex on the defendant several times over a three year period, based on the testimony of the victim (which alone was sufficient), the videotaped forensic interview of the victim, the testimony of the police investigator and the victim's mother concerning what the victim told them, as well as the testimony of the victim's siblings, who were eyewitnesses to one incident. Further, the testimony of the victim that the defendant locked the victim in the house and would not let the victim leave supported the conviction on the false imprisonment charge. Metts v. State, 297 Ga. App. 330, 677 S.E.2d 377 (2009).

In child molestation case, the victim's testimony did not require corroboration because: (1) the defendant's 15-year-old granddaughter testified that the defendant molested her in his home and in his pickup truck between the time she was in kindergarten until about the time she was in the sixth grade; (2) a physician testified that she found physical evidence that was consistent with penetration and sexual abuse; (3) an older granddaughter testified that she was molested by defendant 25 years ago; and (4) evidence was presented that defendant molested his five-year-old great granddaughter. Delk v. State, 274 Ga. App. 261, 619 S.E.2d 310 (2005).

Defendant's convictions of two counts of child molestation required no corroboration and could be sustained based on the testimony of the victims alone, each of whom testified that the defendant fondled the victim's breasts or private parts. Hill v. State, 295 Ga. App. 360, 671 S.E.2d 853 (2008).

Testimony alone sufficient to prove mental suffering. Fabe v. Floyd, 199 Ga. App. 322, 405 S.E.2d 265, cert. denied, 199 Ga. App. 906, 405 S.E.2d 265 (1991) (on motion for rehearing).

Statute not controlling in federal court. — Georgia law requires independent corroboration of an accomplice's testimony; this Georgia rule is not controlling upon collateral review by a federal court. Llewellyn v. Stynchcombe, 609 F.2d 194 (5th Cir. 1980).

Juvenile proceedings. — Requirement of independent corroboration of an accomplice's testimony now set forth in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 is applicable to a juvenile proceeding. In re J.H.M., 202 Ga. App. 79, 413 S.E.2d 515 (1991).

Basis for principle of requiring corroboration in a felony when the only witness is an accomplice is to safeguard against one person falsely maintaining that the person and the defendant were accomplices to commit the crime. Coleman v. State, 227 Ga. 769, 183 S.E.2d 379 (1971).

At common law one could be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice; in Georgia, in felony cases, when the only witness is an accomplice, the accomplice's testimony must be corroborated and at common law, the doctrine did not amount to a rule of evidence, but merely to a "counsel of caution" given by the judge to a jury.

LaFrays v. State, 48 Ga. App. 133, 172 S.E. 155 (1933).

If witness not accomplice. — Unless a witness sought to be impeached is an accomplice of the accused, the witness's testimony, without any corroboration, may authorize the conviction of the accused in a felony case. Preston v. State, 42 Ga. App. 280, 155 S.E. 774 (1930).

Uncorroborated testimony of accomplice is not sufficient to authorize a felony conviction. Holton v. State, 61 Ga. App. 654, 7 S.E.2d 202 (1940); Dye v. State, 77 Ga. App. 517, 48 S.E.2d 742 (1948); Potts v. State, 86 Ga. App. 779, 72 S.E.2d 553 (1952); Edenfield v. State, 95 Ga. App. 2, 96 S.E.2d 533 (1957); Harris v. State, 96 Ga. Defendant may not be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 418, 314 S.E.2d 210 (1984).

Rule applies only when accomplice is sole witness. — Rule that a felony conviction is not to be had on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice applies only when the accomplice is the sole witness upon whose testimony the state relies. McDaniel v. State, 158 Ga. App. 320, 279 S.E.2d 762 (1981).

Corroboration of accomplice not necessary to sustain a misdemeanor conviction. Parsons v. State, 43 Ga. App. 197 (1871); Grant v. State, 89 Ga. 393, 15 S.E. 488 (1892); Martin v. State, 17 Ga. When several crimes are charged, each offense must be corroborated if accomplices are involved. Whitfield v. State, 159 Ga. App. 398, 283 S.E.2d 627 (1981).

Distinction between general and specific testimony. — Distinction must be made between evidence which tends to prove the truth of the accomplice's general testimony and that which tends to prove the identity and participation of the accused. Gaudin v. State, 133 Ga. App. 252, 211 S.E.2d 189 (1974); Boggus v. State, 136 Ga. App. 917, 222 S.E.2d 686 (1975); Hill v. State, 236 Ga. 831, 225 S.E.2d 281 (1976); Vaughn v. State, 139 Ga. Corroboration as to material facts. — If the accomplice is corroborated in material parts of the accomplice's testimony, then the accomplice may be believed by the jury as to other material parts as to which there is no corroboration. Pitts v. State, 128 Ga. App. 434, 197 S.E.2d 495 (1973); Quaid v. State, 132 Ga. App. 478, 208 S.E.2d 336 (1974).

Partial corroboration. — Simply because an accomplice's testimony is corroborated in most details, it does not follow that the accomplice's testimony alone as to the identity and participation of the accused is sufficient to justify conviction. Nix v. State, 133 Ga. App. 417, 211 S.E.2d 26 (1974); Gaudin v. State, 133 Ga. App. 252, 211 S.E.2d 189 (1974); Hill v. State, 236 Ga. 831, 225 S.E.2d 281 (1976); Vaughn v. State, 139 Ga. Two crimes in unified transaction. — When armed robbery was an integral part of a murder transaction and was simultaneous with the murder, independent corroboration of the murder is adequate to corroborate an accomplice's testimony as to the entire unified transaction including the armed robbery. Wilson v. State, 235 Ga. 470, 219 S.E.2d 756 (1975).

Witness as party. — Fact that the witness is a party and is a prisoner convicted of a crime does not afford any basis to disregard the witness's testimony. Balkcom v. Vickers, 220 Ga. 345, 138 S.E.2d 868 (1964).

Testimony of victim. — When the alleged victim of the attack was the only witness to positively identify the defendant as the perpetrator, but when the victim's testimony was in many material respects corroborated, the jury had the right to believe the victim's testimony. Finney v. State, 51 Ga. App. 545, 181 S.E. 144 (1935).

While the victim had just pulled into the parking lot of the victim's employer when defendant pointed a gun at the victim and demanded the victim's wallet, the victim's positive identification of defendant as the robber was sufficient to establish defendant's guilt and to support defendant's armed robbery conviction. Parks v. State, 257 Ga. App. 25, 570 S.E.2d 350 (2002).

Because the victim's statement of sexual abuse was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to convict defendant of kidnapping with bodily injury, aggravated child molestation, rape, aggravated sodomy, aggravated assault, and possession of a knife during the commission of a crime, the victim's testimony did not have to be corroborated by physical evidence. Gartrell v. State, 272 Ga. App. 726, 613 S.E.2d 226 (2005).

Evidence that the defendant intentionally struck the victim with a stick and that either the defendant or one of the other parties to the assault intentionally struck the victim with their fists and a concrete block supported an aggravated assault conviction; further, although the victim was the only person who testified about having been hit with a concrete block, and was not sure which of the victim's attackers struck that blow, this testimony was sufficient to establish that the victim was hit with a concrete block because it made no difference whether an accomplice, and not the defendant, assaulted the victim in the manner alleged in the indictment. Oliver v. State, 278 Ga. App. 425, 629 S.E.2d 63 (2006).

Even if a burglary victim had not testified that the checks were missing, an intent to steal could have been inferred since the evidence showed the defendant's unlawful entry into the building of another where valuable goods were kept, and the trial court did not err in charging the jury that it was allowed to "infer" an intent to steal in the context of burglary; while the defendant denied the burglary upon a defense of alibi, the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact, and the defendant's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence was without merit. Studiemeyer v. State, 278 Ga. App. 756, 629 S.E.2d 593 (2006).

Victim's testimony as to the non-consensual and forcible nature of the victim's sexual contact with the defendant, standing alone, was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction of rape in violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-6-1(a)(1). Brown v. State, 293 Ga. App. 633, 667 S.E.2d 899 (2008).

While the state failed to produce a weapon, fingerprints, or other physical evidence tying defendant to the crimes, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the jury was authorized to accept the cashier's identification testimony; accordingly, the evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for armed robbery. Clowers v. State, 299 Ga. App. 576, 683 S.E.2d 46 (2009).

The testimony of an armed robbery victim and the victim's love interest, who were eyewitnesses to the defendant's crimes of armed robbery and aggravated assault, and who separately identified the defendant as the perpetrator of the robbery and assault, standing alone, was sufficient to establish the defendant's identity as the perpetrator. Crawford v. State, 301 Ga. App. 633, 688 S.E.2d 409 (2009).

Jury could have found the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of two counts of aggravated assault because the victim's testimony that the defendant pointed a gun at the victim and that a shot was subsequently fired wounding the victim was sufficient circumstantial evidence that the defendant committed a violent injury to the victim. Wright v. State, 302 Ga. App. 101, 690 S.E.2d 220 (2010).

Testimony of child victim. — Even though child victim's testimony was the only direct evidence proving the essential elements, the child's testimony was sufficient to authorize defendant's conviction. Cantrell v. State, 231 Ga. App. 629, 500 S.E.2d 386 (1998).

Georgia law does not require corroboration of a child molestation victim's testimony. Atkins v. State, 243 Ga. App. 489, 533 S.E.2d 152 (2000).

In a child molestation prosecution, the victim's testimony that defendant touched the victim "down there" was sufficient to support defendant's conviction. Kidd v. State, 257 Ga. App. 744, 572 S.E.2d 80 (2002).

Victim's testimony alone was sufficient to prove defendant guilty of child molestation (O.C.G.A. § 16-6-4(a)) and aggravated child molestation (O.C.G.A. § 16-6-22.2(b)), pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. The testimony of the victim's cousin, two school friends, and the interviewing detective, was admissible as substantive evidence under the Child Hear-say Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Vaughn v. State, 301 Ga. App. 391, 687 S.E.2d 651 (2009).

Victim need not be corroborated. — There is no requirement that the testimony of the victim of an alleged assault be corroborated in order to legally convict the accused. Gay v. State, 143 Ga. App. 857, 240 S.E.2d 226 (1977); Samuels v. State, 223 Ga. App. 275, 477 S.E.2d 414 (1996).

When the victim's testimony established each and every element of the four offenses, the victim's testimony, alone, was sufficient to support a finding of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Thompson v. State, 203 Ga. App. 339, 416 S.E.2d 755, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 908, 416 S.E.2d 755 (1992).

Testimony of three victims of armed robbery was sufficient to support conviction, and the testimony did not require corroboration. Johnson v. State, 213 Ga. App. 194, 444 S.E.2d 334 (1994).

When a third person testifies that a witness for the prosecution was an accomplice of the third person, and that the defendant was not a party to the crime, the testimony of the witness for the prosecution may not be excluded on the principle of requiring corroboration in a felony since the only witness is an accomplice. Coleman v. State, 227 Ga. 769, 183 S.E.2d 379 (1971).

Subscribing witnesses. — Bill of sale to personalty, though attested by two subscribing witnesses, is admissible in evidence upon due proof of the document's execution by only one of the witnesses, without calling or accounting for the other. Cooper v. O'Brien, 98 Ga. 773, 26 S.E. 470 (1896).

Transaction with deceased person. — Generally, the testimony of one witness is sufficient to establish a fact, even though such witness may be testifying to a transaction or communications with a deceased person. Donald v. Groves, 160 Ga. 163, 126 S.E. 583 (1925).

Grounds for new trial. — Motion to rule out testimony of a witness who is a coindictor on the ground that such testimony shows the witness to be an accomplice is not a legal ground of objection, but the argument can be considered in connection with the general grounds of a motion for a new trial which contend that there is insufficient corroboration to warrant a conviction. Patterson v. State, 109 Ga. App. 582, 137 S.E.2d 74 (1964).

Crime of illegally selling drugs is not one of those listed in this statute which would require the testimony of a second witness to support a conviction. Crews v. State, 133 Ga. App. 764, 213 S.E.2d 34 (1975); Johnson v. State, 153 Ga. App. 771, 266 S.E.2d 551 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8).

Corroboration of facts in perjury prosecution. — State complied with O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 in producing more than two fact witnesses to testify about the facts alleged to have been falsely sworn to, i.e., the underlying acts the defendants used as a basis to swear out arrest warrants, but the state was not required to produce opinion witnesses to testify that the defendants swore falsely and committed perjury. Watson v. State, 235 Ga. App. 381, 509 S.E.2d 87 (1998).

Witness testimony about inaccurate date-time stamp. — Trial court did not err in admitting under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-48(b) still photographs taken from an ATM's videotapes in a defendant's theft by deception prosecution because while a bank investigator testified that the date-time stamp was inaccurate by approximately one hour, such an inaccuracy went to the weight to be given the evidence but not to the evidence's admissibility. Parks v. State, 294 Ga. App. 646, 669 S.E.2d 684 (2008).

Testimony was sufficient to sustain adjudication of child deprivation. — Juvenile court did not err in adjudicating a child deprived and granting temporary custody of the child to the Department of Family and Children Services because, under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, the testimony of the pediatrician, the detective, and the caseworker were sufficient to sustain the adjudication that the child was deprived. In the Interest of K.B., 302 Ga. App. 50, 690 S.E.2d 627 (2010).

Who Is an Accomplice

Test for determining. — Test for determining whether a witness is an accomplice is: “could the witness himself have been indicted for the offense, either as principal or as accessory?” Stone v. State, 118 Ga. 705, 45 S.E. 630, 98 Am. St. R. 145 (1903); Montiford v. State, 144 Ga. 582, 87 S.E. 797 (1916); LaFray v. State, 48 Ga. App. 133, 172 S.E. 115 (1933); Kearce v. State, 178 Ga. 220, 172 S.E. 643 (1934); Head v. State, 59 Ga. App. 451, 1 S.E.2d 227 (1939); Lanier v. State, 187 Ga. 534, 1 S.E.2d 405 (1939); Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 729, 227 S.E.2d 498 (1976), overruled on other grounds, Patterson v. State, 238 Ga. 204, 232 S.E.2d 233, cert. denied, 431 U.S. 970, 97 S. Ct. 2932, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1067 (1977).

O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 provides, in part, that in felony cases when the only witness is an accomplice, the testimony of a single witness is not sufficient. This rule has been applied to juvenile proceedings. In re A.Z., 301 Ga. App. 524, 687 S.E.2d 887 (2009), cert. denied, No. S10C0492, 2010 Ga. LEXIS 335 (Ga. 2010).

Accessory before the fact and principals in the first and second degrees are all accomplices. Kearce v. State, 178 Ga. 220, 172 S.E. 643 (1934); Stebbins v. State, 78 Ga. App. 534, 51 S.E.2d 592 (1949).

Accessory after the fact is not an accomplice within the meaning of this statute. Allen v. State, 74 Ga. 769 (1885); Springer v. State, 102 Ga. 447, 30 S.E. 971 (1897); Kearce v. State, 178 Ga. 220, 172 S.E. 643 (1934); Mills v. State, 193 Ga. 139, 17 S.E.2d 719 (1941); Moore v. State, 240 Ga. 210, 240 S.E.2d 68 (1977); Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 418, 314 S.E.2d 210 (1984); Givens v. State, 273 Ga. 818, 546 S.E.2d 509 (2001) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8).

Association in crime. — An accomplice is one who is associated with others in the commission of a crime, all being principals. Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 800, 16 S.E.2d 504 (1941).

An accomplice is defined as one who is associated with others in the commission of a crime, all being principals. Johnson v. State, 153 Ga. App. 771, 266 S.E.2d 551 (1980).

Aiding and abetting. — An “accomplice” is one who is present at the commission of a crime, aiding and abetting the perpetrator, or who could be convicted of the crime as an accessory before the fact. Venable v. State, 56 Ga. App. 366, 192 S.E. 646 (1937).

An “accomplice” is one who is present at the commission of the crime, aiding and abetting the perpetrator, or who could be convicted of such crime as an accessory before the fact. Lanier v. State, 187 Ga. 534, 1 S.E.2d 405 (1939).

Definition of an accomplice is one who was present at the commission of a crime, aiding and abetting the perpetrator. Milton v. State, 248 Ga. 192, 282 S.E.2d 90 (1981).

Participation in the commission of the same criminal act and in the execution of a common criminal intent is necessary to render one criminal, in a legal sense, an accomplice of another. Venable v. State, 56 Ga. App. 366, 192 S.E. 646 (1937); Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 800, 16 S.E.2d 504 (1941); Cooper v. State, 197 Ga. 611, 30 S.E.2d 177 (1944); Johnson v. State, 153 Ga. App. 771, 266 S.E.2d 551 (1980); Milton v. State, 248 Ga. 192, 282 S.E.2d 90 (1981).

An accessory after the fact is not an accomplice. Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 418, 314 S.E.2d 210 (1984).

Voluntary participation in the commission of the same criminal act is necessary to make one an accomplice; a participation that is the result of the will of another is not such participation as will make such a participant guilty. Perryman v. State, 63 Ga. App. 819, 12 S.E.2d 388 (1940); Fortner v. State, 96 Ga. App. 855, 101 S.E.2d 908 (1958); Aimar v. State, 116 Ga. App. 204, 156 S.E.2d 367 (1967), overruled on other grounds, Motes v. State, 161 Ga. App. 173, 288 S.E.2d 256 (1982).

Criminal intent is a necessary ingredient of crime and is essential to render one an accomplice. It follows that when this element is absent, one is not an accomplice. Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 800, 16 S.E.2d 504 (1941); Johnson v. State, 153 Ga. App. 771, 266 S.E.2d 551 (1980).

Presence at scene of crime. — Although a witness may have been present at or near the scene of the crime, and may have concealed the fact for a time, yet if the witness did not in any way aid, abet, procure, or participate in the crime, the witness is not an accomplice. Venable v. State, 56 Ga. App. 366, 192 S.E. 646 (1937).

Witness guilty only of concealing evidence of a crime after the crime's commission is not an “accomplice” within the meaning of this statute. Ford v. State, 232 Ga. 511, 207 S.E.2d 494 (1974) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8).

Joint indictment and plea of guilty. — Neither the joinder of a witness in an indictment with the defendant, nor a plea of guilty entered by the witness, necessarily makes the witness an accomplice with the defendant so as to require corroboration of the witness's testimony on the latter's trial. Maddox v. State, 131 Ga. App. 86, 205 S.E.2d 31 (1974).

Parties jointly indicted. — Statute has no application to one who, while jointly indicted with the accused, is not shown by the evidence to have been the accused's accomplice or to have participated in the crime. Walker v. State, 118 Ga. 757, 45 S.E. 608 (1903); Davis v. State, 122 Ga. 564, 50 S.E. 376 (1905).

Evidence of conviction or plea of guilty is admissible to show the guilt of the accomplice and thereby show the status or relationship of the parties and thus lay the foundation for determining the character of testimony against the defendant and whether or not corroboration thereof is required. Dye v. State, 77 Ga. App. 517, 48 S.E.2d 742 (1948).

Concealment of crime constitutes complicity. — Fact that witness concealed the crime for which defendant was on trial made the witness an accomplice within the meaning of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Collins v. State, 251 Ga. 521, 307 S.E.2d 496 (1983).

Accomplice is one who acts as result of free will and not of duress or coercion. Milton v. State, 248 Ga. 192, 282 S.E.2d 90 (1981).

Action was not free will of an accomplice. — Trial court did not err by allowing the uncorroborated testimony of a witness to be admitted against two defendants as, contrary to the defendants' contentions, the witness was not an accomplice since the evidence authorized the jury to have found that the witness was coerced into participating in the racketeering crimes for which the defendants were convicted. Overton v. State, 295 Ga. App. 223, 671 S.E.2d 507 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0654, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 212 (Ga. 2009).

Indictment for same crime does not make witness an accomplice. — Fact that witness was indicted for the same murder as the defendant does not, without more, make the witness an accomplice. Collins v. State, 251 Ga. 521, 307 S.E.2d 496 (1983).

Fact that witness was jointly indicted with defendant on trial does not of itself render such witness an accomplice. Milton v. State, 248 Ga. 192, 282 S.E.2d 90 (1981).

In sex crimes generally, if the victim is able to and does consent to the crime, such person is an accomplice within the meaning of this statute. Curry v. State, 87 Ga. App. 451, 74 S.E.2d 249 (1953); Neel v. State, 140 Ga. App. 691, 231 S.E.2d 394 (1976); Andrews v. State, 144 Ga. App. 243, 240 S.E.2d 744 (1977); Morris v. State, 150 Ga. App. 310, 257 S.E.2d 378 (1979) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8).

Testimony of a consenting partner to a sexual offense needs no corroboration. Babb v. State, 157 Ga. App. 757, 278 S.E.2d 495 (1981); thus, Aimar v. State, 116 Ga. App. 204, 156 S.E.2d 367 (1967), and any other cases indicating that corroborative testimony must be introduced in cases involving consenting partners in order to convict of the offense of sodomy are overruled. Motes v. State, 161 Ga. App. 173, 288 S.E.2d 256 (1982).

Woman who consents to incestuous act of sexual intercourse is an accomplice of the man. Yother v. State, 120 Ga. 204, 47 S.E. 555 (1904); thus, Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 800, 16 S.E.2d 504 (1941); Wilkins v. State, 96 Ga. App. 841, 101 S.E.2d 912 (1958).

Testimony of a consenting partner to a sexual offense needs no corroboration. Babb v. State, 157 Ga. App. 757, 278 S.E.2d 495 (1981); thus, Aimar v. State, 116 Ga. App. 204, 156 S.E.2d 367 (1967), and any other cases indicating that corroborative testimony must be introduced in cases involving consenting partners in order to convict of the offense of sodomy are overruled. Motes v. State, 161 Ga. App. 173, 288 S.E.2d 256 (1982).

Female under the age of consent cannot be convicted of incestuous adultery and thus cannot be an accomplice. Mosley v. State, 65 Ga. App. 800, 16 S.E.2d 504 (1941).

Victim of seduction is not an accomplice. Keller v. State, 102 Ga. 506, 31 S.E. 92 (1897).

Informer for law enforcement agency who was cooperating with law enforcement at the time the evidence against the defendant was being gathered was not an accomplice. Marshall v. State, 98 Ga. App. 429, 105 S.E.2d 748 (1958).

Principal thief is not an accomplice of the receiver of stolen goods. Birdsong v. State, 120 Ga. 850, 48 S.E. 329 (1904).

Thief and one who receives stolen property from the thief are not accomplices. Stover v. State, 158 Ga. App. 644, 281 S.E.2d 642 (1981).

If a thief and a receiver of stolen goods have acted pursuant to a common criminal enterprise, they are accomplices. Selvidge v. State, 252 Ga. 243, 313 S.E.2d 84, cert. denied, 469 U.S. 823, 105 S. Ct. 99, 83 L. Ed. 2d 44 (1984).

Presenter of check was not accomplice. — Uttering element was established by sufficient evidence that the defendant's friend presented the check to a bank for cashing at the defendant's behest; the trial court properly charged the jury on the corroboration requirement for accomplice testimony even though the jury determined that the friend was not an accomplice. King v. State, 277 Ga. App. 190, 626 S.E.2d 161 (2006).

Buyer of whiskey is not an accomplice of the seller. Gamble v. State, 4 Ga. App. 845, 62 S.E. 544 (1908).

Person is not an accomplice to murder when the person does not know who the intended victim is or when the attempt on the victim's life is to be made, and the person does not in any way participate in or encourage the murder. Kilgore v. State, 251 Ga. 291, 305 S.E.2d 82 (1983).

Self incrimination. — Joint principals to a crime as accomplices are competent witnesses against each other, and while the one sought to be used as a witness has the right to claim the protection afforded by Ga. Const. 1983, Art. I, Sec. I, Para. XVI, providing that no person shall be competent to give testimony tending in any manner to criminate oneself, yet this constitutional guaranty is a personal privilege belonging to the witness and cannot be claimed for the witness for the benefit of another party. Dye v. State, 77 Ga. App. 517, 48 S.E.2d 742 (1948).

Sufficiency of Corroborating Evidence

Rules concerning extent of corroboration required are: (1) it is not essential that the testimony of the accomplice should be corroborated in every material particular; (2) it is not required that this corroboration shall of itself be sufficient to warrant a verdict, or that the testimony of the accomplice be corroborated in every material particular; (3) such corroborating circumstances need not be enough to amount to another witness or sufficient to support one to that extent; (4) slight evidence of corroboration connecting defendant with the crime is sufficient; and (5) the sufficiency of corroboration of the accomplice is entirely a matter for the jury. Quaid v. State, 132 Ga. App. 478, 208 S.E.2d 336 (1974).

Although a defendant may not be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, the corroborating evidence need not of itself be sufficient to warrant a conviction of the crime charged, the corroborating evidence may be circumstantial, and the sufficiency of the corroborating evidence is a matter for the jury to determine. An accomplice's testimony combined with a videotape of defendant in the front seat of a car while talking to a confidential police informant during a drug buy was sufficient corroboration to justify defendant's convictions for selling drugs. Etchison v. State, 266 Ga. App. 528, 597 S.E.2d 583 (2004).

Defendant's claim to the contrary notwithstanding, the record was replete with evidence corroborating the testimony of defendant's accomplice which identified defendant as one of the perpetrators of an armed robbery; there was no claim that a store clerk's opinion as to the identity of the perpetrators was unfounded, the clerk's testimony that the clerk heard a customer identify one of the perpetrators as defendant was undisputed res gestae, and the clerk's testimony that the clerk had been sprayed in the face with mace corroborated this aspect of the accomplice's testimony as well. Carter v. State, 266 Ga. App. 691, 598 S.E.2d 76 (2004).

Independent inference of defendant's guilt. — To sustain a conviction upon the testimony of an accomplice, there must be corroborating circumstances which in themselves and independently of the testimony of the accomplice directly connect the defendant with the crime, or lead to the inference that defendant is guilty. Childers v. State, 52 Ga. 106 (1874); McCrory v. State, 101 Ga. 779, 28 S.E. 92 (1897); Taylor v. State, 110 Ga. 150, 35 S.E. 161 (1900); Braxley v. State, 17 Ga. App. 196, 86 S.E. 425 (1915); *Allen v. App. 326, 283 S.E.2d 361 (1981).

Contrary to defendant's argument, the testimony of defendant's accomplice, corroborated by two witnesses, provided sufficient evidence for the jury to find defendant guilty; the jury did not have to find that the corroborating evidence was itself sufficient to support the verdict, or that that evidence matched the testimony of the accomplice in every detail, as slight evidence identifying defendant as a participant in the criminal act was sufficient corroboration. Mitchell v. State, 279 Ga. 158, 611 S.E.2d 15 (2005).

Testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact, and the defendant's conviction of burglary, O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1, was supported by sufficient evidence, including a neighbor's eyewitness testimony that the neighbor saw the defendant taking property out of the victim's house during the time when the burglary happened, which was corroborated by the discovery of an item of stolen property at the place where the defendant was residing, evidence which was entitled to even greater weight was the discovery of a business card from the defendant's probation officer at the victim's home. Walker v. State, 279 Ga. App. 390, 631 S.E.2d 413 (2006).

Corroboration must be independent of the accomplice's testimony, and the corroboration must connect the defendant to the crime or lead to the inference that the defendant is guilty. Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 418, 314 S.E.2d 210 (1984); Allen v. State, 175 Ga. App. 128, 333 S.E.2d 11 (1985); Hanson v. State, 193 Ga. App. 246, 387 S.E.2d 441 (1989); In re P.A.W., 224 Ga. App. 329, 480 S.E.2d 347 (1997).

Sufficient evidence supported defendant's felony murder conviction because the defendant's polygraph results, which the defendant stipulated to admitting at trial, corroborated the defendant's accomplice's inculpatory testimony. Thornton v. State, 279 Ga. 676, 620 S.E.2d 356 (2005).

Testimony of an accomplice must be corroborated by independent evidence as to the identity and participation of the accused which tends to connect the accused with the crime or leads to the inference that the accused is guilty. Gaddis v. Kemp, 638 F. Supp. 819 (S.D. Ga. 1986).

Evidence independent of accomplice's out-of-court statements constituted sufficient corroboration to support the verdict of guilty. Slaughter v. State, 257 Ga. 104, 355 S.E.2d 660 (1987), overruled on other grounds, Woodard v. State, 269 Ga. 317, 496 S.E.2d 896 (1998).

Connection of defendant with crime. — Corroborating circumstances must connect the defendant with the crime independently of the testimony of the accomplice, and this requirement is not met by merely corroborating the accomplice as to time, place, and circumstances of the transaction, if there is nothing to connect the defendant therewith. Lanier v. State, 187 Ga. 534, 1 S.E.2d 405 (1939); Newman v. State, 63 Ga. App. 417, 11 S.E.2d 248 (1940); Rozier v. State, 68 Ga. App. 797, 24 S.E.2d 137 (1943); Croker v. State, 101 Ga. Defendant's conduct before, during, and after the fatal strangulation of the victim including: (1) volunteering to kill the victim after an accomplice claimed that the victim's brother was responsible for the death of the accomplice's cousin; (2) participating in the strangulation death of the victim; (3) concealing the victim's dead body; and (4) disposing of the victim in the woods provided ample evidence to support defendant's guilt as a party to a malice murder and other crimes. Mitchell v. State, 279 Ga. 158, 611 S.E.2d 15 (2005).

Trial court did not err in entering judgments of conviction on defendant's three burglary convictions in two cases following jury verdicts finding defendant guilty of those offenses; the state introduced sufficient evidence apart from the testimony of defendant's accomplice to warrant convictions, primarily based on the three homeowners' identification of the property taken and the homeowners' testimony about the circumstances under which the relevant property went missing. Daniel v. State, 275 Ga. App. 70, 619 S.E.2d 770 (2005).

In an armed robbery prosecution, when an investigator who had viewed and heard a videotape of the crime, in which one of the perpetrators made a high-pitched yell, testified that, while at the jail, the officer heard defendant make a sound that was so much like the sound on the tape that, "it was unreal," this testimony authorized the jury to convict this defendant. Shannon v. State, 275 Ga. App. 550, 621 S.E.2d 540 (2005).

On appeal from the defendant's aggravated assault, possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, and first-degree criminal damage to property convictions, the court held that the testimony provided by two of the victims identifying the defendant as one of the perpetrators was sufficient to uphold the conviction as: (1) the testimony of a single witness was generally sufficient to establish a fact; and (2) under O.C.G.A. § 24-9-80, the credibility of a witness was a matter to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court. Reid v. State, 281 Ga. App. 640, 637 S.E.2d 62 (2006).

Passenger's testimony stating that the defendant passed marijuana to the passenger and told the passenger to discard the marijuana was sufficiently corroborated under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to support a finding of guilt of possession of more than an ounce of marijuana under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30; the marijuana found near the defendant was packaged the same way as the marijuana found outside the car, and it could, therefore, be inferred that the marijuana found outside the car had previously been in the back seat beside the defendant. Curtis v. State, 282 Ga. App. 322, 638 S.E.2d 773 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 203 (Ga. 2007).

While the testimony of an accomplice standing alone was insufficient to convict, when the evidence identifying two of the three defendants as participants to an armed robbery of a female victim was not limited to the uncorroborated testimony of the driver of the getaway car, the evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find beyond a reasonable doubt that both were guilty. Williamson v. State, 285 Ga. App. 779, 648 S.E.2d 118 (2007).

Defendant's convictions for possessing 28 grams or more of cocaine, possessing cocaine with intent to distribute, and possession of a firearm during the commission of a felony were upheld on appeal as sufficient evidence was presented via the direct testimony of the defendant's live-in girlfriend, which when combined with the evidence showing their joint constructive possession of the drugs and gun tended to connect and identify the defendant with the crimes charged. Allen v. State, 286 Ga. App. 469, 649 S.E.2d 583 (2007).

Despite a juvenile's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence, an adjudication entered by the juvenile court on a charge of attempted rape was proper because the charge was supported not only by the testimony of the victim, but also by the corroborating testimony offered by both the victim's neighbor, who witnessed the attack, and the victim's sister, who chased the juvenile away from the scene. In the Interest of J.L.H., 289 Ga. App. 30, 656 S.E.2d 160 (2007).

Despite waiving error regarding a show up identification because: (1) a victim's identification of the defendant as one of the perpetrators of a burglary, robbery, and battery was sufficient and non-suggestive; and (2) the corroborating testimony from the defendant's two accomplices was admissible to support the defendant's convictions, as both accomplices testified as to the defendant's involvement in the crimes, those convictions were upheld on appeal; thus a new trial was properly denied. Carr v. State, 289 Ga. App. 875, 658 S.E.2d 419 (2008).

With regard to a defendant's convictions on one count of enticing a child for indecent purposes, ten counts of child molestation, one count of aggravated child molestation, and three counts of cruelty to children in the first degree, regarding actions the defendant took toward three children and what the children were forced to do to each other by gunpoint while the defendant was a babysitter for the children, the state proved the charged offenses beyond a reasonable doubt based on the testimony of the three victims and the victims' videotaped forensic interviews. It was within the province of the jury to disbelieve the defendant's testimony that the defendant did not commit the charged crimes. Sullivan v. State, 295 Ga. App. 145, 671 S.E.2d 180 (2008), cert. denied, No. S09C0624, 2009 Ga. LEXIS 215 (Ga. 2009).

Trial court did not err in convicting the defendant of armed robbery of a restaurant, O.C.G.A. § 16-8-41(a), and possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime, O.C.G.A. § 16-11-106(b)(1), because sufficient evidence corroborated an accomplice's testimony that the defendant participated in the robbery; the driver corroborated that the driver picked the defendant up and dropped the defendant and the accomplice off at the defendant's residence near the restaurant about two-and-one-half hours before the robbery, the driver overheard the defendant speaking to the accomplice about committing a robbery, and two more witnesses confirmed that the two were together that evening. Jones v. State, 302 Ga. App. 147, 690 S.E.2d 460 (2010).

Accomplice to felony exception not applicable. — Sufficient evidence supported defendant's O.C.G.A. § 16-7-1 burglary conviction. The O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 "accomplice to a felony" exception did not apply and the defendant's codefendant's evidence was admissible (and subject to cross-examination) since a neighbor also testified that the neighbor saw the defendant enter the victim's home and remove items which were later recovered from the codefendant. Millirons v. State, 268 Ga. App. 644, 602 S.E.2d 346 (2004).

Knowledge and use of home security code. — Accomplice's testimony was sufficiently corroborated when the victim's body was found in a manner consistent with the accomplice's testimony, other witnesses corroborated various details of the accomplice's testimony, and defendant left town, as the accomplice testified defendant warned the accomplice to do likewise. Hinely v. State, 275 Ga. 777, 573 S.E.2d 66 (2002).

Sufficient evidence to convict the defendant of burglary, assault, and battery included an accomplice's testimony (sufficiently corroborated under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 by accomplice's knowledge and use of the defendant's grandmother's security code) that defendant hired an accomplice to kill the grandmother. Hill v. State, 268 Ga. App. 642, 602 S.E.2d 348 (2004).

Identity of accomplice alone is insufficient corroboration. — Under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, testimony which concerns the identity of other participants must be corroborated by some means independent of the testimony of the accomplice. One who is guilty of a crime in which one participated will always be able to relate the facts of the case and if the corroboration goes only to the truth of that history, without identifying the person accused, it is really no corroboration at all. Milton v. State, 248 Ga. 192, 282 S.E.2d 90 (1981).

Corroboration required by O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 need not be sufficient to warrant guilty verdict or prove every material element of the crime; it need only tend to connect and identify the defendant with the crime charged. Whitfield v. State, 159 Ga. App. 398, 283 S.E.2d 627 (1981); Raines v. State, 186 Ga. App. 239, 366 S.E.2d 841 (1988); Hanson v. State, 193 Ga. App. 246, 387 S.E.2d 441 (1989).

Accomplice's testimony was corroborated for bank robbery conviction since: (1) the security guard identified defendant as a perpetrator; (2) a baseball cap dropped by the gunman was scientifically linked to defendant; (3) defendant gave the accomplice a gun before the later robberies, and the gun the accomplice discarded after a later robbery was the weapon taken from the bank security guard at the bank robbery; and (4) a still photograph of the gunman made from the bank surveillance videotape was shown to the jury. Smith v. State, 257 Ga. App. 595,

Accomplice's identification of participants in crime must be corroborated. — When an accomplice's testimony is corroborated in material part, other uncorroborated testimony may be believed by the jury, with one important exception: testimony which concerns the identity of other participants must be corroborated by some means independent of the testimony of the accomplice. Cofer v. State, 166 Ga. App. 436, 304 S.E.2d 537 (1983).

Testimony of a defendant's accomplice implicating the defendant in several robberies was sufficiently corroborated based on the defendant's admission, eyewitnesses confirming that two persons participated, and the defendant's use of the victims' bank cards after the robberies. Thus, the defendant's participation as an accessory was sufficiently corroborated by evidence other than from the accomplice. Epps v. State, 296 Ga. App. 92, 673 S.E.2d 608 (2009).

Slight evidence sufficient to prove identity. — Corroborating evidence of testimony of an accomplice, albeit slight, tended to prove defendant's identity and participation in the crime and therefore was sufficient as a matter of law. Walker v. State, 57 Ga. App. 868, 197 S.E. 67 (1938); McPherson v. State, 96 Ga. App. 839, 101 S.E.2d 750 (1958); Trull v. State, 221 Ga. 442, 145 S.E.2d 242 (1965); Pitts v. State, 128 Ga. App. 434, 197 S.E.2d 495 (1973); Harris v. State, 165 Ga. App. 186, 299 S.E.2d 393 (1983); Williams v. State, 198 Ga. App. 725, 402 S.E.2d 796 (1991); Brown v. State, 199 Ga. App. 18, 404 S.E.2d 154 (1991); Tucker v. State, 205 Ga. App. 683, 423 S.E.2d 422 (1992); Young v. State, 213 Ga. App. 278, 444 S.E.2d 598 (1994); Knott v. State, 225 Ga. App. 604, 484 S.E.2d 342 (1997).

Slight evidence of corroboration, which may be entirely circumstantial, that connects a defendant with the crime satisfies the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, and the sufficiency of the corroboration of an accomplice's testimony is peculiarly a matter for the jury; thus, the evidence presented at defendant's trial for multiple burglary counts was sufficient to support defendant's convictions since the testimony of defendant's nephew, who acted as an accomplice, was corroborated by the testimony of the victims describing the methods used to break into their homes and the items that were taken. Gibson v. State, 267 Ga. App. 473, 600 S.E.2d 417 (2004).

There was at least slight evidence from sources extraneous to the defendant's accomplice as to the defendant's identity and participation in a robbery, and the evidence was sufficient to support a guilty verdict on that count. Extraneous evidence connected the defendant to at least one robbery in which the defendant employed the same modus operandi as the accomplice employed. Grimes v. State, 291 Ga. App. 585, 662 S.E.2d 346 (2008).

Testimony of other witnesses sufficient. — Finding of delinquency by virtue of the minor's having committed acts which if done by an adult would have constituted motor vehicle theft and burglary was not based solely upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice; rather, many of the details were also corroborated by the testimony of two investigators, a relative of the minor, the owner of one of the stolen vehicles and the minor personally. In re J.B., 223 Ga. App. 429, 477 S.E.2d 874 (1996).

When a former detective testified without objection that a witness to a robbery gave a statement positively identifying the defendant as the gunman in an armed robbery, this testimony corroborated testimony of a co-participant, and whether it was sufficient for a conviction was for the jury to determine. Kenney v. State, 236 Ga. App. 359, 511 S.E.2d 923 (1999).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's convictions for armed robbery and kidnapping as the testimony of at least one witness that was presented against defendant as to each offense was sufficient to establish as a fact that defendant committed the offenses. Singleton v. State, 259 Ga. App. 184, 577 S.E.2d 6 (2003).

Trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 17-9-1, because there was sufficient evidence to support the convictions for aggravated assault and reckless conduct, in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2) and 16-5-60(b), respectively; defendant and the codefendants were involved in a physical altercation with two restaurant patrons, and a codefendant's testimony that defendant retrieved a gun and shot the victim was sufficiently repeated by the testimony of other witnesses, who also connected defendant with the shooting pursuant to the corroboration requirement in O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Baker v. State, 273 Ga. App. 297, 614 S.E.2d 904 (2005).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for violation of O.C.G.A. § 16-13-30 of the Georgia Controlled Substances Act because a passenger in the defendant's truck testified that defendant purchased crack cocaine from an individual in a high drug area, a rock of crack cocaine was found in defendant's truck, and a police officer corroborated that testimony pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 with the officer's own observations that the individual that defendant was talking to had money in a hand as the individual lowered the hand from defendant's truck window. Millsap v. State, 275 Ga. App. 732, 621 S.E.2d 837 (2005).

Because testimony from a single witness was sufficient to establish a fact, testimony from both victims of an armed robbery that the defendant was the gunman during that robbery was sufficient direct evidence to establish that fact; moreover, the fact that the defendant offered another explanation for the defendant's presence at the scene, did not render the other evidence against the defendant insufficient or circumstantial. Bakyayita v. State, 278 Ga. App. 624, 629 S.E.2d 539 (2006).

Because sufficient evidence was presented that a juvenile was a party to the crime of entering an automobile with the intent to commit a theft or felony, and the evidence was corroborated by a police officer who questioned the juvenile's cohort, an adjudication based on the juvenile's commission of the act was upheld on appeal; thus, the juvenile's motion for a directed verdict was properly denied. In the Interest of B.D., 287 Ga. App. 185, 651 S.E.2d 129 (2007).

In defendant's conviction for child molestation, the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for a directed verdict of acquittal as sufficient evidence existed based on testimony of the child victim's parent, who testified as to discovery of defendant on top of the victim; further evidence in support of defendant's conviction included the child's videotaped police interviews describing what happened. Lopez v. State, 291 Ga. App. 210, 661 S.E.2d 618 (2008).

Evidence was sufficient for the jury to find a defendant guilty of child molestation beyond a reasonable doubt as it was within the jury's province to reject the defendant's defense denying the crime with regard to the victim as well as with regard to the witnesses who testified as to similar transactions with the defendant. The testimony of the victim was corroborated by an investigator and a forensic interviewer, who testified as to what the victim had told had occurred; the victim's statements were corroborated by the sheriff's investigator; and the jury was entitled to consider the victim's out-of-court statements as substantive evidence under the Child Hearsay Statute, O.C.G.A. § 24-3-16. Lamb v. State, 293 Ga. App. 65, 666 S.E.2d 462 (2008).

There was sufficient evidence to support a defendant's convictions for aggravated assault and possession-of-a-firearm based on the testimony of three separate witnesses, including the victim, that the defendant threateningly pointed a gun at the victim's head. Further, regarding the need to show the victim's reasonable apprehension of immediately receiving a violent injury, the state presented evidence from the victim's mouth that the victim feared the gun and that the fear resulted in the victim urinating on the victim's person and in the victim lying to an officer at the front door to protect the victim's children. Hardy v. State, 293 Ga. App. 265, 666 S.E.2d 730 (2008).

The testimony of a victim and the victim's neighbor that the defendant was the person who held a gun to the victim's side and led the victim outside to search for money in the victim's truck, as well as a letter from the defendant to a co-defendant implicating the defendant, was sufficient corroboration under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to create a jury question as to whether the defendant was guilty of aggravated assault. Decoteau v. State, 302 Ga. App. 451, 691 S.E.2d 328 (2010).

Corroboration need not extend to every material detail. — Testimony of one accomplice adequately corroborated that of another accomplice to the murder of appellant's former husband since although there were inconsistencies in that each attempted to place more culpability on the other in carrying out the scheme, they amply corroborated each other on the ultimate question of appellant's involvement in the scheme to have her former husband killed. Blalock v. State, 250 Ga. 441, 298 S.E.2d 477 (1983).

Need not warrant conviction. — Corroborating evidence need not be in and of itself so strong as to support a verdict of guilty. Nance v. State, 126 Ga. 95, 54 S.E. 932 (1906); Parham v. State, 3 Ga. App. 468, 60 S.E. 123 (1908); Smith v. State, 189 Ga. 169, 5 S.E.2d 762 (1939); Smith v. State, 238 Ga. 640, 235 S.E.2d 17 (1977); Castell v. State, 250 Ga. 776, 301 S.E.2d 234 (1983), aff'd, 252 Ga. 418, 314 S.E.2d 210 (1984).

Grave suspicion not sufficient. — Corroborating evidence which merely casts a grave suspicion upon the defendant is not sufficient. McCalla v. State, 66 Ga. 346 (1881); Baker v. State, 14 Ga. App. 578, 81 S.E. 805 (1914); Thompson v. State, 52 Ga. App. 105, 182 S.E. 414 (1935); Worley v. State, 60 Ga. App. 557, 4 S.E.2d 417 (1939); Ivey v. State, 91 Ga. App. 455, 85 S.E.2d 829 (1955); Hill v. State, 236 Ga. 831, 224 S.E.2d 281 (1976); Smith v. State, 238 Ga. 640, 235 S.E.2d 17 (1977).

Testimony of an accomplice must be corroborated by independent evidence tending to connect the accused with the crime or leading to an inference that the accused is guilty and must do more than merely cast a grave suspicion of guilt on the accused. Powell v. State, 166 Ga. App. 393, 304 S.E.2d 515 (1983).

Slight evidence from an extraneous source identifying the accused as a participator in the criminal act is sufficient corroboration of the accomplice to support a verdict. Hargett v. State, 55 Ga. App. 192, 189 S.E. 675 (1937); King v. State, 77 Ga. App. 720, 49 S.E.2d 790 (1948); Blakely v. State, 78 Ga. App. 282, 50 S.E.2d 762 (1948); McPherson v. State, 96 Ga. Only slight evidence of participation in the offense from an extraneous source will provide the necessary corroboration under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, which may consist entirely of circumstantial evidence. Chergi v. State, 234 Ga. App. 548, 507 S.E.2d 795 (1998).

Confession of defendant was corroborated. — Defendant's convictions for armed robbery and robbery by intimidation in violation of O.C.G.A. §§ 16-8-40(a)(2) and 16-8-41(a) were appropriate because the defendant's own confessions to participating in the crimes were corroborated by the testimony of the victims, among other evidence. Likewise, the defendant's codefendants' statements and testimony implicating the defendant in the crimes were corroborated by the defendant's confessions and the victims' testimony. Cantrell v. State, 299 Ga. App. 746, 683 S.E.2d 676 (2009).

Connection with crime more than suspicion of guilt. — Corroborating evidence must, independently of the accomplice's testimony and of itself, connect the defendant on trial with the commission of the offense and tend to show defendant's guilt; a grave suspicion of the defendant's guilt is not sufficient. King v. State, 77 Ga. App. 720, 49 S.E.2d 790 (1948); Price v. State, 208 Ga. 695, 69 S.E.2d 253 (1952); Wilkins v. State, 96 Ga. App. 841, 101 S.E.2d 912 (1958); *Allen v. Need not warrant conviction but must do more than create suspicion. — Corroborating evidence need not be so strong as to support a verdict of guilty, but it must be sufficient to connect the accused with the perpetration of the offense and lead to the inference of the accused's guilt, and more than sufficient to merely raise a suspicion against the accused. Sheppard v. State, 44 Ga. App. 481, 162 S.E. 413 (1931); Reaves v. State, 242 Ga. 542, 250 S.E.2d 376 (1978); Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979).

Need not warrant conviction or be exhaustively corroborated. — Corroboration need not of itself be sufficient to warrant a verdict or be corroborated in every material particular. Hargett v. State, 55 Ga. App. 192, 189 S.E. 675 (1937); Mitchell v. State, 202 Ga. 247, 42 S.E.2d 767 (1947); Blakely v. State, 78 Ga. App. 282, 50 S.E.2d 762 (1948); Mears v. State, 98 Ga. Ed. 2d 632 (1976); Jones v. State, 139 Ga. App. 643, 229 S.E.2d 121 (1976); Cole v. State, 156 Ga. App. 288, 274 S.E.2d 685 (1980).

Evidence corroborating the accomplice's testimony does not have to be sufficient in and of itself to support a verdict of guilty; circumstantial evidence tying the defendant to the crime and justifying an inference of guilt is satisfactory. Cofer v. State, 166 Ga. App. 436, 304 S.E.2d 537 (1983).

Slight evidence not warranting conviction and not supporting every material fact. —

Law does not require that the corroborating evidence shall in and of itself alone be sufficient to warrant a verdict of guilty, or that the testimony of the accomplice shall be corroborated in every material particular. On the contrary, slight evidence that the crime was committed by both defendants, and identifying the defendants with the crime, will corroborate the testimony of the accomplice and warrant a conviction. Evans v. State, 78 Ga. 351 (1886); Boswell v. State, 92 Ga. 581, 17 S.E. 805 (1893); Pritchett v. State, 92 Ga. 33, 18 S.E. 350 (1893); Chapman v. State, 112 Ga. 56, 37 S.E. 102 (1900); *Dixon v. Direct or circumstantial evidence. — Sufficient corroboration may consist of either direct or circumstantial evidence which connects the defendant with the crime, tends to show the defendant's participation therein, and would justify an inference of the guilt of the accused independently of the testimony of the accomplice. Gunter v. State, 243 Ga. 651, 256 S.E.2d 341 (1979).

Circumstantial evidence. — Circumstantial evidence, when taken with the accomplice testimony, showing guilt beyond a reasonable doubt is sufficient corroboration. Whitfield v. State, 159 Ga. App. 398, 283 S.E.2d 627 (1981).

Although corroboration may be by circumstantial evidence, the evidence must do more than merely cast a grave suspicion of guilt on the accused. Claybrooks v. State, 189 Ga. App. 431, 375 S.E.2d 880, cert. denied, 189 Ga. App. 911, 375 S.E.2d 880 (1988).

Circumstantial evidence presented at trial sufficient to corroborate testimony of accomplice. — See Howard v. State, 187 Ga. App. 74, 369 S.E.2d 271 (1988); Martinez v. State, 222 Ga. App. 497, 474 S.E.2d 708 (1996).

Testimony of other witnesses linking the defendant to the crime was sufficient to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice and was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find defendant guilty of the crimes charged beyond a reasonable doubt. Sanchez v. State, 203 Ga. App. 61, 416 S.E.2d 139 (1992).

Evidence was sufficient to corroborate accomplice testimony in a prosecution for burglary of a store since the corroborating evidence included a burglary call to the police, a store security video which showed events testified to by the accomplice, and an incriminating statement made by the defendant. Williams v. State, 234 Ga. App. 191, 506 S.E.2d 237 (1998).

Corroboration circumstantial and consistent with innocence. — When corroboration of the alleged accomplice's testimony is entirely circumstantial and is of itself as consistent with innocence as with guilt, such evidence is insufficient to sustain a verdict. Reed v. State, 127 Ga. App. 458, 194 S.E.2d 121 (1972).

Source of corroboration. — Corroboration of an accomplice must come from a source or sources other than his or her own testimony, were it otherwise the rule as to corroboration would obviously be nugatory and worthless. Taylor v. State, 110 Ga. 150, 35 S.E. 161 (1900); Butler v. State, 17 Ga. App. 522, 87 S.E. 712 (1916).

There was adequate corroboration. — See Cain v. State, 212 Ga. App. 531, 442 S.E.2d 279 (1994); Bush v. State, 267 Ga. 877, 485 S.E.2d 466 (1997); Givens v. State, 227 Ga. App. 861, 490 S.E.2d 530 (1997); In re J.L., 229 Ga. App. 447, 494 S.E.2d 274 (1997); Pye v. State, 269 Ga. 779, 505 S.E.2d 4 (1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1118, 119 S. Ct. 1767, 143 L. Ed. 2d 797 (1999); Sparks v. State, 234 Ga. App. 11, 505 S.E.2d 555 (1998); Dalton v. State, 237 Ga. App. 217, 513 S.E.2d 745 (1999); Purvis v. State, 239 Ga. App. 900, 522 S.E.2d 499 (1999); Terrell v. State, 271 Ga. 783, 523 S.E.2d 294 (1999); Crumpton v. State, 244 Ga. App. 57, 534 S.E.2d 809 (2000); Blair v. State, 246 Ga. App. 533, 541 S.E.2d 120 (2000); Jackson v. State, 246 Ga. App. 731, 541 S.E.2d 701 (2000); Callaway v.

State, 247 Ga. App. 310, 542 S.E.2d 596 (2000); Rogers v. State, 247 Ga. App. 219, 543 S.E.2d 81 (2000); Eidson v. State, 247 Ga. App. 26, 543 S.E.2d 100 (2000); Miller v. State, 273 Ga. 831, 546 S.E.2d 524 (2001); Parker v. State, 249 Ga. App. 530, 549 S.E.2d 154 (2001).

Sufficient corroborating evidence existed to support accomplice's testimony that defendant kicked in the door of the victim's residence and committed other crimes inside that residence against the victim, as another person, other than defendant and the other two men who committed the crimes, gave a statement to police regarding defendant's presence at the scene of the crime and that statement was introduced at trial through the police officer who witnessed the statement. Moore v. State, 261 Ga. App. 752, 583 S.E.2d 588 (2003).

Although the uncorroborated testimony of a co-defendant was insufficient to convict defendant under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, there was other evidence, including defendant's statements to police that defendant urged the co-defendant to kill the victim, to show that defendant aided and abetted and counseled another to commit the crimes under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20(b)(3) and (4). Lucky v. State, 286 Ga. 478, 689 S.E.2d 825 (2010).

Because of the corroborating testimony from the defendant's two accomplices, the accomplice testimony was admissible to support the defendant's conviction for aggravated assault, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(3), and aggravated battery, O.C.G.A. § 16-5-24(a). Scott v. State, 302 Ga. App. 111, 690 S.E.2d 242 (2010).

Adequate corroboration for RICO conviction. — Testimony by defendant's cousin that the cousin saw defendant deliver packages to defendant's mother on several occasions corroborated defendant's mother's testimony that defendant supplied cocaine for sale by family members and was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction under the Georgia Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act, O.C.G.A. § 16-14-1 et seq. McGee v. State, 255 Ga. App. 708, 566 S.E.2d 431 (2002), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1058, 123 S. Ct. 633, 154 L. Ed. 2d 539 (2002).

Adequate corroboration for marijuana conviction. — Sufficient corroboration existed to support a conviction for possession of marijuana with intent to distribute based on the testimony of an accomplice after the police saw that defendant was in a house that had marijuana in many rooms, the marijuana was divided into different colored baggies, implying different ownership, and defendant's flight from the scene showed defendant's consciousness of guilt. Ellison v. State, 265 Ga. App. 446, 594 S.E.2d 675 (2004).

In a trial for attempted trafficking in marijuana, a codefendant's statements were sufficiently corroborated under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 by the testimony of a case agent that a loaded pistol was found at the defendant's feet and that a bag containing the currency used in the drug transaction was found within arm's reach of the defendant. Green v. State, 298 Ga. App. 17, 679 S.E.2d 348 (2009).

Adequate corroboration for burglary conviction. — Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for burglary after an accomplice's testimony that defendant was an active participant in the burglary was corroborated by: (1) a police officer's testimony that defendant was in a vehicle with two accomplices shortly after the burglary; (2) another officer's testimony that handguns were found in a pillowcase retrieved from the vehicle; and (3) the pawn shop owner's testimony that the guns found in the vehicle were the guns stolen from the owner's shop. Reynolds v. State, 267 Ga. App. 148, 598 S.E.2d 868 (2004).

Testimony of defendant's accomplice was sufficiently corroborated by defendant's possession of tools used in the crime, the fact that defendant was found near the scene of a bank burglary covered in grease that could have come from a bank machine, the fact that defendant was sweaty, as if defendant had been working, and the fact that pine straw similar to the pine straw in front of the burglarized bank was found in defendant's car. McNair v. State, 267 Ga. App. 872, 600 S.E.2d 830 (2004).

Adequate corroboration for aggravated assault conviction. — Sufficient evidence supported aggravated assault conviction because both the victim and another witness testified that defendant stabbed the victim, and a nurse testified that the victim's injury was serious. Hampton v. State, 272 Ga. App. 273, 612 S.E.2d 96 (2005).

Sufficient evidence supported the defendant's conviction of aggravated assault under O.C.G.A. § 16-5-21(a)(2) after the defendant's companions used metal knuckles, a metal pipe, and a gun to beat the victim; the defendant was a party to the offense under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20(a), as the victim, whose testimony was sufficient to establish a fact under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, testified that, during the incident, the defendant summoned the companions to help beat the victim, and the defendant and the companions repeatedly warned the victim not to testify in court in the defendant's criminal case. Souder v. State, 281 Ga. App. 339, 636 S.E.2d 68 (2006), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 97 (Ga. 2007).

Adequate corroboration for malice murder conviction. — Sufficient non-accomplice evidence was presented to corroborate the testimony by accomplices of both defendants in trial on charges of malice murder and other related offenses, specifically, that: (1) the first defendant admitted to the victim's killing, via a note from that defendant to a non-accomplice witness, in order to prevent the victim from testifying; and (2) independent evidence was presented regarding the second defendant's participation in the crimes to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice. Williams v. State, 280 Ga. 584, 630 S.E.2d 370 (2006).

Adequate corroboration for methamphetamine conviction. — Sufficient evidence existed to support defendant's conviction for criminal attempt to manufacture methamphetamine, and defendant's challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence based upon the uncorroborated testimony of defendant's accomplice alone failed as the incriminating testimony by the accomplice was adequately corroborated by independent evidence, including defendant's possession of essential items for manufacturing methamphetamine; defendant's statement to a passenger in the back of the patrol car that a store likely had ratted about the matchbook purchases; and the large quantity of matchbooks found discarded along the route defendant had just traveled. Kohlmeier v. State, 289 Ga. App. 709, 658 S.E.2d 261 (2008).

Because the accomplice testimony presented against a juvenile was sufficiently corroborated by two other witness, the juvenile's prior similar acts, and the juvenile's flight from the scene, the appeals court rejected the juvenile's sufficiency challenge. In the Interest of S.K., 289 Ga. App. 672, 658 S.E.2d 220 (2008).

Adequate corroboration for armed robbery and hijacking motor vehicle conviction.

— Trial court properly convicted defendant of armed robbery and hijacking of a motor vehicle because: (1) there was sufficient evidence to establish defendant committed the crimes based on the testimony of the victim, who identified defendant as the individual who approached the victim's vehicle, pointed a gun, and demanded the vehicle; (2) two officers testified as to observing defendant driving the stolen vehicle the same night; and (3) the victim's cell phone was found on defendant's person when the defendant was arrested. Culver v. State, 290 Ga. App. 321, 659 S.E.2d 390 (2008).

Adequate corroboration for robbery, burglary, and related crimes conviction. — With regard to a defendant's convictions for robbery, burglary, and other related crimes, the testimony of a codefendant that implicated defendant was sufficiently corroborated by other testimony and evidence at trial. Burton v. State, 293 Ga. App. 822, 668 S.E.2d 306 (2008).

Adequate corroboration for armed robbery conviction. — Evidence was sufficient to support a defendant's armed robbery conviction since an accomplice, who was wearing a mask and holding a gun when the accomplice entered the victim's bedroom, testified that the defendant had given the accomplice the mask and the gun and that the accomplice had shouted downstairs to the defendant during the robbery; the testimony was corroborated under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 by the victim's recognition of the defendant's voice from the shouted conversation during the robbery and by the defendant's resistance and flight when police arrived. Williams v. State, 287 Ga. App. 361, 651 S.E.2d 768 (2007).

Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant of armed robbery since the testimony of a 14-year-old accomplice was corroborated by testimony from a clerk in the store that was robbed by the defendant and others, and the state presented physical evidence—clothing worn by the robbers—that linked the defendant to the robbery. Sellers v. State, 294 Ga. App. 536, 669 S.E.2d 544 (2008).

In an armed robbery prosecution, as the victim identified the defendant as the driver of a car and the codefendant as the passenger who robbed the victim at gunpoint, and the pistol used in the robbery was found in the car's locked glove compartment, to which only the defendant had the key, the evidence was sufficient to establish that the defendant aided and abetted the codefendant in the robbery under O.C.G.A. § 16-2-20 and sufficiently corroborated the codefendant's accomplice testimony under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Bailey v. State, 295 Ga. App. 480, 672 S.E.2d 450 (2009).

Adequate corroboration for weapons possession conviction. — Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant of possession of a weapon during the commission of a crime as the testimony of the defendant's accomplice that the defendant raped the victim at gunpoint was corroborated by the victim's out-of-court and in-court identification of the defendant as the rapist, and the fact that the defendant's DNA was found on the victim's clothing. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 9, 670 S.E.2d 828 (2008).

Adequate corroboration for rape conviction. — Evidence was sufficient to convict a defendant of rape as the testimony of the defendant's accomplice that the defendant raped the victim was corroborated by the victim's out-of-court and in-court identification of the defendant as the rapist and the fact that the defendant's DNA was found on the victim's clothing. Williams v. State, 295 Ga. App. 9, 670 S.E.2d 828 (2008).

Adequate corroboration for sodomy conviction. — Trial court properly denied a defendant's motion for new trial on the ground that there was insufficient evidence to prove aggravated sodomy since the only evidence of the victim performing oral sodomy upon the defendant came from the uncorroborated testimony of the victim's parent, who was an accomplice to the sexual abuse and because there was insufficient evidence of force. To the contrary, the victim's testimony as to the sexual abuse committed by the defendant sufficiently corroborated the testimony of the victim's parent, and the testimony of the victim that the defendant kept multiple guns around the outbuilding where the trio lived and that the defendant had repeatedly threatened to shoot the victim if the victim did not engage in the sexual acts was sufficient to prove the element of force. Driggers v. State, 295 Ga. App. 711, 673 S.E.2d 95 (2009).

Adequate corroboration for cocaine conviction. — While a defendant claimed that the evidence was insufficient to exclude the possibility that the cocaine belonged solely to the defendant's passenger, the testimony of the passenger that the passenger dropped the drugs out of the truck after the defendant threw the drugs in the passenger's lap was adequately corroborated under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 by the facts that the defendant had more than $2,000 in the defendant's pocket and that the defendant was the owner and driver of the truck from which the drugs were thrown; the defendant was, thus, properly convicted of trafficking in cocaine under O.C.G.A. § 16-13-31(a)(1) and possession of cocaine as a lesser included offense of possession with intent to distribute. Wingfield v. State, 297 Ga. App. 476, 677 S.E.2d 704 (2009).

Adequate corroboration for robbery conviction. — Evidence that the defendant committed a robbery was not based solely on the uncorroborated testimony of the defendant's accomplice. A store employee corroborated the accomplice's testimony, and items similar to those taken during the robbery, as well as items taken during a later robbery, were recovered from the defendant's car, which was occupied by the defendant and the accomplice. Savage v. State, 298 Ga. App. 350, 679 S.E.2d 734 (2009).

Accomplice cannot corroborate the accomplices own testimony by something the accomplice told another witness. The corroborating circumstances must be independent of the testimony of the accomplice. Payne v. State, 135 Ga. App. 245, 217 S.E.2d 476 (1975).

Corroboration required for each offense. — Although slight evidence of corroboration connecting the defendant with the crime is sufficient, when the defendant is charged with the commission of several offenses, there must be corroborating evidence for each offense charged. Davis v. State, 154 Ga. App. 803, 269 S.E.2d 874 (1980), cert. dismissed, 247 Ga. 8, 273 S.E.2d 409 (1981).

Testimony corroborated in murder trial.

— Testimony of the principal witness, an accomplice in the murder of which the accused was tried, was corroborated and the conviction was authorized by the evidence. George v. State, 167 Ga. 532, 146 S.E. 120 (1928).

When appellant was convicted of burglary, armed robbery, and felony murder, and appellant admitted that the appellant went to the victim's house with an accomplice, but insisted that the accomplice killed the victim, and contends that the only evidence that the appellant committed the murder is the uncorroborated testimony of the appellant's accomplice, the court found that the evidence was sufficient to satisfy the requirements of O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, since appellant's own statement is sufficient evidence of the appellant's participation in the crime to corroborate the testimony of the accomplice. Wisembaker v. State, 259 Ga. 416, 383 S.E.2d 132 (1989).

Evidence of tenancy and drug paraphernalia. — Evidence that the defendant lived in an apartment and quantities of methamphetamine were located there, along with the implements of trafficking, a triple-beam scale, cutting materials, and baggies for packaging was sufficient to enable a rational trier of fact to find the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of the offense of possession of methamphetamine with intent to distribute. Lowe v. State, 208 Ga. App. 49, 430 S.E.2d 169 (1993).

Testimony corroborated for drug possession. — When defendant's flight itinerary was identical to drug courier's and defendant made voluntary statements that defendant would have cooperated with officials had the officials talked to defendant first instead of talking to "that girl first," the conviction was authorized by the evidence. Warren v. State, 207 Ga. App. 53, 427 S.E.2d 45 (1993).

There was sufficient corroboration when the testimony of the detective regarding what the detective heard about setting up the deal, the detective's observation of the drug transaction, and the detective's later finding the marked bill was at least slight evidence from which the jury could conclude that evidence, independent of the accomplice's testimony, connected defendant to the crime and led to the inference that defendant was guilty. Black v. State, 242 Ga. App. 271, 529 S.E.2d 410 (2000).

Evidence was sufficient to convict defendant of possession of cocaine since defendant's two accomplices testified as to their purchase of cocaine and their being stopped by the police while enroute to a motel to smoke the cocaine and since the police found cocaine in the back seat of the car defendant was driving to the motel. Heard v. State, 257 Ga. App. 505, 571 S.E.2d 524 (2002).

Testimony corroborated in sudden snatching robbery. — Independent testimony of two separate victims sufficiently established evidence that defendant participated in accomplice's crimes, and thus was sufficient corroboration of accomplice's testimony. Daniel v. State, 207 Ga. App. 720, 429 S.E.2d 130 (1993).

Testimony of victim sufficient to corroborate accomplice's testimony. — Jury charge that defendant may not have been convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice to the charged home invasion was unwarranted since, inter alia, the victims' testimony corroborated the accomplice's testimony regarding defendant's involvement. Skaggs-Ferrell v. State, 266 Ga. App. 248, 596 S.E.2d 743 (2004).

Testimony of defendant sufficient to corroborate accomplice's testimony. — In a prosecution for malice murder, even though defendant and defendant's accomplice each accused the other of being the actual perpetrator, defendant's own testimony — placing oneself at the scene and as a participant in disposing of some of the evidence, including the murder weapon — provided ample corroboration for the accomplice's testimony to support a conviction of defendant either as a party to the crime or as an actual perpetrator in the murder. Parkerson v. State, 265 Ga. 438, 457 S.E.2d 667 (1995).

Defendant's testimony sufficiently corroborated that of a codefendant to support the defendant's conviction of armed robbery since the defendant testified that the defendant was present during the planning of an armed robbery and that the defendant supplied the gun used during the robbery. Short v. State, 234 Ga. App. 633, 507 S.E.2d 514 (1998).

Defendant's statement concerning willing accompaniment of friends despite knowing those friends were involved in criminal activity and defendant's knowledge about items that were taken during such activity was sufficient evidence corroborating an accomplice's testimony inculcating the defendant. Moore v. State, 245 Ga. App. 641, 537 S.E.2d 764 (2000).

When defendant robbed the victims at gunpoint with two accomplices, the testimony of one accomplice that defendant was involved in the robbery was sufficient to corroborate testimony to the same effect from defendant's other accomplice and sustain defendant's convictions for armed robbery and aggravated assault, under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(1), (2) and 16-8-41(a). Gallimore v. State, 264 Ga. App. 629, 591 S.E.2d 485 (2003).

Testimony of state's witness sufficient to corroborate testimony of accomplice. — See Herndon v. State, 187 Ga. App. 77, 369 S.E.2d 264 (1988).

Recent possession of stolen property, not satisfactorily explained, is sufficient basis for the corroboration of an accomplice's testimony. Inman v. State, 182 Ga. App. 209, 355 S.E.2d 119 (1987).

Guns and ski mask sufficient corroboration. — Testimony of the codefendant, corroborated by circumstantial evidence was sufficient to support a conviction of armed robbery, since the codefendant testified that defendant actively participated in the robbery and guns and a ski mask identified as those used in the commission of the crime were found in the defendant's trailer. Eschena v. State, 203 Ga. App. 621, 417 S.E.2d 214, cert. denied, 203 Ga. App. 908, 417 S.E.2d 336 (1992).

Identification by robbery victim. — Evidence was sufficient to sustain the defendant's conviction for armed robbery and to corroborate the accomplice's testimony, when one of the robbery victims identified the defendant as one of the robbers. Telfair v. State, 234 Ga. App. 444, 507 S.E.2d 195 (1998).

Testimony corroborated in prosecution for armed robbery. — An accomplice's specific, extensive testimony linking the defendant to an armed robbery was sufficiently corroborated by substantial evidence of the defendant's immediate, unexplained possession of stolen checks, forged identification cards, and the vehicle used during the robbery. Smith v. State, 234 Ga. App. 586, 506 S.E.2d 406 (1998).

In a prosecution for armed robbery and possession of a firearm by a convicted felon, the defendant's presence at a convenience store identified by defendant's accomplice, at the specific time identified by the accomplice, in the type of vehicle identified by the accomplice, with the array of loaded weaponry — including a 9mm weapon — identified by the accomplice, was sufficient to corroborate the accomplice's testimony regarding the defendant's participation as a party to the crime. House v. State, 237 Ga. App. 504, 515 S.E.2d 652 (1999).

Evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to find that the defendant participated in an armed robbery because an accomplice's testimony, which implicated the defendant as a party to the crimes, was sufficiently corroborated by the testimony and evidence at trial when the testimony of a second accomplice regarding the circumstances surrounding the planned robbery, the defendant's participation in the planning of the robbery, and the party's actions before and after the robbery sufficiently corroborated the first accomplice's testimony; the first accomplice's testimony was further corroborated by the victims' descriptions of the events surrounding the robbery, and the police chief testified at trial that police found two sets of shoe prints at the scene of the robbery, but only one set where the second accomplice waited with the car, which also corroborated the accomplice's testimony about what happened after the robbery. Smith v. State, 302 Ga. App. 222, 690 S.E.2d 867 (2010).

In a malice murder action, an accomplice's testimony that defendant was the shooter was corroborated by the evidence of defendant's animosity towards the victim, the fact that defendant had previously pulled a handgun on the victim, and the fact that defendant had celebrated the victim's murder. Moreover, defendant's confession to another that defendant shot the victim corroborated the accomplice's testimony. Hewitt v. State, 277 Ga. 327, 588 S.E.2d 722 (2003).

Violation of statute not grounds for habeas corpus relief. — Corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice is a statutory requirement, not a constitutional right. Since violation of a state law no longer constitutes a basis for habeas corpus relief, there is no constitutional nor habeas corpus ground for relief since the contention is the absence of corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice. Gunter v. Hickman, 256 Ga. 315, 348 S.E.2d 644 (1986) (concurring opinions).

Corroborated by other testimony and physical evidence. — Although there was one witness who implicated defendant in the commission of aggravated assault and recanted the witness's statements at trial, the evidence was sufficient to convict defendant since the witness's statements to police implicating defendant in the fatal assault were corroborated by other testimony and the physical evidence. Kinney v. State, 271 Ga. 877, 525 S.E.2d 91 (2000).

There was sufficient evidence under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 to convict defendant of firearms offenses and drug possession, after the codefendant testified that defendant owned five of the guns and the drugs that were found in the stopped vehicle in which defendant was a passenger, and the police officer who stopped defendant's vehicle corroborated the codefendant's testimony by stating that the officer found a gun under defendant's seat in the car. Spratling v. State, 255 Ga. App. 500, 565 S.E.2d 839 (2002).

Accomplice's testimony corroborated. — Although a conviction cannot be based upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, slight evidence of defendant's identity and participation from an extraneous source is all that is required to corroborate the accomplice's testimony, and thus, support the verdict. Leonard v. State, 241 Ga. App. 899, 528 S.E.2d 540 (2000).

Accomplice's testimony not sufficiently corroborated. — Juvenile adjudications were reversed since the testimony of an accomplice witness was not sufficiently corroborated to support the guilty findings; the victim's prior report to a school concerning two of the three defendants did not connect defendants to the crime, and was insufficient corroboration. In the Interest of M.B., 267 Ga. App. 721, 601 S.E.2d 370 (2004).

Lay opinion testimony of deputy admitted. — Trial court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for directed verdict because the evidence was sufficient to find the defendant guilty of distribution of cocaine beyond a reasonable doubt; a deputy's lay opinion testimony was sufficient to identify the defendant as the perpetrator of the crime. Strickland v. State, 302 Ga. App. 44, 690 S.E.2d 638 (2010).

Evidence Constituting Corroboration

Testimony of one accomplice may be corroborated by the testimony of another accomplice. Chance v. State, 33 Ga. App. 137, 125 S.E. 730 (1924); Pope v. State, 171 Ga. 655, 156 S.E. 599 (1930), answer conformed to, 42 Ga. App. 680, 157 S.E. 211 (1931); Austin v. State, 47 Ga. App. 217, 169 S.E. 729 (1933); Wise v. State, 52 Ga. App. 98, 182 S.E. 535 (1935); Wise v. State, 53 Ga. App. 363, 186 S.E. 142 (1936); Walker v. State, 57 Ga. App. 868, 197 S.E. 67 (1938); Rozier v. State, 68 Ga. App. 797, 24 S.E.2d 137 (1943); Greeson v. State, 90 Ga. App. 57, 81 S.E.2d 839 (1954); Park v. State, 224 Ga. 467, 162 S.E.2d 359, cert. denied, 393 U.S. 980, 89 S. Ct. 449, 21 L. Ed. 2d 441 (1968); Nix v. State, 133 Ga. App. 417, 211 S.E.2d 26 (1974); Vaughn v. State, 139 Ga. App. 565, 228 S.E.2d 741 (1976); Baker v. State, 238 Ga. 389, 233 S.E.2d 347, cert. denied, 431 U.S. 970, 97 S. Ct. 2931, 53 L. Ed. 2d 1066 (1977); Eubanks v. State, 240 Ga. 544, 242 S.E.2d 41 (1978); Smith v. State, 154 Ga. App. 741, 270 S.E.2d 5 (1980); Whitfield v. State, 159 Ga. App. 398, 283 S.E.2d 627 (1981); Hanifa v. State, 269 Ga. 797, 505 S.E.2d 731 (1998).

Rule barring conviction based on uncorroborated testimony of a single accomplice was inapplicable to a robbery case since the evidence against each of three juvenile defendants was derived from more than one witness and was supported by corroborating evidence after the victim identified one juvenile defendant and one of the two coconspirators, but the victim could not identify the others, and an officer testified regarding statements given to the officer by one of the coconspirators and another of the juvenile defendants which implicated all three juvenile defendants in the crime; although all three juvenile defendants argued that the corroborating evidence was not credible, the trial court was the sole arbiter of credibility. In the Interest of C.L.B., 267 Ga. App. 456, 600 S.E.2d 407 (2004).

Pursuant to O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8, defendant juvenile's statements to the police corroborated an accomplice's testimony that the juvenile struck a woman unconscious, caused her serious bodily injury, used force to steal her pocketbook, and dragged her down onto her front yard; accordingly, the evidence was sufficient to adjudicate the juvenile delinquent under O.C.G.A. §§ 16-5-21(a)(2), 16-5-40(a), and 16-8-40(a)(1). In re D. T., 294 Ga. App. 486, 669 S.E.2d 471 (2008).

Felony conviction based on testimony of accomplice. — In order to sustain a felony conviction based upon the testimony of an accomplice, there must be corroborating facts and circumstances, which, in themselves and independently of the testimony of the accomplice, directly connect the defendant with the crime or lead to the inference that the defendant is guilty, and are more than sufficient to merely cast on the defendant a grave suspicion of guilt. The necessary corroboration may consist entirely of circumstantial evidence, and evidence of the defendant's conduct before and after the crime was committed may give rise to an inference that defendant participated in the crime. Bradford v. State, 262 Ga. 512, 421 S.E.2d 523 (1992); Klinect v. State, 269 Ga. 570, 501 S.E.2d 810 (1998).

Defendant's possession of the gun identified by the victim as used in the crime was sufficient to corroborate the accomplice's testimony as to the sequence of events and acts perpetrated by defendant and the accomplice with regard to the crimes of armed robbery, rape, and aggravated sodomy with the accomplice agreeing to testify against the defendant in return for a lighter sentence. Palmer v. State, 286 Ga. App. 751, 650 S.E.2d 255 (2007), cert. denied, 2007 Ga. LEXIS 678 (Ga. 2007).

Uncorroborated testimony of accomplices is sufficient to authorize a felony conviction; thus, convictions of defendant for hijacking a motor vehicle, aggravated assault, and armed robbery that were based upon the testimony of defendant's two accomplices to the crimes were affirmed. Boles v. State, 257

Evidence Constituting Corroboration (Cont'd)

Ga. App. 240, 570 S.E.2d 677 (2002).

Conduct on the part of the defendant may act to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice. Holton v. State, 61 Ga. App. 654, 7 S.E.2d 202 (1940); Nix v. State, 133 Ga. App. 417, 211 S.E.2d 26 (1974); Drake v. State, 241 Ga. 583, 247 S.E.2d 57 (1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 928, 99 S. Ct. 1265, 59 L. Ed. 2d 485 (1979).

Defendant's attempts to conceal defendant's participation in an offense can corroborate defendant's accomplice's testimony regarding defendant's participation. Smith v. State, 245 Ga. 168, 263 S.E.2d 910 (1980); Drake v. State, 245 Ga. 798, 267 S.E.2d 237 (1980).

Evidence of conduct as corroboration may be circumstantial or direct. — Conduct of a defendant before, during the time of, and after the commission of a crime can corroborate the testimony of an accomplice and can be shown by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence. Smith v. State, 238 Ga. 640, 235 S.E.2d 17 (1977); Stanford v. State, 157 Ga. App. 633, 278 S.E.2d 175 (1981).

Jury may consider the conduct of the defendant before, during, and after the commission of the crime to determine the defendant's intent and defendant's participation in the crime to determine whether defendant's conduct is sufficient corroboration of the accomplice's testimony to sustain the conviction. Whitfield v. State, 159 Ga. App. 398, 283 S.E.2d 627 (1981).

The necessary corroboration required by O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 may consist entirely of circumstantial evidence, and evidence of the defendant's conduct before and after the crime was committed may give rise to an inference that defendant participated in the crime. Berry v. State, 248 Ga. 430, 283 S.E.2d 888 (1981).

While a conviction based upon uncorroborated testimony of an alleged accomplice is insufficient, corroboration itself is peculiarly a matter for the jury, and may be shown by direct or circumstantial evidence tending to show defendant's participation. Howell v. State, 163 Ga. App. 445, 295 S.E.2d 329 (1982).

Corroborating evidence connecting a defendant to a crime may consist entirely of circumstantial evidence, and evidence of the defendant's conduct before and after the crime was committed may give rise to an inference that the defendant participated in the crime; whether the corroborating evidence was sufficient in a given context was a matter for the jury, and even slight evidence of corroboration connecting an accused to a crime was legally sufficient. Anderson v. State, 261 Ga. App. 456, 582 S.E.2d 575 (2003).

Confession is sufficient to corroborate the testimony of an accomplice. Lancaster v. State, 54 Ga. App. 243, 187 S.E. 617 (1936); Wade v. State, 195 Ga. 870, 25 S.E.2d 712 (1943); Nix v. State, 133 Ga. App. 417, 211 S.E.2d 26 (1974); Vaughn v. State, 139 Ga. App. 565, 228 S.E.2d 741 (1976); Spencer v. State, 192 Ga. App. 822, 386 S.E.2d 705 (1989).

Testimony of the codefendant that the murder defendant was the triggerman in the armed robbery was corroborated by the defendant's confession in which defendant admitted participation in the robbery. McCleskey v. Kemp, 753 F.2d 877 (11th Cir. 1985), aff'd, 481 U.S. 279, 107 S. Ct. 1756, 95 L. Ed. 2d 262 (1987).

Defendant's own testimony regarding defendant's presence at the scene of the crime provided corroboration for defendant's brother's testimony linking the defendant with the crime. Mosier v. State, 223 Ga. App. 75, 476 S.E.2d 842 (1996).

Proof of corpus delicti as corroboration. — Proof of the corpus delicti independently of the evidence of the accomplice is corroborative of the guilt of the accomplice, but does not at all corroborate the accomplice's testimony as to the guilt of another. Childers v. State, 52 Ga. 106 (1874); McCalla v. State, 66 Ga. 346 (1881); Altman v. State, 5 Ga. App. 833, 63 S.E. 928 (1909); Smith v. State, 7 Ga. App. 781, 68 S.E. 335 (1910); Sanders v. State, 46 Ga. App. 175, 167 S.E. 207 (1932); Newman v. State, 63 Ga. App. 417, 11 S.E.2d 248 (1940).

Statement describing burglary corroborated by officer's observations and guilty plea. — Defendant's videotaped statement describing a burglary, which statement conflicted with defendant's subsequent testimony denying knowledge of or participation in the burglary, could be corroborated by: (1) the officer's independent observations of the items taken which corresponded with defendant's description; and (2) the district attorney's testimony as to defendant's plea of guilty to the burglary. Dixon v. State, 172 Ga. App. 803, 324 S.E.2d 780 (1984).

Recent unexplained possession of stolen property is sufficient basis for the corroboration of an accomplice's testimony and for a conviction of burglary. Green v. State, 139 Ga. App. 652, 229 S.E.2d 129 (1976); Cole v. State, 156 Ga. App. 288, 274 S.E.2d 685 (1980).

Unexplained recent possession of goods taken in an armed robbery and burglary has some corroborative value. Brady v. State, 169 Ga. App. 316, 312 S.E.2d 632 (1983).

Pregnancy of the unmarried prosecutor, unless it be shown that such pregnancy resulted from the act of the defendant, does not constitute corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutor. Wilkins v. State, 96 Ga. App. 841, 101 S.E.2d 912 (1958).

When testimony of defendant's wife-accomplice was corroborated by testimony of wife's sister who observed defendant beating the same victim on an earlier occasion, such evidence was sufficient to sustain defendant's conviction for cruelty to children. Jackson v. State, 178 Ga. App. 378, 343 S.E.2d 122 (1986).

Polygraph test results are sufficient corroboration of an accomplice's testimony. Smith v. State, 245 Ga. 205, 264 S.E.2d 15 (1980).

Defendant's prior inconsistent statements, which constituted substantive evidence, were sufficient to corroborate the accomplice's testimony. Arnold v. State, 243 Ga. App. 118, 532 S.E.2d 458 (2000).

Evidence from extraneous source. — First defendant and second defendant were incorrect in asserting that their convictions arising out of the robbery and murder of a drug dealer were supported by insufficient evidence as their convictions were not based solely on the uncorroborated testimony of accomplices; rather, those convictions also rested on extraneous source evidence identifying the defendants as participants in the crime, including the testimony and identification of the defendant's by a person present at the drug dealer's apartment when the crimes were committed as well as substantial forensic evidence linking the defendants to the crimes. Howard v. State, 279 Ga.

166, 611 S.E.2d 3 (2005).

Slight physical evidence sufficient to corroborate. — Evidence of a large bag of marijuana, digital scales, and plastic baggies in a bedroom belonging to defendant slightly corroborated defendant's brother's girlfriend's testimony that defendant possessed the marijuana and gave it to the girlfriend to sell, and a tax return and receipt belonging to defendant corroborated the girlfriend's contention that this room belonged to defendant. Slight corroboration was sufficient under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8. Williams v. State, 299 Ga. App. 798, 683 S.E.2d 860 (2009).

Perjury

Perjury is never presumed. Georgia Power Co. v. Owen, 207 Ga. 178, 60 S.E.2d 436 (1950).

In general. — To convict of perjury, there must be two witnesses, or one witness and proof by corroborating circumstances. McLaren v. State, 4 Ga. App. 643, 62 S.E. 138 (1908); Davis v. State, 7 Ga. App. 680, 67 S.E. 839 (1910). See Flemister v. State, 81 Ga. 768, 7 S.E. 642 (1888); Rodenberry v. State, 37 Ga. App. 359, 140 S.E. 386 (1927); Potts v. State, 78 Ga. App. 799, 52 S.E.2d 575 (1949).

Evidence was insufficient to support a finding that the juvenile committed perjury and, thus, was not sufficient to support the juvenile's adjudication as a delinquent since the state's perjury case against the juvenile rested solely on the testimony of a codefendant, and was not supported by the required two witnesses, or one witness and corroborating circumstances. In the Interest of C.H., 262 Ga. App. 630, 585 S.E.2d 921 (2003).

Sufficiency of corroboration. — Nature and sufficiency of the corroboration necessary to prove the perjury must in each case be determined by the jury, but the equilibrium between the oath of the alleged perjurer and the oath of the contradicting witness should be destroyed by material and independent circumstances strongly corroborative of the positive testimony of the witness. Bell v. State, 5 Ga. App. 701, 63 S.E. 860 (1909).

Evidence was sufficient to support defendant's conviction for armed robbery since: (1) defendant affirmatively lied by denying that defendant knew one accomplice in defendant's initial statement to the police; (2) defendant was driving the getaway car when it was stopped by the police; and (3) defendant was in possession of the handgun used in the armed robbery and the money stolen in the armed robbery. The sufficiency of the corroboration of the accomplice's testimony that defendant participated in the planning of the robbery as required under O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 was a matter for the jury to determine. Clemons v. State, 265 Ga. App. 825, 595 S.E.2d 530 (2004).

Proof based on circumstantial evidence.

— This statute does not apply to a case where the proof of perjury is necessarily based upon circumstantial evidence. Mallard v. State, 19 Ga. App. 99, 90 S.E. 1044 (1916) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8).

Charging part of statute when inapplicable. — Court did not err in giving in charge this statute as to the number of witnesses necessary to convict of perjury and certain other offenses, although a part of the statute was not applicable to the case where the inapplicable part was explained. Pence v. State, 36 Ga. App. 270, 136 S.E. 820 (1927) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8).

Jury

When state does not rely solely upon evidence of accomplice to connect the accused with an offense, it is not incumbent upon the court, without request, to instruct the jury on corroboration. Smith v. State, 154 Ga. App. 741, 270 S.E.2d 5 (1980).

Charge unnecessary when two witnesses testify. — When two witnesses swear to the same state of facts, the fact that the witnesses are accomplices or are not accomplices, or that one is an accomplice and other not an accomplice, does not require a charge by the court, in the trial of a defendant alleged to be a party to a joint crime, that "where the only witness is an accomplice" the accomplice's testimony must be corroborated. Wilson v. State, 51 Ga. App. 570, 181 S.E. 134 (1935); Farley v. State, 210 Ga. App. 580, 436 S.E.2d 770 (1993); Reeves v. State, 244 Ga. App. 15, 534 S.E.2d 179 (2000).

Failure to charge connection with crime.

— In charging upon the subject of corroboration of an accomplice, the court having instructed that the extent of corroborative testimony was a question for the jury, it was not error, in the absence of a proper request, to fail to charge further that the evidence in corroboration should connect the accused with the commission of the crime. Jones v. State, 200 Ga. 793, 38 S.E.2d 429 (1946); Hill v. State, 237 Ga. 794, 229 S.E.2d 737 (1976).

When charge on corroboration not required. — Trial court did not err in failing to charge the jury that an accomplice's testimony alone, without corroboration, was insufficient to support a conviction because trial counsel did not request this charge and because the state did not rely wholly on the accomplice's testimony. Wooten v. State, 240 Ga. App. 725, 524 S.E.2d 776 (1999).

Because the state relied on evidence other than the accomplice's testimony, the trial court was not required to submit the issue of the sufficiency of the corroborating evidence to the jury and was therefore not required to charge the jury on corroboration. Jenkins v. Byrd, 103 F. Supp. 2d 1350 (S.D. Ga. 2000).

Charge not harmful. — Charge in regard to the provision of this statute, relating to corroboration of testimony of an accomplice in a felony case was not harmful to the defendants. Cole v. State, 156 Ga. App. 288, 274 S.E.2d 685 (1980) (see O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8).

Jury instruction proper. — Trial court did not err in charging the jury as follows while deleting the bracketed word "generally": "The testimony of a witness is [generally] sufficient to establish a fact if the jury believes the witness." Thomas v. State, 249 Ga. App. 556, 548 S.E.2d 71 (2001).

Whether witness was an accomplice is a question for the jury. Venable v. State, 56 Ga. App. 366, 192 S.E. 646 (1937); Aimar v. State, 116 Ga. App. 204, 156 S.E.2d 367 (1967); Maddox v. State, 131 Ga. App. 86, 205 S.E.2d 31 (1974); Payne v. State, 135 Ga. App. 245, 217 S.E.2d 476 (1975); Durham v. State, 243 Ga. 408, 254 S.E.2d 359 (1979).

O.C.G.A. § 24-4-8 requires that accomplice testimony be corroborated in felony cases when the only witness is the accomplice, but only slight evidence from an extraneous source as to a defendant's identity and participation is needed to corroborate an accomplice's testimony, and, such evidence may be entirely circumstantial. Smith v. State, 257 Ga. App. 595, 571 S.E.2d 817 (2002).

Submitting question as to whether witness was accomplice. — It is not error to submit to the jury the question of whether a witness for the state was or was not an accomplice even if the witness had confessed to being an accomplice and had been jointly indicted with the defendant on trial. Milton v. State, 248 Ga. 192, 282 S.E.2d 90 (1981).
